New Registration Greets Students

New styles of registration and convocation will begin the 1972-73 academic year when 21,675 students return to classes at UMass.

Undergraduate registration has been simplified through a new computerized pre-registration which allows students to choose their academic schedules and make adjustments during the summer. And Convocation will be three events in one, an informal outdoor gathering Tuesday, Sept. 12.

In past years, freshmen were invited to Freshman Convocation and Freshman Reception, and all students were invited to an Opening Convocation. This year, there'll be just Opening Convocation.

Registration for undergraduates will be on two days, and students who have made all schedule adjustments and paid their bills by then will have two extra days of vacation. They will not have to show up Sept. 5 to make adjustments and payments, but Sept. 7 just to pick up their final schedules.

Graduate students will register Sept. 6.

A freshmen class of 3,765 will bring this year's undergraduate total to 17,000. There will be approximately 3,900 graduate students and 660 two-year Stockbridge School students.

Special programs that extend the resources of the University far beyond the classroom are continuing or expanding this year. The Division of Continuing Education will offer the greatest number of academic extension courses to date this September. More than 114 night classes; and 50 special courses will be taught. For the first time, regular UMass day classes will be open to Continuing Education students on a space available basis.

The University Without Walls (UWW), an alternative program of learning, has been give a three-year mandate to continue, and to grow from its present 50 students to 200 during the next three years, beginning this fall. One of the major goals of UWW is to provide off-campus learning opportunities for students who would best benefit from individualized programs including traditional courses, independent study, supervised field experience, and practicum work. University Without Walls was begun at UMass in 1971 by grants from the Ford Foundation and the Office of Education through the Union for Experimenting Colleges and Universities.

A first this year for CCEBS, the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students, is the addition of a Hispanic component with the admission of 53 freshmen from the state's Spanish-American community. They are part of a CCEBS freshman class of 152, which brings the campus CCEBS total to some 545 this year.

A third graduate program in nursing has been added by the UMass School of Nursing. Beginning this fall, students may study community health nursing for a master of science degree. Other graduate nursing programs are in medical-surgical-nursing and psychiatric-mental health nursing.

Through the community health clinical major, nurses will study nursing as it applies to families and communities. They will be exposed to evolving patterns in the delivery of health services and the changing functions and roles of community health nursing. Administration, teaching, or areas of specialization within community health nursing may be selected; and some students may combine aspects of medical-surgical or psychiatric-mental health with community health studies. Course options will be available through the Graduate Program in the Department of Public Health on the UMass campus.

University Year for Action, which assigns students off campus to work in social action programs, is training a new group of 65 students. During the coming academic year they will work in social, health and community agencies from Leominister to North Adams, assigned to hospitals, jails, community centers, urban tutoring programs, legal aid agencies and other projects.

Program ABLE, which helps qualified minority students earn master of business administration degrees, has been expanded this year by a $175,000 federal grant. The grant--from the Office of Minority Business Enterprises, Department of Commerce--means four other universities will join the University of Massachusetts-Amherst in granting fellowships to minority students. UMass began the program in 1969 and in May formed a consortium with Atlanta University, Howard University, New York University, and Syracuse University to increase the availability of the graduate program. Dr. Lawrence A. Johnson, founder of Program ABLE, is consortium executive director.

The BDIC program, begun two years ago as an experiment, is a permanent major studies program this year. Through the Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration, undergraduates have flexibility to design their own majors as alternatives to standard ones. The first year, 60 students

Howland Advises Students On Voting And More

(The following information was gathered by Richard Howland, attorney to the UMass students. It brings up to date information on the rights and responsibilities of citizenship in Amherst.)

VOTING

In Massachusetts every person who is eighteen years of age or older on the next voting day and who resides in a city or town may register to vote and run for office in that city or town (M. Gen. Laws c. 51 Sec. 1). Married persons need not be registered in the same place. There is no longer a durational requirement for voting so that persons wishing to register to vote may do so as soon as they have a lawful residence in the town. Anyone who has a residence in the town is eligible which includes students with on-campus or off-campus residences. Registration is closed during the period thirty days before an election for that election so that while a person may legally register at any time, they must register at least thirty-days before a pending election in order to vote in it. (For the November 7 presidential election voters must register by October 7.)

In order to register to vote, eligible persons should go to the Town Clerk's Office in the Town Hall or to any special registration session held in the town. They should bring proof of their residence such as a lease, rent payment receipt (check) or a letter from the school or college they attend, or any other reasonable proof together with a birth certificate or other proof of age. A form should be completed giving certain information as to addresses in the last year, occupation, name, previous voter registration and party of registration (if any).

Registration to vote in Amherst will result in removal from registration rolls in the previous place of registration. In most cases the change from one place to another will have very little impact on any established rights. However, persons who have unique privileges such as town-sponsored scholarships or public assistance grants from other states or localities are well-advised to inquire about the impact of a change in place of registration on those privileges before registering in Amherst. Also attempting to vote in more than one place may result in loss of the rights of citizenship and even criminal charges.

Persons who have registered before should consult the voter registration lists or the Town Clerk to make certain that they are still registered. If they have been removed from the list, it is a simple matter to register again.

INCOME TAX

Massachusetts has two income tax forms for state use. A person moving into Massachusetts may file using either the resident or non-resident tax form during the year of split residence. A tax consultant can advise which to choose in a proper case. All others must file a resident income tax return and pay taxes to Massachusetts. Massachusetts income tax is regularly withheld for persons earning income in the state. Persons registered to vote in Amherst should file returns from their Amherst address on a Resident Form.

MOTOR VEHICLE REGISTRATION/ LICENSE/INSURANCE

Persons moving to Massachusetts from other states are required to register cars in Massachusetts and obtain Massachusetts drivers' licenses. As a rule of thumb an owner should register an out-of-state car within thirty days of moving to Amherst. In any event any car owner, whether registered in Massachusetts or not, is required to carry insurance equal to Massachusetts compulsory insurance if they are regularly operating the car in Commonwealth. Most insurance agents will see to the registration details for a reasonable fee. As of September 1, Massachusetts will require Certificates of Title on new cars and cars registered from out-of-state where "title" laws now are in effect. Registration will also subject the owner to Massachusetts motor vehicle excise taxes. Drivers' licenses require a written exam and must be obtained through the Registry of Motor Vehicles in person. Failure to comply with the motor vehicles laws, particulary with regard to insurance, may result in heavy fines and the loss of operating privileges.

STREET LIST

Persons residing in Massachusetts are annually "audited" on the first of the year in a Street List. Persons who are registered to vote in Amherst must insure that they are included in the annual street list to avoid re-registering. The information gathered is used for various official purposes such as jury lists and some apportionment matters.

TOWN MEETING AND COMMITTEES

Amherst is governed by a "Representative Town Meeting" at which only elected representatives may vote although every registered voter has a right to speak and attend. To find out about becoming a representative or serving on any of many committees which service the day to day functions of town business, consult the Town Clerk, Town Manager, or the League of Women Voters all of whom can be helpful.

PARTY REGISTRATION

You are not required to register as a member of any particular party and may be an "independent". If you vote as an independent in any primary, however, your enrolled to study such things as East Asia journalism, folklore, and medical illustration. Enrollment went up to 134 last year, and will increase again to about 200 this coming year.

Among other new academic developments at UMass is a new undergraduate major in natural resource studies, a Ph. D. program in computer and information science, and the elevation of two programs to department status--classics and comparative literature. The chemical engineering department is introducing a new program that enables its bachelor of science degree candidates to specialize in several areas, including environmental engineering, bioengineering, business administration and food science engineering.

Three major academic buildings will be occupied during the coming year and work will continue through the year on a number of other building projects. the 28-story University Library is being equipped and furnished this fall. The collections will be moved into the new building from Goodell Library during the December-January intersession.

Ground was broken for the building in April of 1969; of the $16.8 million cost, over $2.43 million came from federal grants. Its ultimate capacity is 2-1/2 million volumes. Stack and study floors served by high-speed elevators are in the 300-foot tower; the main desk, reference department, card catalogue and other facilities are beneath a terrace.

Another academic building to be occupied this year is Tobin Hall, a six-story classroom, laboratory and office building for the psychology department. The department is scheduled to move early in the fall. The building is named for Maurice Tobin, a Massachusetts governor and U.S. Secretary of Labor in the Truman Administration. The building was designed by Colletti Brothers of Cambridge, constructed by Fontaine Brothers of Springfield and cost $6.5 million.

The third building to be occupied is the Graduate Research Center. The Graduate School, physical science library, Research Computing Center and computer and information science department have already occupied the low-rise portion of the $18.8 million building. The 17-story chemistry tower will be occupied this year. It will provide laboratory space for the departments of chemistry and biochemistry and the Polymer Research Center.

Construction began this summer on the second phase of the Graduate Research Center project. Phase II is two more towers, each 16 stories high. They will contain classroom and office areas for the mathematics department and laboratory space for the physics department. Scheduled construction time is 2-1/2 years.

Work on the Fine Arts Center will continue through the year, with completion scheduled for fall of 1973. The $15.3 million structure will house fine arts departments and include concert halls, theatres and galleries. Construction will continue on a new power plant for the Amherst campus, being built east of the main campus on the Tillson Farm property with access to a siding of the Central Vermont Railway for fuel delivery. Its primary fuel will be oil and its secondary fuel natural gas. Scheduled for completion in the winter of 1973, it will replace the coal burning plant now located on campus.

Other construction projects at the Amherst campus include an addition to the University Infirmary to provide more outpatient space; four new greenhouses for the botany department; and four modular buildings to supplement academic classroom and office space.

SGA Helps Students Control Own Lives

By STEVE TRIPOLI

Every student at UMass is a member of the Student Government Association, and as such should become acquainted with the bodies that represent them. These bodies are the Student Senate, the various Area Governments, the General Court, the Student Union Governing (SUG) Board, and the various Recognized Student Organizations, known as RSO groups. A brief description of each will be given here so that you, the student, will know how to use the government that has been set up for you.

The Student Senate is the chief legislative student body. It meets every Wednesday night in the Campus Center, where it passes all types of legislation geared to making things a little better around here. It has an operating budget of approximately $625,000 which is distributed to various RSO groups, such as this newspaper.

The Area Governments are bodies set up on each area of the campus (Southwest, Central, Sylvan, Orchard Hill, and the Quad) which try to cater to the specific needs of their area and bring about needed improvements. These bodies meet in each dorm in the form of House Councils, and the House Councils are held together by the officers of the government in that area.

The purpose of the General Court is to resolve conflicts between Students which can be resolved in no other way. It also serves to enforce the "Student Code of Conduct" and other policies adopted by students. The General Court is the highest student court. There are three lower courts.

The SUG Board is a body whose job is to govern the Student Union-Campus Center complex. It has hiring firing power over the employees of the complex and allots space to students and other groups who desire use of the facility.

The RSO groups are organizations supported by the Student Activities tax which every student pays. They are groups run by and for the students, and include the various clubs and services such as the student radio and television stations and this newspaper.

The goal of these organizations is simply that students should be able to control their own lives, in the dorms and in the classrooms. They are here to try to bring about change where it is needed. They are here for YOU. They are nothing without your support. So use them--participate in your government. Run for the Senate or an Area Government post. Without student cooperation, the Student Government Association will fall apart, and the whole University, especially you, the student, will be the loser.

Activities Office Staff Assists Student Programs

By THE STUDENT ACTIVITIES OFFICE STAFF

The Student Activities Office in the Campus Center can be the focal point for student social, social action, community action, governmental, cultural and educational enrichment activities, in addition to serving as the headquarters for Recognized Student Organizations (RSO) and the Program staff.

It provides resource material and counsel on program planning, organization work and leadership training, entertainment selection and procurement, service and aid projects for campus and community, special interest activities and recreation, as well as counsel on budgeting, purchasing, contracting and other business procedures.

The Student Activities Office also provides a banking, bookkeeping and auditing service for student organizations to help them attain their goals.

Participation in extracurricular activities offers opportunities to further the broader objectives of a college experience. The knowledge, skill, and judgement developed in the classroom can be tested and refined through use in many organizational settings. More than fifty professional organizations exist on campus as a means of extending the classroom interest through closer contact with members of the faculty and representatives of the professions.

Student government offers a forum for debate on matters of importance to the entire University community. There are several student publications as well as a student FM radio station. Totally there are approximately 400 student organizations ranging in interest from political, religious and cultural, to social, professional, and recreations. Lists of the organizations and names of many of their officers are available.

The Student Activities Staff is available for assistance. The following staff members are available in the Student Activities Office, first level of the Campus Center (at the opposite end of that concourse from the escalators), 545-2351: Jim Riley, Program Advisor; Jill Cochrane, Program Advisor; Bud Demers, Supervisor of RSO Accounts; Larry Popple, RSO Accountant; Sheila McRevey, Assistant Coordinator of Student Activities and Jerry Scanlon, Assistant Dean of Students (Student Activities/Campus Center).

If you would like to work on your activities during the evening and weekends, the Student Activities Area is open according to the following schedule:

Mike Best Reappointed Rottenberg Steps Down

Michael Best, associate professor of economics, has been reappointed for a three-year term by Dr. Robert L. Gluckstern, Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs. The decision culminates a two-year controversy over Best.

In 1970 the Economics Department voted not to extend Best's contract officially because of non-publication and rumorly because of a differing philosophy within the department. Student clamoring caused a reconsideration of the vote and won Best a year's extension.

This year the Department of Economics once again decided to vote for non-reappointment for Best. And once again student concern for a competent teacher and fellow colleagues of Best helped fight that action until Gluckstern's decision became necessary. Gluckstern stated, "that while both sides of the issue were equally weighed and there were good arguments for both sides of the controversy, Best's excellent ability as a teacher and his ability to interact well with students were the deciding factors.

Shortly after the decision had been reached, Dr. Simon Rottenberg, head of the Department of Economics, handed in his resignation. According to Gluckstern, Rotterberg's resignation has been accepted and he will be remaining at the University as a professor in the Economics Department.

Undergraduates Assist Freshman English Courses

Her mind buzzing with a dream, the UMass college sophomore knocked on the provost's door and said, "Hi, I'd like to teach freshman English."

And so, as the fairy tales say, "The dream was fulfilled."

Provost Oswald Tippo, who later became UMass chancellor for one year, sent sophomore Susan Bacon to the proper faculty channel. Three years later, the sophomore having extended her college career to five years and graduated, her dream program has taken in other undergraduates who earn independent study credit for being unpaid teaching assistants in freshman rhetoric courses. Last spring semester, 13 undergraduates were assistants, compared to four who began the program in 1969.

Prof. Walker Gibson, who organized the program at the request of Susan and several fellow students, arranged to have graduate student teaching assistants and regular faculty members work with the undergraduate teaching assistants, one-to-one. In some cases the pairs have developed team-teaching techniques; in others, the undergraduate has less responsibility. Each arrangement is unique. Prof. Gibson calls the program "remarkably successful". And reports by the undergraduate assistants and their faculty supervisors bear this out.

Assisted Five Courses

Bacon has assisted with five UMass courses since she began the program, and now prepares to teach ninth grade English in New Jersey.

Undergraduate Diane Palter, who was talent-scouted by Bacon, taught last semester with a graduate student and is teaching this summer with a faculty member, C.K. Smith of the English department. Palter and Smith teach on alternate days, and try to help the students relate their courses to each other–to make for example, the words used in calculus and chemistry and sociology more meaningful.

In her semester-end report last spring, Palter summed up what she had given and learned from her initial teaching experience. "I found that in my position as a student-teacher, I was able to understand the students' problems as well as the teacher's. My view of most situations was a bird's-eye view. I could peer down on the classroom and judge objectively. It was helpful to be able to closely study a teacher's methods. I have made many mental notes on what to do and not to do in a classroom."

Third View Provided

A faculty member, writing his summary of a semester with a different undergraduate assistant, said the student-teacher provided "a third point of view, a special sort of energy and a kind of freedom that is really invaluable." A second faculty member's report said his assistant brought to the classroom "a change from my own cold and often arrogant objectivity." He added, "The students found her sympathetic and sensitive, and after an initial timidity, responded to her quite well. Although she and I had our differences, we performed demonstrably well together in the classroom, which ultimately can't help but benefit our students."

And an undergraduate explained some of the problems he anticipated and how these were resolved. "I came into the experience with two basic doubts which centered around my ability to 'teach' a course in rhetoric. Although I had taken all the English courses an English major usually takes, I feared that I didn't know enough about poetry, short stories, and plays to teach them to other college students; and I had just come from 16 weeks of teaching seventh and eighth graders and wondered if I could handle the transition to teaching freshman.

Preparation Help

"Our preparations for classes made me feel more comfortable with the material, and I also gained some confidence and realized that I was not as unfamiliar with or ignorant of the works as I had first supposed. It wasn't hard to change teaching techniques because the whole atmosphere of our rhetoric class was so incredibly different from junior high school English."

The two-hour stereo chamber concerts are heard Mondays at 9:30 p.m. and feature a diversified music fare. Area professionals and artists from New York City perform works from the Baroque period to present-day jazz. The concerts, which are presented Saturdays through August at the Federated Church, Charlemont, stress informality. Host and commentator for the Mohawk Trail Concert series is Vincent Brann of the UMass Theatre.

Fine Arts Council Announces Schedule

Celebrity Series

A visit by the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy will be the highlight of the 1972-73 Celebrity Series which includes five major concerts under the auspices of the University's Fine Arts Council.

The celebrated Eugene Ormandy will conduct the Philadelphia Orchestra in a single concert in Curry Hicks Cage on Thursday evening, October 19. This visit marks the Orchestra's debut at the University and Mr. Ormandy's first visit here in spite of the fact that he has been Music Director and Conductor of this distinguished ensemble for an unprecedented thirty-six years! The program for this concert will include Beethoven's Leonore Overture No. 2; Symphony No. 3 ("Pastoral") by Ralph Vaughan Williams in observance of the 100th birthday of the great English composer and Symphony No. 4 in F by Tchaikovsky. This program will demonstrate the superb qualities of the orchestra as well as its noted conductor.

On November 9 and 10 the first of three Young Artist Showcase concerts will appear at the University. Twenty year old Daniel Adni will offer two different piano recitals. Mr. Adni was discovered by Yehudi Menuhin in his native Israel in 1968. Under the guidance of the great violinist, Mr. Adni furthered his studies at the Royal College of Music in London and at the Paris Conservatory making his Wigmore Hall debut on his nineteenth birthday. London reviewers were wild in their praise of this young artist and Mr. Adni was given the rare opportunity to solo with The New Philharmonia Orchestra at Royal Festival Hall under the revered Otto Klemperer last season. Since then, Adni has appeared with many other major English orchestras and as a recitalist and will make his American debut at these concerts.

Eugene Ormandy conducts the Philadelphia Orchestra.

The second Young Artist Showcase concerts will be the visit by the Young California-born cellist, Christine Walevska in February. Miss Walevska has studied with Gregor Piatigorsky. She has concertized extensively throughout Europe and South America and was recently signed to a coveted Hurok and Philips Record contract. Cellists including Piatigorsky and Sviatislav Richter feel that she is on the threshhold of a brilliant concert career.

The Goldovsky Grand Opera Theatre returns to the University for performances of Benjamin Britten's "Albert Herring" in March. The performances will be fully-staged and sung in English.

The Celebrity Series closes in April with two concerts by The Boston Philharmonia Orchestra. The Orchestra has appeared at the University twice previously under the direction of Michael Tilson Thomas and Leon Kirchner respectively and has a large local following. For their appearances during the 1972-73 season, the Boston Philharmonia will be under the direction of the exciting, young conductor, John Nelson. Joining Mr. Nelson and the Orchestra will be the University Chorale and soloists in a major choral work. John Nelson made a great impression on New York critics and audiences last season due to his performance of Berlioz' "Les Troyens". Harold Schonberg writing in the New York Times said that Mr. Nelson's performance was the best musical event of that season along with George Solti's performances with The Chicago Symphony Orchestra, a high tribute to a very young and relatively unknown conductor.

Season subscriptions to the Fine Arts Council's Celebrity Series (five events) are priced at $7.50 for UMass undergraduates and $15.00 to others and represents a saving of 20% over the cost of single tickets. All concerts will be given on two consecutive evenings in Bowker Auditorium with the exception of the Philadelphia Orchestra. For full program and ticket information on the Celebrity Series as well as other events under the auspices of the Fine Arts Council please send a stamped, self-addressed #10 envelope to the UMass Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall, Amherst, Massachusetts 01002, or telephone (413) 545-2002.

Chamber Music Series To Open

Chamber Music concerts will play a key part in the 1972/73 Fine Arts Council Series. Terry Charles Schwarz, Council manager announces that five prominent ensembles will visit the University during the ensuing season for single concerts in Bowker Auditorium.

Opening the 1972/73 series will be the Beaux Arts Trio composed of Isadore Cohen, violin; Bernard Greenhouse, cello and Menachem Pressler, piano. The Trio is unquestionably the leading ensemble of its kind in the world today and their concert on Wednesday evening, October 4 marks their University debut.

In November the famed Fine Arts Quartet, now in-residence at the Milwaukee campus of the University of Wisconsin will make its University debut. Joining the quartet will be the gifted, American pianist, Frank Glazer in a program which features the Quintet for Piano and Strings, Opus 34 by Brahms.

The Cleveland String Quartet appears as part of the Fine Arts Council's Young Artist Showcase concerts next season. This ensemble, just three seasons old has distinguished itself in concerts in many metropolitan areas and succeeded the Budapest String Quartet as quartet-in-residence at the State University of New York at Buffalo. In recognition of the quality the Cleveland Quartet has established for itself, RCA Victor has recently signed the ensemble to a recording contract. Two internationally-famous ensembles appear at the UMass for the two concluding events. The Quartetto Italiano, long-time favorite of audiences throughout the world will appear in April and the 1972/73 Chamber Music Series closes in May by the seventh consecutive appearance at the University of the Juilliard String Quartet.

Season subscriptions to the Chamber Music Series (five events) are priced at $6.00 for UMass undergraduates and $12.00 to others and represents a saving of 20% over the cost of single tickets. Mental Health Service Available

By Dr. Dean Allen

During your stay at the University, you may run into personal problems for which you want or need some help. You may find yourself feeling anxious, depressed, confused, or under a lot of psychological pressure. Although most of you can handle the problems you encounter, or can get help from friends, parents, faculty members, clergymen, etc., there are others who feel the need for some additional measure of professional mental health assistance.

As part of your health fee, you are entitled to consult with any of the 12 members of the Mental Health Service. It is easy to make an appointment either by visiting the office at 303 Machmer Hall or by telephoning 5-2337. Members of the staff are also on-call through the Infirmary for emergencies outside of regular weekday working hours.

Since the environment plays a part in your mental health, staff members are also involved in consultation and coordination with student groups and other campus personnel. The emphasis in this case is not so much on individual problems but on efforts to make the University experience as conducive to healthy growth as possible. Members of the Mental Health staff work jointly with such groups as Room to Move, Health Education, CASIAC, the clergy, and residence hall staffs.

All contacts between you and the Mental Health Service are strictly confidential. No information is released to the University administration, faculty members, parents or outside agencies (such as graduate schools, Peace Corps, draft boards, etc.) without your explicit authorization in advance, except when in the opinion of the staff member there is a serious immediate threat to your life or welfare, to other students, or to the community at large.

Stage/West Announces Season

The play selection for the 72-73 season at Stage/West has been announced by the Co-Producers, Stephen E. Hays and John Ulmer. The following list of plays was presented to the Executive Committee of the Board of Directors of the Springfield Theatre Arts Association at their monthly meeting Wednesday afternoon, and approved for release.

Hays and Ulmer stated at yesterday's meeting that "this highly diversified season will entertain and stimulate the largest Connecticut Valley audience of this professional theatre's six year history".

Stage/West opens its doors for its 6th season on November 9 with "Hedda Gabler". The classic drama by Henrik Ibsen, which probes the feminine mystique, will run through December 2. The Holiday offering (Dec. 7-Dec. 31) will be "Ten Little Indians", Agatha Christie's finest murder mystery.

The third selection on the subscription series (Jan 18-Feb. 10) will be filled by a contemporary American drama. Although the title has not been confirmed, those under consideration are Paul Zindel's Pulitzer Prize winning "The Effect of Gamma Rays on Man-In-The-Moon Marigolds", and a new play by James Prideaux.

"The Importance of Being Earnest" (Feb. 15-March 10), Oscar Wilde's classic comedy of manners, will be followed by Harold Pinter's latest success, "Old Times" (March 15-April 6).

Stage/West will close its season with the Broadway comedy hit "Butterflies Are Free" by Leonard Gershe (April 12-May 6).

To continue its policy of presenting a new play each season, Stage/West will produce a world premiere of a new drama by John Ford Noonan, author of "The Day Boston Won the Pennant" and "Old People". This extra event is offered in addition to the 6 play subscription series for a limited engagement from January 4 to January 13.

Stage/West will be expanding its Heritage Series matinees for high school students to include all six regular productions with particular emphasis on "The Importance of Being Earnest".

On September 11 Stage/ West will launch its Fall Subscription Drive with the goal of doubling its subscriptions from the present level of 3000 to a total of 6000. Subscriptions to this 72-73 season series are now being taken at the Stage/West business office, 781-4470.

Program Council Seeks Aid

This fall the Movie Committee of the Program Council will present an expanded film schedule. There will be the regular popular features on Thursdays and Sundays, plus two new special interest series: a Director's Series, most exemplary films of best directors, and a series of alternating Science Fiction and Horror Films, and Erotic Arts Films. These added features are experimental.

Program Council will be showing three or four movies per week, so anyone interested in helping at any of the movies should sign up in the Program Council office (Campus Center, Rm. 101). Help would be appreciated along with any suggestions, criticisms.

UMass Health Center Expands Services

UNIVERSITY HEALTH CENTER

If you really don't feel well, don't wait until you have a temperature of 104° before coming to the Health Center. It is much easier on you and the physician, if an illness is treated early. Remember that all Health Services records are confidential and will not be released without your authorization.

THE OUT-PATIENT DEPARTMENT

Appointments can be made during regular clinic hours with any physician you prefer by calling 545-0057. If you can't get an appointment when you need it, come to the Walk-In Clinic. The drawbacks of the Walk-In Clinic are (1) often a long wait before seeing the nurse or physician and (2) you can't choose your physician. You may find the phone call for an appointment worth it.

Emergency treatment is available 24 hours a day. A nurse is always on duty and a physician is always on call. If the clinic isn't open, just ring the emergency doorbell.

A nurse practitioner is a specially trained registered nurse under the supervision of a physician. If you have a minor or routine problem, see the nurse practitioner. You'll get the same treatment and probably won't have to wait so long.

THE IN-PATIENT DEPARTMENT

The Health Center also provides bed care for students with serious illnesses. The 65 bed In-patient Department is located on the third floor of the Health Center. If you should become ill, keep in mind that you are less likely to fall behind in classwork if you stay on campus where books and class notes are available.

A bonus–you get to see your friends if you stay here. The visiting hours are listed in the front of this brochure. You can have only one student visitor at a time but books and messages can be left at the desk in the waiting room. Your family or members of the faculty are free to visit you at any reasonable hour.

HEALTH EDUCATION DIVISION - UNIVERSITY HEALTH SERVICES

All of the Health Services staff welcome questions and comments from students. In addition, the Health Education Division provides a broad range of programs and activities to help you keep yourself in top physical and emotional condition. The main concern of the Division is the development of sound, responsible attitudes and behavior in students as individuals and as a group. If your dorm wants a program in human sexuality, drugs, mental health, or just about any other health-related topic, contact this office. They also have a large supply of pamphlets and printed material on many health topics for student use (V.D., smoking, colds, mono, just to name a few). Contraception information, counseling, and problem pregnancy referrals are available through this office. The Division also handles the extensive Health Services evaluation program each year. Let them know if you have a complaint. The Student Advisory Board and Interview Panel mentioned earlier are co-ordinated through this office. Beyond this, there are two programs which come out of Health Education that you might be especially interested in.

The Health Education Division sponsors the Peer Sex Education Program on campus. It's based on the premise that students can often be more empathetic and effective in helping other students than professionals. The PSE counselor lives in the dorm he/she serves, is responsible for establishing a sex education program in the dorm and also provides counseling, information and referrals dealing with the various aspects of human sexuality when needed.

Another major concern on campus is drug use and abuse. Room To Move, a student-run, non-establishment drug drop-in center helps us deal with any problems we might have. It came about as a result of student concern about helping each other in an honest, caring manner. The staff deals mainly with drug-related problems but feel free to just stop in and talk about whatever is on your mind. No records are kept–confidentiality is guaranteed. Room to Move is located on the bottom floor of the Student Union next to the Hatch and is open 24 hours. Their phone number is 545-0400. If you have any questions about the Health Education Division or its programs, please call 545-2492.

MENTAL HEALTH DIVISION

"Shrinks! You've got to be really sick to go see one of them." That simply isn't true. There are many reasons why students go to Mental Health and sickness is the least of them. Sometimes it's for a specific problem, other times it's simply for someone to talk to. Someone who, because of his training, can possibly help you see things in a slightly different light.

The Mental Health Staff is composed of psychiatrists, psychologists, and social workers. Besides handling group therapy and one-to-one consultation, the staff members make an effort to get out into the community through dorm talks, work with Room to Move and Peer Sex Education, consultation at summer orientation, attendance at various administrative meetings, participation in the Student Advisory Board, and a weekly Collegian column dealing with common student problems. It's of the utmost importance to note that Mental Health records, like all Health Services records, are strictly confidential. They cannot be released to anyone without the authorization of the student.

The Mental Health Division also has a training program for graduate students in clinical psychology and full-time internships for students from the University and other colleges. They are looking forward to the opening of the Medical School when Mental Health can start a training program for psychiatric residents.

If you'd like to talk with someone in Mental Health, just call 5-2337 for an appointment. The Division is located on the third floor of Machmer. Check in with the receptionist in room 303.

ENVIRONMENTAL HEALTH AND SAFETY DIVISION

The main focus of this division is prevention. The staff tries to provide a safe, healthful environment for all who work and play at the University. They are responsible for such things as kitchenette and dining commons inspections, radioactive material control, campus injury prevention, and fire extinguisher re-fills and inspections. The four areas of specialization are General Safety, Fire Prevention, Radiation Protection and Environmental Health.

The staff of the Division provides technical and administrative assistance and consultation to those individuals and departments that need help in minimizing accidents and damage on campus. If your dorm, fraternity, or sorority has problems in any of the above areas, call Environmental Health and Safety at 545-2682.

We hope this will be of help to you during the year. Remember, this is your Health Services, here to serve you and meet your needs. Have a good year and stay healthy.

Health Services Advisory Board Involves Students As Consumers

The University Health Services exists to serve students and other members of the university community. Students pay for personal health services through their health fee and should have a say in the kind of care and types of services they receive. Therefore, a viable mechanism for consumer involvement is a high priority.

The Health Services Advisory Board has emerged as an organization for consumer involvement. Early in its development, the meetings covered a wide variety of topics for projects. These include the improvement of communication between the Health Services and the students through a regular column in the Collegian and radio interviews, continuing an evaluation program of the Health Services, examining the Health Education role of the residence hall counselor, and reviewing confidentiality policies. All of these are examples of the activities of the Advisory Board for the past year. In addition, devising an expanded campus transportation service to the Infirmary; reviewing and re-writing the student supplemental health insurance policy; and interviewing prospective candidates for Health Services staff positions. One of the most important functions of the Advisory Board concerns budgetary procedures. By reviewing each budgetary item and considering priorities for services, student input is an important factor in determining the health fee.

One of the problems we are facing is the definition of the direction the group will take; whether it will be project-oriented (as the development of an improved health brochure) or policy and decision-making oriented (as advising on methods of payment for existing and new programs). Each level of participation requires a different kind of commitment to work together as a group.

We have maintained a basic philosophy of consumer participation and a long history of consumer involvement. It is sometimes difficult to enlist the aid of students in guiding a health program, especially when the program, despite limitations, is basically satisfactory. It is much easier to arouse student reaction to abuses and inadequacies than it is to channel their creative interest to improve or expand programs.

If more people would become involved in setting goals and participating in the work of "responsible consumerism," the Student Advisory Board will continue to be a vital integral part of the Health Services. If you are interested, call 545-2492.

Construction Hinders Infirmary Parking

Construction of the new addition at the University Health Center has made it necessary to install a traffic control booth on the lower loop of Infirmary Road to ensure patient parking. In general, the parking situation around the Health Center, because of the impact of construction on this area, will be critical.

To ensure adequate patient parking in this area and to be certain that the Infirmary loop road is maintained open at all times for access by emergency and service vehicles as well as for the patients using the services, the Security Department is rigidly enforcing those regulations which apply to this area. However, it is recognized that only through the cooperation of all concerned, can we maintain adequate access to the Health Center for the University community.

State Conventions Seem Reformless

By WILLIAM MANBURG

(On Tuesday, November 7, the voters of Massachusetts and the nation will choose a President of the United States. Presidential politics, always interesting and intriguing often obscures the election of men and women to other important positions.

Much has been said and written about the reforms initiated by the Democrats at their National convention (concerning delegate selection), and much has been said concerning the lack of reform by the Republicans. In 1972, Massachusetts voters will select a U.S. Senator, but few people are aware of the process of nominating candidates, and what actually goes on at a state convention. I observed both the Democratic and Republican state conventions this past summer, and my report follows.)

(Chestnut Hill)—

On Saturday, June 10, Massachusetts Democrats met on the Boston College campus to choose a candidate to oppose incumbent U.S. Senator Edward Brooke, and vote on a party platform. Fifteen hours and six ballots later they had succeeded.

McHugh Forum, the hockey arena of the Boston College Eagles was the site of the Massachusetts State Democratic Convention. Slated to begin at 11:00 A.M. the activity and politicing began much earlier. By 9:30 the Senatorial candidates had their convention headquarters set up adjacent to the hockey arena, and each candidate and their supporters were meeting early-arriving delegates and distributing printed material about the senatorial hopefuls.

George Sommaripa, self-styled intellectual and academian was out by his campaign van (a late 50's Chevy) early, meeting and talking with delegates.

John Droney, district attorney from Middlesex County, was campaigning by his "Cortez" like headquarters, smiling and shaking hands with potential supporters, sporting a white buttoned-down shirt, conservative blue blazer, and closely cropped hair. Ribbons espousing Droney's candidacy were seen affixed to the lapels of many protruding chests, never to be hid by well-groomed, greying hair.

George Burke, district attorney of Norfolk County, a non-candidate candidate had a most impressive home-type trailer from where he was to direct his non-candidacy. To support his non-campaign there were "Burke" ribbons, "Burke" posters, and "Burke" background literature.

Gerald O'Leary, Boston City Councilman, the McGovern-type candidate, sported a camper van and a campaign aide to O'Leary was quoted to say "things look real good, yes, real good as of the moment". The moment was 10:30 A.M.

John Pierce Lynch, shouldn't he be a Republican, the Registrar of Deeds of Hampden County, was the Western Mass. hopeful.

The other candidates, minor and insignificant, prepared position papers, and the quality of that material was directly related to the insignificancy of their candidacy.

The gloom and eerieness of the weather certainly was not enlivened by the lackluster group of candidates. The rain had stopped, but the grounds were wet, and even when the sun began to appear through the trees surrounding the arena, few hearts seemed enlightened and few hopes raised for the activities of the day or the prospects in November.

The moment came, the moment the state and nation had long been waiting, the convening of the Massachusetts Democratic State Convention. After the rigamarole of choosing chairmen and secretaries and hearing the credentials report which passed with no problems, the highpoint of the day's proceedings was reached. It was time for the keynote address by Senate President Kevin Harrington. Amid a noise level reminiscent of a Boston Bruins hockey game, the Senate President rambled on. The keynote can be simply summarized as "sounds familar. That speech must have been used 100 times before." In a bit of irony and understatement, a well-known TV newsman was heard saying "can't you feel that electricity in the air."

The presentation of the platform was the next order of business. It was decided by the party leaders that there would be no debate on any amendments to the platform and a yea and nay voice would be used for the voting procedure unless a roll call vote was called for.

The platform consisting of over 50 pages, was handed to the delegates for the first time that morning, which didn't "give delegates much time to consider the platform and propose amendments," as a state representative man pointed out.

Senator Brooke addresses Republican State Convention.

On and off the stage paraded the state's Democratic leaders. Household names such as Quinn, Buczko, Crane, Davoran, White, Umana, McIntyre made their appearances, but those that did not were far more noticeable. Missing were Kennedy, Hicks, Galbraith, and Chub Peabody, the Vice-Pres. candidate to name just a few who didn't consider this gathering important enough to attend.

As time drew near for the nominations of the candidates it became obvious that the leaderships' candidate was John Droney. Attorney General Quinn was to make the nominating speech himself, and Speaker Bartley's aides were seen scurrying about the arena seeking votes for Droney.

Rumor had it early that the Cambridge delegation sought to adjourn the convention on the grounds that there were no viable candidates, and a delegate from Newton wished to see the convention dismissed in order to allow the candidates to take their cases to the voters by means of a state primary. Few were willing to disagree with such rational logic, but the motions were ruled out of order by the chairman.

The nominating speeches were as boring as the previous proceedings. A well-known political analyst was heard saying "the convention got off to a slow start, and kept on losing momentum."

George Sommaripa nominated himself, and it can be said his proposals use swiss cheese logic, it's full of holes. The seconding speech was one of the highpoints of the day for unlike the other activities it was short and to the point. Spoken were the words, "I second the nomination."

Quinn nominated Droney as a man "who has never known defeat." Chances are that even with a supposed close association with the Kennedy's few voters will think of Droney when thinking of the famous family.

The Mayor of Northampton, the city that gave the nation Calvin Coolidge, nominated John Pierce Lynch, the Registrar of Deeds. Sighting a long list of deeds and accomplishments of his candidate, he closed with the phrase "it can be done," and pledging Lynch is the man who can do it.

George Burke, whose list of accomplishments and qualifications included playing basketball at the UMass with House Speaker Bartley, sought to jump to new heights by being elected U.S. Senator. From a source close to the candidate it was learned that in the true tradition and spirit of America, he wears red, white and blue underwear.

Gerald O'Leary, a purported supporter of Presidential aspirant Senator George McGovern, sought the support of the young delegates for his candidacy. He was seconded by an 18-year-old college student. The only thing wrong with such strategy was that there were very few young people among the 1287 delegates present at the beginning of the festivities. Wiser political strategy, I suspect, would have been to have some man 45 years old, sporting white shirt and tie, medium length hair with bushey sideburns, smoking a cigar or cigarette, standing 5 feet, 9-1/2 inches and weighing 190 pounds, do the nominating.

Surprising as it may seem, there were no floor demonstrations. Whether this was because of poor and unorganized campaigns, lack luster support from the delegates or the rules of the convention, it didn't really matter, and few people cared.

The balloting began, and it became obvious that a definite trend was developing. "Absent" was clearly leading and few doubted that such support would diminish as the balloting progressed, and that the open houses and cocktail parties were being well attended. The pressure on some delegates must have been overwhelming for some after sitting through the previous activities they decided to vote "uncommitted".

There were the typical challenges and it was understood that it was the Droney people doing the challenging. Division among the ranks of the Democrats was once again becoming obvious for Western Mass. was firmly for Lynch, the intellectual and liberal for O'Leary and the party regulars for Droney. Deals were offered, pressure applied but the convention stood at a deadlock. Finally on the second ballot, George Burke, the non-candidate candidate, addressed the convention. In the true spirit of Harold Stassen and other losers, he withdrew his candidacy and swung his support to Droney. Such action really wasn't necessary, for according to the convention rules, he would have been eliminated from the next ballot because he didn't have the minimum necessary votes to continue. Burke's widespread support had disappeared but he knew that he could still take his case to the people and enter the primaries.

The Democrats finally had a candidate ten hours and six ballots later. With coiffures stuffed with $200,000 and John J. Droney, the Democrats sought to defeat Edward Brooke. One can only sum up the day's proceedings by saying "never was there so much for so little."

(Boston)—

They say that an elephant never forgets, but judging from the proceedings at the Republican State Convention, the bearers of that symbol don't learn very quickly either.

For the Republicans that gathered to vote on a party platform and to nominate Senator Edward W. Brooke for re-election by acclamation on Saturday, June 24, in the War Memorial Auditorium in Boston, put on a show that qualifies as a sure cure for insomnia, a cure far superior than watching paint peel from a wall, counting all the sheep in Australia, or even a Massachusetts Democratic State Convention. Following the the Democratic debacle by two weeks, the Republicans had a chance to show the state, and the rarely enfranchised voters of the Commonwealth what the new politics are all about and why they should support the exciting politics of the Grand Old Party. But they, the State Committee, learned little from their foes' errors and proceeded to discover new ways of perpetuating utter complete boredom.

The convention was to start at 10:00 A.M., but before enough of the delegates were able to stagger into the convention hall following a night of drinking and partying, it was 10:25 when the call to order was finally sounded. Then, thanks to the wonders of modern communications, messages from the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare Eliot Richardson, and the President of the United States, Richard M. Nixon were read. Whatever happened to John Volpe?

Hugh Scott, the Senator from Pennsylvania was the keynote speaker. He sang praises for the President, and he referred to Ed Brooke as "the Senator from Massachusetts and that other fellow-what's his name?-is the other senator from this state."

Unlike the Democrats, all of the important Republican officeholders were present. Governor Sargent, whom the delegates received rather coolly, Lt. Governor Donald Dwight, former U.S. Senator Saltonstal were all present, along with the state senators and the state representatives. Jockeying for position for the important state convention in 1974 was taking place.

The convention auditorium was adorned with "Brooke-United States Senator" posters, with portraits of Nixon, Agnew, Brooke, and Sargent hanging from the rafters on the stage. Nixon and Agnew portraits were in color, Brooke was in black and white, and Sargent's was twice the size of all the others.

The color's on the stage were red and blue, for those are the colors of the U.S. flag.

The non-committal platform was finally accepted after a bizarre series of events. Support of President Nixon and Governor Sargent were paramount in the document, for ask any Republican and he will tell you that peace, economic prosperity, and the Republican Party go hand in hand.

The nominating, seconding, and voting for a U.S. Senatorial candidate was the next order of business. There was never any doubt who was going to win, the only question was whether the nomination would be by acclamation. The liberal Republicans were weary of possible sabotage by the conservatives, and a devisive floor battle. Nothing happened, the fears proved non-existent.

Senator Brooke was nominated, and after the final seconding speech a wild demonstration took place. This planned, spontaneous event consisted of two bands and hundreds of handmade signs. Not only did the delegates, most of whom wished they could see 40 again, with hats, buttons, and ribbons enter into the demonstration, but several hundred young people who took part in youth conference preceding the convention marched with great enthusiasm down the aisles of the convention floor displaying their complete and utter joy with the nomination of Ed Brooke.

Senator Brooke citing President Nixon's accomplishments in the area of foreign affairs (China and Russia), said in his acceptance speech that he could support no one else for the presidency of the United States.

So ended the Massachusetts Republican Convention.

Courses Offered In Music, More

Music

Four music courses are included in this fall's evening classes in the UMass Division of Continuing Education. Taught by members of the UMass music department faculty, the music courses display a concern for special interest areas.

A non-technical course designed to develop a basic understanding and love for music is offered for those who possess little or no previous musical training. Entitled "Introduction to Music", the Wednesday evening instructional program will be taught by Asst. Prof. Walter Chesnut.

"Elementary to Intermediate Course in Piano Tuning and Technology" is offered for beginners and those with limited previous experience, under the direction of William Harry. This class is also scheduled for Wednesday evenings.

"Seminar in Woodwind Instrument Pedagogy", a course designed for school instrumental music teachers, will be taught by Asst. Prof. William Gaver Tuesday evenings. The curriculum will include an examination of advanced teaching principles and specialized problems in the playing of woodwind instruments at the elementary and secondary school levels.

The study, discussion, and performance of varied chamber music repertoire from duos through octets will comprise the fourth music offering entitled "Master Class in Chamber Music". Scheduled for Thursday evenings, this course will be conducted by Leopold Teraspulsky, cellist and artist-in-residence at UMass-Amherst.

A brochure and application form may be obtained from the Evening Division of Continuing Education, Room 517, Campus Center, UMass, Amherst 01002. Telephone (413) 545-0905. Classes begin the week of September 11.

Stenotype Course

The Division of Continuing Education at UMass in Amherst is now accepting reservations for a second beginners course in stenotype, or machine shorthand. Phase II of last year's beginners course will also be offered.

UMass is offering the courses in cooperation with the Continuing Education Program of the Amherst public school system. The first meeting of the beginners course will be held at the Amherst Regional Junior High School in Room C-37, Tuesday, Sept. 12 at 7 p.m. and will run until 9:30 p.m.

The courses will be taught by Paul E. Philbin, official court reporter at the Superior Court in Springfield, who has covered many major criminal trials in western Massachusetts in the past 20 years. This will be the only such course in Masschusetts taught by a full-time court reporter. Mr. Philbin also owns and operates a stenographic service in Springfield employing five full-time court reporters taught and trained by him.

Students should be able to type and will be accepted on a first-come, first-served basis. Cost of the course is $40 a month and students will also purchase a machine at a cost of $170.

Registration may be made at the Division of Continuing Education, 920 Campus Center on the Amherst campus of the University (545-2591). Payment of the first two months tuition is required to hold a place in the class.

The pre-registration deadline is Sept. 11; full information and application forms are available from Victor Buell, School of Business Administration, UMass, Amherst 01002.

Business Methods Taught

Seventy-six business executives and students from 11 foreign countries have spent part of the summer studying methods of American management at UMass.

The 42 business executives from 11 countries, and a second group of 34 business school students from France and Switzerland were enrolled for from four to six weeks in the UMass Junior Executive Training program (JET).

Through the UMass School of Business Administration they studied computer information systems, advanced marketing research, operations research and managerial accounting. Another part of the program was spending time with American host families.

An effort was made to provide the trainees with a clear understanding of the social, political, and economic climate within which American business firms operate.

It was the 10th JET summer for business executives, who came from Germany, France, Austria, Switzerland, Holland, Finland, Ceylon, Iran, Mexico, Peru, and Italy. The business students came from the Advanced School for Business and Administration (HWV) in Zurick, Switzerland, and the Ecole Superieure de Commerce de Paris (ESCP) in France.

Twelve UMass School of Business faculty members were the instructional staff for JET, which was coordinated by Bertil Liander, lecturer in marketing at the School of Business.

Hurts Rent-A-Gun

by Art Buchwald

WASHINGTON–The Senate passed a new gun-control bill this past summer, which some observers consider worse than no bill at all. Any serious attempt at handgun registration was gutted, and Senate gun-lovers even managed to repeal a 1968 gun law controlling the purchase of .2 rimfire ammunition.

After the Senate got finished with its work on the gun-control bill, I received a telephone call from my friend Bromley Hurts who told me he has a business proposition to discuss with me. I met him for lunch at a pistol range in Maryland.

"I think I've got a fantastic idea," he said. "I want to start a new business call 'Hurts Rent-A-Gun.' "

"What on earth for?" I asked.

"There are a lot of people in this country who only use a handgun once or twice a year, and they don't want to go to all the expense of buying one. So we'll rent them a gun for a day or two. By leasing a firearm from us, they won't have to tie up all their money."

"That makes sense," I admitted.

"Say a guy is away from home on a trip, and he doesn't want to carry his own gun with him. He can rent a gun from us and then return it when he's finished with his business."

"You could set up rent-a-gun counters at gas stations," I said excitedly.

"And we could have stores in town where someone could rent a gun to settle a bet," Hurts said.

"A lot of people would want to rent a gun for a domestic quarrel," I said.

"Right. Say a jealous husband suspects there is someone at home with his wife. He rents a pistol from us and tries to catch them in the act. If he discovers his wife is alone, he isn't out the $80 it would have cost him to buy a gun."

"Don't forget about kids who want to play Russian roulette. They could pool their allowances and rent a gun for a couple of hours," I said.

"Our market surveys indicate," Hurts said, "that there are also a lot of kids who claim their parents don't listen to them. If they could rent a gun, they feel they could arrive at an understanding with their folks in no time."

"There's no end to the business," I said. "How would you charge for Hurts Rent-A-Gun?"

"There would be hourly rates, day rates and weekly rates, plus 10 cents for each bullet fired. Our guns would be the latest models, and we would guarantee cleen barrels and the latest safety devices. If a gun manlfunctions through no fault of the user, we will give him another gun absolutely free."

"For many Americans it's a dream come true," I said.

"We've also made it possible for people to return the gun in another town. For example, if you rent the gun in Chicago and want to use it in Salt Lake City, you can drop it off there at no extra charge."

"Why didn't you start this before?"

"We wanted to see what happened with the gun-control legislation. We were pretty sure the Senate and the White House would not do anything about strong gun control, especially during an election year. But we didn't want to invest a lot of money until we were certain they would all chicken out."

"I'd like the franchisefor Washington's National Airport," I said.

"You've got it. It's a great location," Hurts said. "You'll make a fortune in hijackings alone."

Wrestling

From Glory To The Top

By JOHN BOCK

The 1971-1972 wrestling season wasn't exactly "The Days of Wine and Roses" for Redman mentor Homer Barr, but on the other hand a second place finish in the New England Intercollegiate Wrestling Association (NEIWA), an 11-6-1 season, and a team that highlighted some of the best wrestling talent in New England didn't leave him wringing his hands in despair.

The season opened in the echoing corridors of Payne Whitney Gymnasium on the Yale University Campus and ended in the slush and mud surrounding Central Connecticut State College's Kaiser Gym, site of the 1972 NEIWA Tournament. Sandwiched between were matches that saw Sheldon Goldberg amass a 38-3-4 record to put him on the books as the winningest wrestler in UMass history. Enroute to his third NEIWA title he was handed the third loss of his college career in the finals and missed going to the NCAA Championships.

Not far behind in the win-loss column was Carl Bambman who won his second NEIWA title at Heavyweight, finished the year 12-2-2 (8 of these pins), and finished in the Top Ten at the NCAA's. Carl returns to share the responsibilities of Co-Captain with Dave Amato.

Dave, a high school standout from Rhode Island where he was a repeat State and New England High School Champ, retained his second place finish in the NEIWA at 118 and had an excellent season. Known as the hardest worker on the team he is a sure bet to be one of the top lightweights in the Northeast, and a sure inspiration to the rest of the team.

A bright spot appeared in the form of Russ Chateauneuf, a freshman State and New England Schoolboy Champ from Lowell, who became the first freshman to ever win a Varsity Title in the NEIWA. Wrestling a host of able veterans in the tournament and throughout the season, Russ managed a season with only one loss and numerous wins and ties.

Rounding out the top spot for UMass in the Tourney was senior Bruce Buckbee who came in as the underdog to capture the NEIWA 190-pound title and then went on to the NCAA's to finish in the top fifteen.

A crop of talented freshmen aided UMass in taking the second place in the New Englands. Two Pennsylvanians, Mike McLaughlin and Chris Cadwallader placed fourth at 126 and 158 respectively. The rest of the freshmen breezed to an easy second place finish in the Freshman NEIWA race. Dick Muri at 126, and Steve Rome at 150 were crowned champs. Runnerups came from Don Bergeron at 134, Al Elmont at 142 and John Nickerson at 190.

The 1972-1973 season has already observed its most significant happening - the recognition of the New England University

Bleak Maine Broke UMass Baseball Season

By Bill Ballou

April in Maine is not the loveliest month of the year. The trees are still bare, the ground still brown and dead, the temperatures on the icy side.

Take the preceding picture of bleakness and add the air of frivolity that surrounded the sinking of the Titanic and you'll have a pretty good idea of the total disaster that was the UMass baseball team's two game road trip to the University of Maine in Orono.

For, looking back on a somewhat disappointing season, Maine was where the Redman back was broken.

UMass had taken the trip up to Maine as an undefeated team, with an overall record of 13-0, 6-0 in the Yankee Conference. The only serious challenge they appeared to have for the Yan Con championship and a bid for post-season play was Connecticut. Maine was a good team, and figured to give UMass a tough time, but the resulting two-game sweep was totally unexpected.

Enough is said by reciting the scores: 2-1 on April 28, 6-3 on April 29. They combined to drop the YanCon record to 6-2 and put the Redmen in a position where they could not afford to lose another conference game.

They only had four conference games left anyway, so the task was not impossible. The first two game set, against a good New Hampshire team, resulted in two UMass wins, two good wins, and renewed hope for the UMass cause. What it all came down to was a do-or-die home and home series against UConn on the 13th and 14th of May. The Redmen had to win both just to tie for the Conference title and force another playoff game with the Huskies. All UConn had to do was win one and they were in.

The first of the series was at home for UMass and the Red lost by a lopsided score to end it all. But in spite of that lopsided final score, that game was one of the all-time classics of college baseball, at least in the New England area. It went 20 incredible innings and had everything from a bloody fight in the stands to a flying tackle by a third base coach to prevent a runner from being a sure out at the plate.

Throughout most of the regulation nine innings, it appeared to be UMass' ball game. They led by two until the bottom of the eighth when UConn tied it at 2-2. Both teams survived some rather hairy spots until along about the 18th or so when Connecticut picked up a run to take a 3-2 lead. In the bottom of the inning the first two UMass batters were easy outs and it was apparently all over. One single, one triple and finally one out

Season Should Strengthen Wrestlers

Division Conference by the NCAA Wrestling Rules Committee. This group has granted an automatic qualification for all future NCAA Championship Tournaments to the winner in each weight class at the season end tourney. This break is essential to New England wrestling if it is to advance, because the heretofore combination of NCAA University and College Division schools for a tournament was always a point of contention. (The schools that make up both Divisions of the NCAA hold separate tournaments to determine the best wrestlers in the nation in each Division, however only those wrestlers whose schools belong to the University Division need qualify for the Tournament. Thus a tourney like the old NEIWA Tournament which had College Division wrestlers as Champions in some weight classes couldn't legitimately be used as a qualifying Tournament like the Eastern, Big 8 and Big 10 Conferences.) UMass will join Boston College, Boston University, Dartmouth, Brown, Holy Cross, Maine, New Hampshire, Rhode Island and Connecticut in the new conference.

Although there has always been a Yankee Conference Championship for most other sports, wrestling teams in the YanCon never got together to find out who was the best. In the past few years, UMass has been the unofficial Yankee Conference Champions due to its strong finish in the NEIWA, but this year the Redmen will put this title on the line when they travel to Maine for the First Yankee Conference Championship Tournament.

There are ten spots to be filled each match and looking over possible contestants for these spots one will see that another crop of talented freshmen will be joining the ranks in hopes of wrestling varsity or at least providing competition for those that do. A couple of New York boys with fine records will be joined by two hightly touted wrestlers from Pennsylvania and they will, in turn, have a Maryland State Heavyweight Champ in their midst.

Returning veterans to watch out for are Mike Duffy, Peter Rock, and John Connolly. A little extra attention should be paid to two boys that have sat out their transfer year and have come from tough wrestling schools. Steve Benson, who hails from New York Maritime Academy, captured every New England AAU meet he wrestled in and took second place at the prestigious East Stroudsburg Open and the New York Athletic Club Open. He is a sure bet to hold down a position in the area of 158 or 167.

Larry Reynolds, another outstanding and experienced AAU wrestler comes from Bloomsburg State of Pa. where wrestling is the name of the game all year around to the extent that they broadcast live TV and radio coverage of the matches. He wrestled some of the top talent in the nation his last year at Bloomsburg and is sure to make quite a few New England wrestlers take notice when he comes in at 126 or 134.

Coach Barr looks to have a balanced team and it is well that he does because the schedule is heavy with tough opponents. Yale, Harvard, and Springfield will be joined again by Lock Haven and newcomer Wilkes College (NCAA College Division fifth place team and MAC CD Champs).

The past and the future: One is laden with glories and the other with certain rough going. Why is UMass taking the hard route with a sport that is seemingly minor in the eyes of many New Englanders? Coach Barr has always noted that "You migrate to your competition. If you want to be tougher come tournament time than other schools, then you have to wrestle a better schedule and get better wrestlers. I wouldn't have it any other way."

And like last year, a lot of Redmen opponents are going to wish he hadn't said that.

later it was all tied up again. Then in the 20th the Redmen fell apart and handed UConn six runs and the game, along with the season. It was not at all a fitting end to a struggle like that.

The season wasn't all trauma and disaster, though. After all, the Red did wind up with a record of 16-5. It was just a shame that the season was so short because this team had a load of talent and a pitching staff as deep as the Marianas trench (and about as tall as the Empire State Building).

There were many pleasant surprises, and some disappointments, but the pleasant outnumbers the bad. It was a young team, and lost virtually nothing to graduation. It will be a powerhouse next year.

There are too many good ballplayers on this club to single out names. It would not be fair. Neither would it be fair to single out a "villain" as being responsible for UMass not making the post-season play.

Rather, chalk this past season up as an investment in the valuable baseball commodity of experience.

St. Anselm goalie tries halting UMass goal.

Hockey

UMass Produced Champions

By BILL BALLOU

It is much easier to write a review of a season like the 71-72 UMass hockey season this year than it would have been last. Last year you had to dig for the inevitable excuses and "almosts" and "ifs" of a year that didn't quite make it.

But there need be no explanations, no detailed post-mortem here, because the 1971-72 edition of UMass hockey produced a championship.

The statistics are impressive, but tell only a superficial story. A won-lost record of 19-7 overall, 18-3 in Division II, 156 goals scored, 78 goals allowed. Several records of varying shades set. The real story of 71-72 starts back around 1967, but there isn't enough space to allow a proper retelling. So the most recent, and successful, one must do.

The season can best be described by dividing it into three parts: 1. Opening night against Salem State up till the Amherst game on January 26. 2. The Vermont home game on January 28 until the end of the regular season on March 1. 3. The play-offs.

The first part of the year consisted of happy victory after happy victory. The Redmen were undefeated against Div. II opponents, winning the majority of those games in easy fashion. The highlights of this stretch had to be the overtime win against Vermont in Burlington by a score of 4-3 in the second game of the season and the three game sweep of the Williams Tournament right after Christmas.

The two sour notes that spoiled an otherwise perfect slate were losses to Yale and BU, both Division I schools. But in neither of those games were the Redmen outclassed, they simply didn't play well.

With the 15-1 embarassment of Amherst marking the halfway point of the season, UMass stood in the position of being able to virtually clinch the top seed in the championship playoffs. All they needed to do was to beat Vermont, at home, on the 28th.

They didn't.

Vermont won the game, 5-3, and proceeded to go on a tear that saw them not lose again until the semi-finals of the playoffs, and get the No. 1 playoff seed.

Hockey

Championship Seems Unlikely

By BILL BALLOU

It seems a might ludicrous to start worrying at the beginning of September about a hockey team that won't open its season until Nov. 29, but I keep remembering that fable about the squirrel storing food for the winter. So, I suppose, now is as good a time as any to start worrying about the 72-73 UMass hockey team. And there seems to be good reason to worry.

72-73 promises to be one of the more interesting, and at the same time, unpredictable seasons of the six Coach Jack Canniff will have had at UMass. But the odds on a Division II championship don't seem nearly as favorable now as they did at this time last year.

Graduation has cut deeply into this year's Redmen squad, taking 10 veterans; six forwards, three defensemen, and a goalie. Gone are two-thirds of last year's highest scoring line, an entire defensive pair, and the goaltender who played all but one of last season's games. It hurts.

But there is hope. In spite of graduation a strong nucleus of returning veterans exists, especially at the vital center position. Last year's 6-6 JV squad isn't sending hordes of talent up, but there are a couple of bright faces. So all is not lost. In fact, if the veterans produce on the level that they should and a few bright rookie faces surface to help out, it could be a lovely war.

Here's the outlook, by position, on the upcoming squad:

Forwards: Very strong at center with last year's top three at that position returning. Pat Keenan, UMass' all-time leading scorer, captain Don Riley, UMass' and possibly the division's best all-around player; both seniors, and junior Jim Coleman who had a strong sophomore season combine to give the Redmen a lot of depth down the middle, but a chance at a switch to a wing somewhere along the line can't be ruled out.

On the wings the Redmen lost a total of 54 goals and 79 assists to graduation, and they're going to need more than a bandaid to patch up that wound. Coming back are Chico Shea, who should have a good season;

For UMass it marked the beginning of a period of inconsistent play that resulted in their getting only the No. 2 seed for the playoffs. When Bowdoin roared from behind in the third period to demolish the Redmen 8-4 in Amherst on the snowy afternoon of February 19 they knocked UMass to its knees in the drive for top seed. But when St. Anselms incredibly upset the Redmen 5-4 in the very next game, they were knocked out.

The regular season ended on a gloomy note with a 7-3 loss to Providence College and things did not look particularly promising for the playoffs starting on March 4.

UMass, as second seed, drew the No. 7 seed, St. Anselms, in the quarterfinals. In the first home playoff game ever for UMass, the Redmen took St. A's by 5-3 despite a comeback in the third period by the Saints that had UMass rooters reaching for Alka-Seltzer.

This win moved them to the semi-finals and again the Redmen had home ice advantage, this time vs. Merrimack. The final score was 4-2 for UMass as the Redmen again suffered a third period lapse and were given a scare before getting by.

The other semi-final game, though, proved to be the one to make the big news. In it the Buffalo Bulls shocked the Div. II hockey world in general, and the Vermont Catamounts in particular, by dumping the Cats 4-0 in Vermont. This knocked UVM out of the finals and set the stage for a UMass-Buffalo championship game at Amherst.

In that final game, UMass led a 3-0 after one period, 4-1 after two and skated off with the Div. II championship by an 8-1 margin when it was all over. It would have been a monumentally dull game except for the fact that it gave UMass its first Div. II championship ever.

It's not fair to single out individuals on a team such as that, simply because there was no individual who could be given credit for the championship more than anyone else. In an age of superstars the closest thing the Redmen had to one was Pat Keenan with his four-goal games and record setting scoring feats.

Yet when the playoff MVP was selected, Chico Shea was the man. Shea had done nothing of note during the regular season, but when the playoffs came he owned the switch to the redlight.

It was indeed a "team", however overused the word is, effort. And if the designation "most valuable" is to be used, it must be in a group context. The "Most Valuable Player" on the 71-72 team had to rate as the ten seniors that had marked the start of Coach Jack Canniff's rebuilding program when he came to UMass five years ago.

Pucksters Lose Teammates

Lonnie Avery, who had an off-year and is more or less a question mark; and Jim Lynch, who as a sophomore didn't see an awful lot of action and thus is still rather unproven.

Defense: Ouch! is the only way to describe things here. Gone are Brian Sullivan, Bob Bartholomew, and Al Nickerson, the collective heart of the UMass defense. Remaining are Don Lowe and Bob Shilalie, both seasoned veterans who are going to have their hands full leading what has to be a youthful defense. Lowe led Redmen backliners in scoring last season and Shilalie led in the "opponents mangled" department. But they must have help.

Goal: The Redmen have lost the best goaltender in Div. II, so they're two strikes down to start. Last year P.J. Flaherty started all but one game, leaving that one game and a couple of clean-up periods here and there for his back-ups, John Kiah and Chick Rheault.

Neither Kiah, a senior, or Rheault, a junior, have had any real chance to prove themselves in varsity competition so a comparison between the two is rather ridiculous. Both are talented goalies and one or both should be able to handle the job, but Flaherty is a tough act to follow. Other dark horses that pop into mind for the job are John Binkoski, who spent the entire year with the JV's and Bruce Crawford, the lacrosse goalie who sat out this past hockey season. With Flaherty gone he may attempt a comeback.

The schedule is a real doozer. The Redmen have, counting the Williams tourney, 15 road games including two road trips; one to New York and one to Maine. They will play six games at Amherst's Orr Rink, which is called home, and two games at their new second home, the Springfield Civic Center. One of those two games is against Vermont, the other against Yale.

The season opener is Nov. 29 vs. Boston State in Boston, and the home opener is Dec. 8 vs. Middlebury. The regular season is scheduled to close Feb. 28 against Yale.

It should be an interesting three months.

Jimmies Offers Seafood, Hot Dogs

By JIM GOLD

Splitting hot dogs may not seem like a very special idea, but that is what brought on the success of the first "Jimmies" in Savin Rock, Connecticut. Now, "Jimmies" has started franchising and has opened a store over this past summer at 55 University Drive.

According to Gary M. Zitomer, President of Jimmies International, the idea of the split hot dog started with Vincenzo Gagliardi, founder of the restaurant, in 1925. Savin Rock was on the end of the trolley run from New Haven, he explained.

Since trolley conductors only had one minute to turn the trolley around, he went on, and since most of the passengers were usually hungry, Gagliardi split the hot dog to cook faster. He also cooked the bun to keep the hot dog warmer, said Zitomer.

The original "Jimmies" currently claims sales of more than 35,000 hot dogs per week. Also on the menu in both Savin Rock and Amherst are onion rings, fresh french fried potatoes, shrimp, clams, scallops, crab, lobster, coke, and ice cream.

Salvator Gagliardi, Chairman of the Board and also the founder's son, explained "I was 12 years old when I went to work for my dad." He recalled working 18 hours a day, six days each week back then. He attributes the success of the Savin Rock store to dedication and hard work.

Whatever it is, "Jimmies of Savin Rock" should meet with success here. Although, at first glance their prices might seem high, the portions are generous and the food is quite excellent to eat.

Hot dogs, large and split, are 35¢ each. Platters run from $2.00 to $2.40. For this you get either lobster, clams, scallops, or crab; cole slaw; and french fries. Onion rings may be substituted for either the cole slaw or the fries. The platters are very satisfying as meals.

Astrological Forecast

The Virgo child can be reasoned with, not dominated. These youngsters are analytical and constantly ask, "Why?" A great asset of the active Virgo youth is an intense intellectual curiosity. Teachers and parents should encourage this--talk to Virgo, explain to this child and the results will be rewarding. With the right teacher, the Virgo child enjoys the learning process and becomes an early reader, a fluent speaker and an enthusiastic writer.

Feminists Organize Bureau

New York--Announcing the formation of a new feminist speakers bureau to see to it that leaders of the Movement are heard speaking out on feminist issues, three feminists-activists have revealed that they intend to appeal to students to bring pressure to bear on political candidates to stop the war; to change priorities so that human considerations come first, according to a statement from New Feminist Talent Associates.

The three organizers, Jacqueline Ceballos, Jane Field, and Dell Williams made no secret of their displeasure with media coverage of feminist issues and activities. They blamed the media for giving the public a false impression of feminists as some kind of crazies interested only in stunts for cheap publicity. They said the media tends to give wide coverage to zealots from the bra-less brigade, or to strictly personal revelations of sexual preferences.

These happenings are touted, the women said, while the gut-issues of the feminists get lost on the "Woman's page" in the press, and are brushed off on television and radio with a brief mention in a newscast if they are aired at all. Even the passage of the Equal Rights Amendment (ERA) got only token treatment from the networks.

The real goal of women's liberation, they said, is to "create a more human world for all human beings--free from sexual stereotyping." They expressed dismay at the apparent disinterest of the media in their fight against the war; against sexist discrimination in education and employment; their efforts to abolish archaic laws that suppress contraceptives and forbid abortions; and their state-by-state campaign for ratification of the ERA.

There is little hope for change, the women said, while the media is controlled by big business and business prefers the status quo. "Change can only come from pressure by informed women and men who are determined that the status quo must go," they said.

Their roster of speakers includes "everybody who is anybody" in the feminist world: Betty Friedan, author of the Femine Mystique; Wilma Scott Heide, President of NOW; Jeanette Rankin, former Congresswoman and outspoken pacificist; Myrna Lamb, author of Mod Donna; Robin Morgan, editor of "Sisterhood is Poverful"; Ann Scott columnist for the new Ms. magazine, and scores of other distinguished feminists, including one man--Sociologist Warren Farrell.

Arrangements for speakers can be made through New Feminist Talent Associates, 115 West 57 Street, New York City 10019. NFTA is owned and run by Ceballos, Field and Williams who are members of NOW and the Woman's Political Caucus.

Lennons Await Deportation Decisions

John Lennon, rock singer and former Beatle, and his wife, artist Yoko Ono, can expect a decision on the deportation proceedings against them by mid-September, according to the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service in New York. The verdict is subject to appeal and, if the appeal should also fail, special legislation by Congress is a possibility, says the National Committee for John and Yoko, also in New York. John is British, and Yoko, Japanese.

The Lennons were admitted into the country August 19, 1971, to attend a custody hearing involving Kyoko, Yoko's eight year old daughter by her previous marriage to an American, Anthony Cox. The court awarded the Lennons custody of Kyoko, but with the provision that she must be brought up in the United States, where she was born. John and Yoko have been trying to locate Kyoko ever since. Instead of complying with the court order, it is thought that Cox ran off with Kyoko. The Lennons have been unable, (as of August 11th), to find them, though they are believed to be in this country.

The immigration authorities refused to extend the Lennon's visas. When they did not leave the country, deportation proceedings were started. John and Yoko have applied to become permanent residents of the U.S.A. The government's position is that John is not eligible for admission to the country, (though a special exception was made to enable him to attend the custody case), because he was convicted in England in 1968, of possession of a small amount of "cannabis resin."

The substance was found in a binocular case during a police search of the Lennons' London apartment and John was fined.

John testified that he did not know the stuff was there. Under U.S. law, knowledge of possession must be proved, says the Lennons' lawyer, Leon Wilde.

The statute under which the government has turned down the Lennons' plea to stay also specifies "narcotic drugs and marijuana" and experts have testified that "cannabis resin" is neither.

The intent of the law was to deport aliens engaged in drug traffice in the U.S., says Wilde. He further points out that a thorough review of all the reported court decisions fails to disclose even one foreign conviction used as grounds for exclusion. At deportation proceedings in New York, distinguished witnesses testified to the Lennons' good character and potential artistic, cultural and social contributions to U.S. life as residents of this country.

Many Lennon supporters have chosen to express their opinions on the case in letters to their Congressmen and Senators. The National Committe for John and Yoko, Box 693 Radio City Station, New York, N.Y. 10019, would like to receive copies of any such letters or letters addressed directly to the committee. Petitions in support of the Lennons are being circulated by concerned individuals all over the country. Signed petitions should be sent to the national committee from whom petition forms and information on the case may also be obtained.

Registration Slides Into Final Day

By DON BISHOP

The registration process for the 17,500 UMass Amherst undergraduates goes into its' second day today under the new computerized process initiated last spring. All undergrads will be picking up their final schedules at Boyden Gym in staggered periods, according to their I.D. numbers.

Under the new registration procedure, Tuesday was designated as course change day. The Scheduling Office roughly estimated the number of students processing changes on Tuesday at 4000.

Fortunately, some students will find out today that they were unsuccessful in attempting to add courses on Tuesday. Starting on Friday they will have to pick up additional add forms from the Registrars Office in Whitmore and from there visit the appropriate departments to add courses.

Approximately 11% of those requests for courses that came in yesterday were unable to be processed because of mistakes made by students in filling out the course change form, according to Scheduling Officer Henry Skillings. These mistakes would include such things as not using pencil on the form and forgetting to include a student number.

The remainder of those requests that were unable to be fulfilled will primarily come as a result of overenrollment in various courses, which would include the departmental cancellation of certain sections.

Although it is impossible at this time to completely judge the success or failure of the new registration system, figures released by Skillings seem to indicate that the programs merits outweigh it's mechanized deficiencies.

Of the 110,000 course requests made by UMass undergrads, 26,500 of these had to be dropped through either student drop requests or departmental requests necessitated by overenrollment or section cancellation.

5500 students got exactly what they asked for in their pre-registration forms in terms of both courses and specific sections.

When you consider individual courses, 74% of UMass students got the specific section they wanted in courses where there are multiple sections. 97% of the requests for courses with only a single section were able to be accommodated. These two figures combine to give a 84% success total for all the specific section requests made last May.

In addition to the approximate 4000 students who made changes on Tuesday, Skillings stated that 3000 students sent back schedule change requests after the July mailing of pre-registration forms. Then in the week after the August mailing of final schedules to those students who had paid their bills before the 15th, some 3500 students made add and drop requests at the Boston and Amherst locations.

Skillings tried to emphasize the fact that those students who were dropped other than through human mistakes in filling out the registration forms, were done so not through the wishings of the Registrar or Scheduling Office, but because of requests of the various departments.

If a particular course were overenrolled it was up to the departments to decide whether 1) to leave the course overenrolled 2) create new sections or 3) request that a certain amount of students be dropped from the course. It should be pointed out that the decision to create new sections necessarily related to questions of both money (for hiring more instructors) and classroom space.

Skillings felt that the new system will improve as more semesters pass, as difficulties with the computer's program for registration are worked out and a greater percentage of students are accurate in completing their forms.

Computer Technicians get a real charge out of talking about the new registration system. It's so funny in fact, they can't even work. That's all they do all day is laugh about the new registration system. Isn't that funny?

Student Senators Report On A Summers Work

By BOB CALLAHAN

In a report released today, four Student Senate members headed by Senate President Larry Ladd outlined the issues they worked upon this summer while most of the student community were away from campus.

Working with Ladd were Patty Asack, Neil Kerstein and Jim O'Donoghue who released this report to give the students a full accounting of the activities of their representatives and to let the campus community know that the issues mentioned will continue to be issues throughout the coming year.

—The composition of the Athletic Council was finally passed during the last few days of finals in May and will be made up of 15 members. Eight of these will be members of the professional staff (three of whom will be alumni chosen by the Alumni Association) and seven will be students.

A screening committee will be set up by Ladd and Kerstein to interview candidates for the seven student appointments to the new council.

As president of the Student Government Assocation, Ladd is eligible for a seat on the new council but he has indicated that he has no intentions in serving and he will send a permanent representative.

—In other athletic news, former assistant to the President of American International College, Frank McInerny was appointed to the position of Athletic Director to replace David Bischoff.

—The faculty senate decision to remove credit from ROTC courses taught by ROTC personnel drew criticism from the state legislature this June. A resolution was passed in the legislature condemning the actions taken by the UMass faculty but the University stood fast behind the decision.

Ladd and his co-workers report that for several months they heard nothing from the Army or Air Force regarding whether they are staying or leaving. About a week ago the Air Force notified the campus and said that their decision to deny credit was unacceptable. Since then, Ladd hasn't received any more information and is uncertain about what will happen with ROTC courses at registration being held today.

—The rehiring of Mike Best was announced this summer. Best, an Assistant Professor of Economics, was rehired for a three-year contract. This ended an attempt by the Economics Dept. to remove Best from his teaching position. Best's teaching ability was the primary reason for his re-appointment, according to Provost Gluckstern.

Student Senate President Ladd and Senator Nick Apostola argued in favor of Best while the Economics Dept. chairman and the department personnel committee argued for the firing of Best.

—Students now have a much wider latitude in determining how their SATF money will be spent. In August the Board of Trustees adopted a policy that allows SATF to be spent on or off campus, as long as it relates to the purpose of the University Senate. President Ladd regards this as a major change in trustee policy regarding use of SATF money.

—The Student Union Governing Board has also come under Ladd's scrutiny this summer. He announced that he is establishing a special screening panel to interview candidates for appointment to the Board and to recommend names to submit to the Senate for confirmation.

'Ladd has indicated that the SUG Board has been a great disappointment to him and that he wishes to make the Board more accountable directly to students.

—As you noticed on your University fee bill, the WMPIRG proposal finally passed the Board of Trustees. This "negative checkoff" system is similar to the way the University offers the insurance program and fulfills the legal requirement that the fee be voluntary.

New WMPIRG staff director, Ron Bogard, has publicly begun his work for WMPIRG by filing suit against the Western Mass. Electric Company for its proposed rate increase.

—A food co-op is in the planning stages and may be ready by the end of the semester. Under the direction of Senate Treasurer Robert Chiller, a proposal is being drawn up. Chiller needs help in establishing the co-op and persons interested in helping should see him.

The above-mentioned are only half of the issues worked upon during the summer months. Printing deadlines do not permit the listing of all the issues presented in the report. Americans Mistaken On Marketing

NEW YORK (AP) - A common assumption among Americans, especially those who believe strongly in the power of advertising and marketing, is that the seller rather than the buyer dictates trends.

This notion is sometimes fostered by the ad industry itself, and as if to prove their contention, copywriters can offer numerous examples of spectacular success by products of dubious value, heavily promoted.

But now and then industry's faith in its own powers is shattered as, from time to time, consumers assert themselves and buy what they darn well please.

None other than the automotive Big Three-General Motors, Ford and Chrysler-learned this lesson in recent years as they attempted to sell big cars to buyers who were determined to buy small.

As a result, the penetration of the domestic market by foreign companies reached 16 per cent before the tide was turned.

The Big Three were forced to adjust to consumer preferences, to build compact cars despite lower profit margins on such units.

Something roughly comparable seems to have occurred in the market for new homes. As the price of conventional housing continues to rise, mobile homes are slicing off what appears to be a permanent segment of the market.

The median price of a new one-family home now is more than $25,000, or 11 per cent more than in 1967. A fully equipped mobile home can be purchased for less than half that.

As recently as 1960, only 103,700 mobile units were shipped. By 1965, the numbered had more than doubled. Last year more than 490,000 units were shipped. This year the total most likely will exceed 500,000.

About one of every three single family home sales now involves a mobile unit, a rate that housing officials concede may represent a permanent change in the market.

The significance of this trend can be measured in numerous ways. Certainly it means that many Americans have accepted a different life style. It means also that the appearance and tax base of some towns is changing.

Perhaps most significant is the evidence that the buyer can shift with the times, can make up his own mind, assert himself and realize his demands without any encouragement.

Quinn Investigates Boone

BOSTON (AP) — State Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn's office says it will decide within a week whether Correction Commissioner John O. Boone meets the experience specifications spelled out in law to qualify him for his post.

A spokesman said Quinn completed late Wednesday an investigation of Boone's qualifications and expects to announce the result shortly.

The outcome could determine whether Quinn acts as Boone's counsel in a suit by prison guards who seek to oust him.

Asst. Atty. Gen. James P. Kernan Wednesday asked and was granted a one-week delay in a hearing of the guards' suit in the state Supreme Judicial Court.

The guards' suit contends Boone does not have the five years' experience in administration of an adult correctional institution, as required by state law.

The spokesman for the attorney general's office said that if Quinn determines on the basis of his investigation that the commissioner lacks the required qualifications, he would be required to go into court for what are known as quo warranto proceedings—requiring the office holder to show by what authority he holds his post.

In this event, it was explained, Boone might well want to be represented in the guards' suit by counsel other than than the attorney general, who by law is required to represent state officials in court.

250 Parking Meters Debut In A Month

The acting vice chancellor for student affairs reported yesterday that the University will install 250 parking meters within a month on campus.

Robert W. Gage said the action was recommended by the Transportation and Parking Council and was approved by the UMass Board of Trustees last April.

He said the University and the company contracted to install the meters will evenly split the money generated until the meters are paid for.

"At the point," said Gage, "the University will receive all monies generated." He estimated it will take five to eight years to pay off the cost of the meters.

The chancellor said the council will decide how the funds will be eventually spent with their report expected in March.

Gage said he didn't anticipate any problems from students because of the installation of the meters or the $2 overtime parking fee.

"After all, there are 15,000 cars registered on campus, and we're only taking up 250 spaces," he continued. "We're only taking five per cent of the parking spaces available."

He added that an extension of the parking lot near the Engineering Building will be made with 300 additional spaces being made available.

Gage cited the need for part-time facilities for visitors and said the meters will also prove to be economical.

The council is a new organization made up of three students, three faculty members and three staff professionals.

Here is a list where meters will be located on campus:

—Haigis Mall (Whitmore): 24 duplex, four single.
—Fearing St.: 17 duplex, one single.
—Southwest: 10 duplex.
—Lot 2: 10 duplex.
—Arnold House: six duplex, one single.
—Lot 7: 18 duplex.
—Lot 4: four duplex.
—Skinner Hall: three duplex.
—Infirmary Road: 17 duplex, six singles.

Camping Season Gets Extension

BOSTON (AP) — Most star parks, forests and camping areas in Western Massachusetts will remain open for the entire fall season, until Oct. 23, State Natural Resources Commissioner Arthur W. Brownell said today.

Brownell's department asked the state Office of Administration and Finance for a transfer of funds to keep the parks open, reversing previously announced plans to shut all parks Sept. 9 due to budgetary cutbacks.

A transfer of $180,000 was requested, but only $66,000 was granted, according to Brownell.

Kennedy and Weicker Introduce Legislation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sens. Lowell P. Weicker, Jr., R-Conn., and Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., introduced legislation today which would permit the use of $2.4 billion from the Highway Trust Fund for mass transit.

The proposal, introduced as an amendment to the Aid to Highways Act of 1972, would open all highway programs, except the interstate system, by giving states a choice of building more highways or using their highway funds to build new mass transit systems, the senators said in a statement.

"Flexibility is the name of the game," Weicker said. "In the past we have spent 70 cents of every transportation dollar on highways so the man responsible for ending traffic jams had only one viable choice--build more highways because that's where the money is."

The proposed amendment would also encourage upgrading of existing transit systems, he said, by permitting the purchase of new buses and rail cars with highway funds.

Both Weicker and Kennedy said they would testify on their amendment before the Senate Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs Commitee Thursday when the committee is scheduled to hold one day of hearings on the mass transit aspect of the highway bill.

Parimutuel Man Gets Computer

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP) — State parimutuel supervisor Bernard W. Cushman is finally going to get an electronic calculator after 15 years of manually but swiftly figuring odds, payoffs and pools at Maine's harness racing tracks.

Gov. Kenneth M. Curtis and the Executive Council today approved a $375 appropriation to purchase a machine for Cushman after a plea from his boss, Harness Racing Commission chairman John F. Weston.

Cushman, noted Weston, "is required to add columns of seven-digit numbers in a very short time when accuracy is paramount. Percentages must be gained and payoffs calculated in four minutes or less.

"Time, age and eyesight make it vital this person Cushman now be granted the use of a calculator."

Prayers Held for Munich Dead

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — Special prayers will be held in all this city's synagogues during the Jewish high holidays, beginning Friday, in memory of the 11 members of the Israeli Olympic delegation killed by Arab terrorists in Germany, the Springfield Jewish Federation announced after a special meeting today.

"We Jews, along with the entire civilized world, condemn the savage killings of helpless victims of criminal Arab terrorists," said Federation President Joel Leavitt. He said the federation "deplores the terrorism that has plagued the Israeli people in their struggle for peace."

The federation urged the city's Christian community to join their Jewish brothers in prayers at Sunday church services.

Influenza Epidemic Possible

BOSTON (AP) — The Massachusetts Department of Public Health said today it has warned local boards of health to prepare for a possible influenza epidemic this winter.

The department predicted a flu outbreak would start in mid-December and recommend immunizing persons over age 50 and those they come in contact with as well as sufferers of chronic disease.

Chicopee Youth Pleads Innocent

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. (AP) — Wayne H. Harvey, 19, of Chicopee, pleaded innocent in District Court here today to the theft of an estimated $10,000 in concession receipts from the three county fair, being held here this week.

Harvey was arrested at 3 a.m. by Amherst Police, who charged him with drunkenness after they found him asleep inside St. Bridget's Church.

Student Information Receives Cutbacks

By MDC STAFF

Students using the telephone information service (5-1515) for student telephone numbers and addresses can expect some difficulties officials explained yesterday, as the total number of student operators manning the telephones has been cut from fourteen to six.

The reduction of personnel hours from 210 to 90 comes as part of an overall cutback in work-study funds from the financial aid office.

Student Information used to be in service from nine a.m. until midnight, however, this semester the morning service may have to be discontinued, and the afternoon staff cut down to one student.

Officials urged students using the information service to be patient. Meanwhile, additional funds for more personnel are being sought. The Student Information service will resume on Thursday.

McGovern Policies Blasted

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — The U.S. Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare today labeled Democratic presidential candidate George McGovern's latest welfare proposal "at best a jumble of incoherent propositions."

In a speech prepared for a luncheon at the Syracuse Press Club, Elliot L. Richardson also called on the Senate to bring President Nixon's own welfare plan out of committee and approve it, as the House has done.

Richardson also scheduled an afternoon speech to Syracuse University students.

The McGovern plan, he said, "is at best a jumble of incoherent propositions, produced either by a person who does not understand the complexities of the issue, or by one willfully determined to obfuscate his constantly shifting stance."

Munich Crisis Results in 17 Dead

MUNICH (AP) — A record for confusion was set Tuesday after nine Israeli hostages were seized at their Olympic Village headquarters and police plotted ways to resuce them alive.

When the ordeal finally ended, all the hostages plus two other Israelis were dead, along with five of their Arab terrorist captors and a West German policeman. The other three terrorists were captured.

Police identified the three as Ibrahim Badran, 20, and Abd Es Kadir el Dnawy and Samer Mohamed Abdulah, both 22. All told police they were students and had lived most recently in Jordan and Syria. Their nationalities were not determined immediately and authorities disclosed no details on how they came to Germany.

Uncertainty over what was actually going on plagued coverage. The swiftly changing nature of the story, coupled with the desire of German officials to issue good news, caused much of the confusion.

Before the world learned that the Israelis had died, a first report said they all were safe. A second announcement said the fate of the nine was unknown. Finally came word of the deaths.

There were pressures from various sides:

—The story was a big one. And 4,000 reporters were demanding immediate information. The big Olympic press organization, set up to rush out sports results, suddenly had to cope on a makeshift basis with a developing police-type story of international scope.

First word of the Palestinians' attack spread a couple of hours after it occurred.

Entrances to the village immediately were sealed off to reporters, but a few newsmen managed to get through the blockade. Inside, police cordoned off the area around the Israeli quarters.

Some reporters managed to get into the building where Puerto Rican athletes were housed. From the roof they could look across the street to see terrorists peek furtively from windows or see hostages with their hands bound come to the windows.

Photographers with 1,000mm lenses took pictures from a hillside vantage point outside the fence. A television camera from a television tower about a half-mile away peered into the area.

Dr. Manfred Schreiber, chief of the Munich Police, faced the newsmen at the press center at 1 p.m., about eight hours after the siege started.

He had no accurate figures on how many hostages were held, or how many terrorists were involved.

One reporter at an area in the village where police were getting orders was told there would be a shootout at 5 p.m.

As the deadline approached, television monitors for different networks went blank, one by one. Everyone waited tensely. But there was no shootout.

A helicopter landing pad had been roped off near the Israeli quarters. But when the terrorists and hostages came out of the building at 10 p.m., they were taken to another landing area a few hundred yards away.

Hans Klein, press chief for the Munich organizing committee, constantly relayed information–not all of it accurate–on the shooting climax at the airport.

He said he was getting information from a collegue there, and perhaps from several police sources.

The German radio announced all hostages were safe, and Klein quickly confirmed it.

Finally, government officials said that all hostages died in the helicopter. This was four hours after the hostages left the village, and three hours after the announcement they were safe.

Heavy Vietnam Action Reported

SAIGON (AP) - Government forces battled enemy troops on three fronts in South Vietnam Wednesday, gaining some ground but losing a vital outpost south of the Que Son Valley below Da Nang, field reports said.

In the air war, U.S. Navy fighter-bombers ranged along North Vietnam's coast from Haiphong about 200 miles south to Ha Tinh and left a trail of fires to supply and fuel depots and barracks among other key targets, the 7th Fleet reported.

Hanoi's official Vietnam news agency claimed seven U.S. A6 and F4 jets were shot down Wednesday over the North and that "a number" of pilots were captured or "wiped out."

Communist-led troops, believed to be Viet Cong, overran Hill 211 which commands the district town of Tien Phuoc, 10 miles south of the Que Son Valley. Witnesses said thousands of refugees fled to the east.

Field reports said the South Vietnamese put up a battle for Hill 211 before being pushed back, losing two 105 mm howitzers to the enemy.

The South Vietnamese were reported to have sent in reinforcements, landing about 200 government troops about a mile south of the hill. Two helicopters ferrying in troops were shot down and one South Vietnamese was killed and 16 were wounded, field reports said.

More than 100 miles to the north, South Vietnamese marines continued a slow and costly drive to root out North Vietnemese troops entrenched in a large bunker complex in the southern part of Quang Tri. The battle remained a standoff after its 71st day.

On the southern front, field reports said South Vietnamese infantrymen had seized the southern sector of the Quan Loi airfield in rubber plantations east of An Loc which fell to the North Vietnamese last April. The region is 60 miles north of Saigon.

But North Vietnamese troops held firmly to the northern sector of Quan Loi and were putting up a fight.

The U.S. Command announced that American jets flew about 290 strikes across North Vietnam Tuesday. All were carried out by planes from the Navy carriers Saratoga, Midway and Hancock, which stayed near the coast to avoid overcast skies.

For the first time since the resumption of full-scale bombing against the North last April 6, the Air Force missions were canceled because of poor weather inland caused by the aftermath of Typhoon Elsie.

Two Navy F8s from the Hancock collided in the air while one of them was refueling over the Gulf of Tonkin, destroying the two planes and damaging the tanker. There were no casualties. The pilots of the F8s parachuted to safety and were rescued uninjured. The tanker landed safely on the carrier.

Rogers Seeks Stiff Terrorist Penalties

WASHINGTON (AP) — Under presidential orders to seek urgent world cooperation to end terrorism, Secretary of State William P. Rogers said Wednesday "the United States is prepared to take the most firm, severe action that the international community is prepared to join in."

Without outlining specifics, the secretary said "I am firmly convinced that we have to take decisive action, severe action, if you will, to make it clear throughout the world that criminal action against innocent people certainly is not an acceptable method of solving any of the world's problems."

Rogers made his remarks to the 17-nation delegation meeting at the State Department to draft a convention on enforcing previous international accords against air piracy.

Indicating that he sees aircraft hi-jacking as just one element of a larger terrorist threat, Rogers moved to obtain support for U.S. demands for tougher air-piracy measures by pointing to the deaths Tuesday of 17 persons in Munich, Germany.

"These murders by extremist terrorists are more than crimes against the citizens of one country," Rogers told delegates to the International Civil Aviation Organization.

"At this conference," the secretary stated, "we need to remember that the Munich attackers sought to commandeer, to hi-jack if you will, an aircraft to make their escape.

"We need to remember that threats and acts against international air travel are one aspect-a very important aspect-of the internationl terrorism that threatens the lives of innocent people, regardless of nationality.

"The international community must take firm and prompt action to effectively prevent air piracy. If we can do this, we will have denied to terrorists and would-be terrorists one of their most effective weapons and will have taken a major step to subdue international lawlessness and terrorism."

Rogers made his unscheduled and brief appearance before the ICAO meeting following a 75-minute meeting with President Nixon and national security adviser Henry A. Kissinger.

Rogers told the ICAO that the White House Wednesday sent to the Senate the Montreal sabotage convention with an urgent request for its ratification.

According to Ronald Ziegler, Nixon's press secretary, the President told Rogers "to consult with other governments on an urgent basis as to what collective measures by the international community can be brought to bear on the problem of terrorism."

Live TV Records Shootout

MUNICH (AP) - The exact sequence of the shootout between Munich police and Arab terrorists at an air base remained doubtful Wednesday.

The official version said marksmen opened fire on the terrorists as they moved from helicopters carrying the men and their hostages to a waiting airliner.

Television pictures of the shooting show the shots were fired in almost complete darkness at Fuerstenfeldbruck airfield.

Flashing blue lights on top of police cars, then the lights of two of the three helicopters used the flight from the Olympic Village-the third helicopter carrying officials was not seen.

The soundtrack recorded a pop and then pop-pop-pop as small-arms fire erupted. This was followed by the staccato sound of automatic weapons.

The incident occurred in front of the field tower. But there were no lights, raising the question, how could marksmen shoot at terrorists in the dark?

Police sharpshooters had scope-equipped rifles, but it has not been disclosed whether these included infrared devices for night fire.

The television account said two of the terrorists moved to the airliner and were returning when the shooting broke out.

The account added that all the hostages in one helicopter were shot to death. It said all those in the other helicopter, including some hostages, were killed when an Arab terrorist blew himself up with a hand grenade, setting the helicopter on fire.

An early morning picture of the scene showed the two helicopters parked one behind the other, the one in front burned out in the rotor or tail section. They were directly in front of the control tower, about 60 yards away.

The television pictures also showed exploding flares apparently sent up as police with dogs set out to chase three fleeing terrorists who were later captured.

Judge Gives Heads A Chance

MIAMI, Fla. (AP) - A judge who thinks illiteracy is one of the major causes of crime has given two white teen-agers a chance to teach black prisoners to read and write in lieu of going to jail.

"I believe many of the people who end up in trouble do so because they are victims of the educational handicaps of poor people," Criminal Court Judge Alfonso Sepe said Wednesday.

"They have been unable to get an education, and they can't communicate verbally or orally, so they get into trouble."

Tuesday, the judge gave the choice of teach or jail to Margaret Fleming, 17, who pleaded guilty to a marijuana possession charge, and Richard Wade, 19, who admitted to charges of disorderly conduct and resisting arrest with violence.

The judge also withheld adjudication, meaning the Miami students would have no criminal record if they taught once a week at the Dade County stockade for the next three years.

The judge said he specifically told the two young people to teach blacks to read and write "because black people traditionally have been underpriviledged and therefore are more likely to run into problems caused by being victims of racism.

Miss Fleming accepted the judge's terms with the comment, "I'd rather teach in jail than live there."

Wade said, "It was pretty strange because I'd never heard of a thing like that before. But it really makes sense, I don't think I'd be doing much good lying around a jail cell, and now I'm really interested to learn if I can teach someone to read and write."

And the judge told them: "I've done something for you. Now it's time you do something for someone else."

World Shocked

(AP) - London to Melbourne, the non-Arab world was shocked Wednesday by the Munich massacre. The Arab press defended the Palestinian guerrillas, but most Arab leaders were silent.

In Israel, newspapers called for revenge in blood, but most officials carried their grief in silence.

"Now is the time to settle the score, in blood, with the saboteurs and those who sent them," wrote the Israeli paper Maariv.

In Cairo, both Al Akhbar and the semiofficial Al Ahram devoted editorials to what they called Israeli terrorism.

The Egyptian Gazette said it was a crime to kill, but also a crime to steal a country from the Palestinians.

"The world may call these crimes," said the Gazette, "but it must expect to continue until Palestinian rights are restored....As long as Israel refused justice, it cannot expect the Arabs to leave it in peace."

The leftist Beirut newspaper Al Moharrer, which is close to the Palestinian commandos, said that "public opinion has always been against the Arabs, never taking their side...into consideration. So public opinion needs a sharp blow to become impartial."

Government radio stations in Iraq and Syria and Arab nationalist papers in Lebanon accused the West Germans of treachery in opening fire on the guerrillas as they tried to leave with their Israeli hostages.

King Hussein of Jordan was the first Arab leader to speak out. He called the attack the work of "sick minds who are not part of humanity."

McG Blames Egypt

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Sen. George McGovern, the Democratic presidential nominee, blamed the Egyptian and Lebanese governments Wednesday for the Arab terrorists' murder of 11 Israelis at the Munich Olympics.

He said President Nixon should demand that Egypt "root out these international outlaws" as a condition for resuming diplomatic contacts.

McGovern also predicted the Nixon administration will weaken its commitment to Israel after the election on grounds of decreased Soviet influence in the Middle East. He drew applause from a group of rabbis by declaring, "I would be for the state of Israel if the Soviet Union didn't exist."

Seeking to dispel potential defections among traditionally Democratic Jewish and union voters, McGovern received a friendly welcome from both a breakfast meeting of the Southern California Board of Rabbis and the annual convention of the International Association of Machinists.

After his speech and with only brief debate, the 2,000 delegates who represent some 750,000 members of the union, shouted their endorsement of McGovern with only a handful of no's.

After the two Los Angeles speeches and a private luncheon with the IAM's executive council, McGovern planned a quick visit to the Teledyne Ryan plant in San Diego before flying to Texas for an evening rally in downtown Dallas.

Spanish Speaking Students Enter Fall Semester

UMass will register its first large unit of Spanish-speaking freshmen this week--35 Puerto Rican, Chicano and Dominican students admitted through the new Spanish-Speaking Component of the CCEBS special educational opportunities program.

CCEBS, the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students, has recruited a few Spanish-speaking students since it began in 1968. This year marks not only the entry of the first large group of freshmen but also the beginning of a program of classes for the Spanish-speaking.

Aida Beekman, coordinator, is recruiting Spanish-speaking teachers from among UMass faculty and students. The result is that a number of basic freshmen courses will be offered in Spanish this fall, with more planned later. An introductory math course in Spanish will be taught by Fernando Colon, a graduate student in engineering. Anthropology 104 will be taught in Spanish by faculty member Helen Norman. A Latin American history section taught by Robert White will have lectures in English and a discussion section in Spanish. There will be two Rhetoric 102 sections in English as a Second Language, one taught by Aida Beekman and the other by graduate student Elba Rivera.

"We want them to grasp English well enough so that by their junior year they can take any course in the University," explained Mariana Trujillo, CCEBS staff member. The Spanish-speaking students will also have available to them the CCEBS tutoring and counseling resources.

The program is basically student-initiated, Trujillo explained. The groundwork began last year under the leadership of Don Atencio, who headed the CCEBS tutorial services. He and CCEBS students formed a group called Ahora to recruit Spanish-speaking students and build a program for them.

UCF to Sponsor Coffee House

The United Christian Foundation is conducting a registration-period open house, complete with free coffee and cookies, in its 319 Hampshire House office. The open house will give interested members of the University community an opportunity to unwind from the frustrations of waiting in line, relax over a cup of coffee, meet the UCF staff, and find out about the program planned for this semester.

UCF is involved in a number of activities intended to try to humanize the University as a living-learning environment. One major program is pregnancy counseling. This program, under the guidance of Elaine Fraser, provides needed information to women (and men) who are concerned about unplanned pregnancies. Anyone who wishes to avail themselves of this service may visit the UCF office or call 545-2661.

UCF is also a leader in undergraduate education reform. It has a peace action task force which was heavily involved in last year's Westover demonstrations. There is also a task force for theological education/celebration. The thrust of all of these activities is to try to make Christianity a vital living force in the university community.

The open house will be held Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday this week, from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. All those who are interested in finding out more about these and other UCF functions, or who just want to sit and rap, are invited.

Panel to Advise McGovern Campaign

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Harvard law professor today announced the formation of a panel to advise Democratic presidential nominee George McGovern on crime and justice policies.

The professor, James Vorenberg, also took the opportunity to criticize the Nixon administration crime policies, saying its solution to crime in the streets was a "splashy manipulation of figures."

And he said he felt the recent FBI statistics showing the rate of increase in crime had lessened somewhat were affected by pressure from the Justice Department on the cities "to under-report crime."

"The last three and one-half years have been the worst crime years in the nation's history," said Vorenberg, the former executive director of President Johnson's Crime Commission, at a news conference. Vorenberg said crime under the Nixon administration had increased 30 per cent in three years with the crime rate in the suburbs going up 25 per cent in the last year alone.

"Yet the President and the attorney general continue to try to lull the public into believing that there is less crime," he said.

"We were told to take comfort in the fact that the rate by which crime is increasing is less. This continuing deception is a cruel hoax..."

Vorenberg said he and Thomas Bradley, a member of the Los Angeles police force for 22 years and now a member of the Los Angeles City Council, would co-chair the policy panel for McGovern. He said other panel members would be announced at a later date.

The panel's main job, he said, will be to advise McGovern on issues relating to public safety, criminal justice and drug abuse.

Preliminary Telephone Directories listing local addresses and phone numbers for all undergraduate students and Stockbridge students are now available at the Campus Store. This directory is based on information available as of August 16, 1972. No free copies will be distributed to University departments. They must be purchased through the Campus Store at a cost of 25¢ each.

A final directory, including graduate students, will be published in October, based on updated information received from students through either Registration or the Housing Office, 235 Whitmore.

Let Phase II Freeze Your Cubes . . .

Last year Creative Conveniences rented a 3 cubic foot refrigerator for $22.50 per semester (based on a yearly rate), and hundreds of people thought that was a good deal, even though competitors rented a 1.8 cubic foot model for less money.

This year our offer is irresistable! We can again rent our refrigerators for $22.50 per semester, but now, the price difference between theirs and ours is zero. Why? Because our competition raised their prices!

Last year you could have rationalized a slightly lower price for a very much smaller refrigerator . . . this year, there's no excuse.

Draft Counselors Corner

Information Available At Campus Center

By GILBERT J. SALK

Welcome back, brethren. Although we are starting a new year, the draft is still with us, Richard is still in the White House, and our tax money is still paying for a rain of death over Southeast Asia. As a result, Draft Counselor's Corner will be with you for another year, to try to let you know what your legal, and extra-legal options to Uncle Sam's Diplomatic Corps are.

There is a free draft counseling service located in 923 Campus Center. It is sponsored by the Student Senate, and has as its sole function the job of helping you find and exercise options to military service. Office hours are 9-4 Mon. through Fri., and other times may be arranged by appointment in emergencies. The telephone number is 545-0813.

There will be a draft counselor training course this semester, possibly with 1-3 credits. No time has been set yet, but notice will be given in the Collegian within a week.

As you probably know, Dick has taken this politically opportune time to announce that he will not ask that his power to draft be extended beyond next June. In addition, Mel Laird has stated that he believes that there will be no need to issue induction orders after January 1. Hopefully, there is a grain of truth in this election-year grab-bag of promises, but you should remember that campaign promises are never accompanied by iron-clad guarantees. If you are draft-eligible, you should take the time to rap with a draft counselor and find out what courses of action are available.

The Selective Service has announced that they will call all First Priority Group registrants with numbers up to 95 this year. If you're not sure which priority group you're in, I'll explain who qualifies. First, you must have been born in 1952, or earlier. (Those born in 1953 are not eligible to be drafted before Jan. 1, 1973.) Next, you must have either a 1-A, 1-A-0, or 1-0 classification. Finally, if you were born before 1952, you must not have held one of the above classifications on Dec. 31 of any preceding year. (Those born in 1952 could not have been eligible before this year, regardless of their classification.)

If you are in the First Priority Group and your number is 95 or below, (or if you're unsure,) see a draft counselor as soon as possible.

Draft Counseling Services has announced an urgent need for trained draft counselors for this semester. If you are a draft counselor, please visit the Draft Info table in the CC Lobby this week.

Brothers and sisters, please ponder this: Regardless of the new, improved "good guys/bad guys" kill ratio, Nixon's air war (alias vietnamization alias troop withdrawal) continues to take an incredible number of human lives. His method of "supporting" our POWs/MIAs is serving only to produce an ever-increasing number of POWs.

There are things to do. Check out draft counseling, tax resistance, Mobe, UCF Peace Action, Valley Peace Center, or even McGovern. Or put your own thing together.

PEACE.

No. 95 Announced As Draft Ceiling

The Selective Service System today announced that the draft lottery number ceiling for the last three months of the year will be RSN 95. Men with lottery numbers through RSN 75 are being inducted in August and September. The year-end ceiling of RSN 95 assures almost three-fourths of the men who faced induction during 1972 that they will not be called this year.

Approximately 15,900 men will be inducted during the October-December period, with the majority of inductions taking place in October and November. All available men with RSNs of 95 and below who are classified 1-A or 1-A-0 and are members of the 1972 First Priority Selection Group will receive at least 30 days notice of their induction date. Conscientious objectors, classified 1-0, with RSNs of 95 and below will be selected for alternate service in civilian jobs at the same time. All eligible men with RSNs of 95 and below who become available for induction or alternate service after mid-November when the last induction orders for 1972 will be mailed will be liable for induction or alternate service during the first three months of 1973 should there be calls during that period.

The inductions for the last three monthe of 1972 will bring the total of men inducted into the Army in 1972 to approximately 50,000. More than 94,000 men were inducted during 1971; 163,500 in 1970.

Bromery Reports on Africa Trip

Taking part in a National Academy of Sciences natural resources study in Zaire; a visit to Malawi and a conference with its president; and an interview with the widow of the distinguished black scholar W. E. B. DuBois in Cairo.

These were the highlights of a summer trip by UMass Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery. He spent two weeks in Zaire, formerly part of the Belgian Congo, as a member of a five-man panel sponsored by the NAS and Zaire's National Office for Research and Development.

The panel's role was to advise the government on the creation of a geological survey-bureau of mines organization. They also visited the three university centers in the country to advise on curricula development and earth science programs. It was an intensive and taxing two-week project, culminating with the preparation of a report to the Zaire government in French, Dr. Bromery stated.

"I think the main thing we did was change the basic philosophy of the Zaire government toward resource development," Dr. Bromery said. "We told them that they were no longer able to exploit their minerals the way the Belgians had done but should pay more attention to a broad development program that would help the country."

In Malawi, a central African country that UMass has aided educationally since the 1960's, the Chancellor toured, spoke with American and Malawai leaders and visited Malawi President Dr. Hastings Kamuzu Banda. One result was an open invitation to come back–next summer or in the future–and consult for the Malawi government on exploration for mineral deposits.

After stops in Nairobi, Kenya, and Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, the UMass Chancellor visited Mrs. Shirley DuBois at her home in Cairo, spending two days in discussions on the DuBois papers. "We came to a verbal agreement that the University would be the repository for the DuBois papers," he said.

Mrs. Bromery and two of the six Bromery children, 11-year-old David and six-year-old Chris, joined Dr. Bromery in Nairobi. The family traveled around the globe from there, their route including Cairo, Beirut, Hong Kong, Tokyo, Los Angeles and New Orleans.

Getting Along

Now that the 25,000 members of the UMass community are back together again, we hope that the friendly spirit of these first few days remains with us through the end of the year. We all need each other if we expect to achieve our goals and at the same time maintain our sanity.

Going through the daily UMass routine can be a numbing experience, but it doesn't have to be. One does not have to limit his or her life here to just classes, studying, and the local Friday night party. People have the potential to make our community's environment not only a place to live and learn, but a place to love. And the key to this potential lies in one word: cooperation.

Students should not look upon faculty and staff as adversaries, just as faculty and staff should not look upon students in that light. Much more can be accomplished if we realize that we're all in this together.

Faculty can be the motivating power behind the student; the student can be the catalyst of the faculty. And the Administration can join the forces to action. But an effort on all three fronts is a necessity. We either swim together or sink separately, the choice is ours.

Going On Your Own

Of all the things the Student Senate has done over the years in the "interest of students" "How to Go Through the University of Massachusetts On Your Own Terms" is probably going to be remembered as one of the most helpful.

Mollner, a doctoral candidate at the school of Education, has put together a good part of the information you'll need if you decide to try and get an education here that will function outside the boundaries of North Pleasant and Phillips Streets.

Mollner's premise is the 15th of his 16 "Hard facts to face about college today", which is, 'whether you like it or not and whether you know it or not you are responsible for what happens to you in college'. Mollner points out that as far as getting a job a college degree is worth less than it was even in 1970, and with 75% of all high school grads now going on to college it will soon be worth no more than a high school diploma is today. What will count is experience. When everyone has a degree the person who learned how to do what he knows by doing it, and not just sitting in a classroom, will probably be the one hired.

So Mollner tells us how to get credit for working experience, how to take a classroom course and get credit for it without ever stepping into the class, and how to eliminate core requirements so you can get down to learning what you want to learn.

All of which is meant to allow you the opportunity to get the education and experience the way you want to, in the way you think it will benefit you the most when the time comes to leave.

Two of Mollner's suggestions which have the most potential for campus wide use are the Contract System and CLEP exams.

The Learning Contract is, to use Mollner's own words "The student in collaboration with his/her professor agrees on exactly what the student is going to learn, how he/she is going to learn it, and how his/her learning is to be evaluated.

CLEP Exams are from the College Board people. If you can score higher than the 50th percentile on the exams (there are many that cover almost everything) you can receive credit, and depending on which exams be exempted from the CORE requirements.

The whole booklet is like the above. It doesn't tell you how to eliminate work, rather how to do the work that you want to do, the way you want to do it.

"On Your Own Terms" is the 'Steal This Book' of acadamies at UMass. Mollner might not like the comparison, seeing as the basis of all he has to say comes down to the student accepting and honoring the responsibility for his education, but the similarity is there. 'Steal This Book' tells you how to avoid getting ripped of the society, "On Your Own" tells you how to avoid getting ripped of by the University, i.e. you doing what the University tells you to do and not what you want to do, no matter it's value.

11 Dead; Olympics Go On

Eleven Israelis died in Munich at the twentieth Olympiad. All boxing, track, and swimming events were temporarily suspended while the German officials carefully packaged and arranged the Israeli bodies for a massive send off party for the murdered. The German's, their pride hurt, will stage for the world a funeral ceremony that will bring tears to ever the dryest and coldest eyes.

The Twentieth Olympiad games resumed yesterday: a showpiece of sportsmanship, goodwill among countries and a symbol of peace in the world. The only ones missing were the 11 Israelis. The world has once again witnessed the spilling of Jewish blood. Coming just seven Olympiads after Hitler led a mighty onslaught against the Jews in Europe, six Olympiads after the Arabs tried to push the Jews from the fields of Israel to the seas, and just one Olympiad after the Arabs with coaching from the Russians tried to kill every Jew in the Middle East, more Jews are dead.

The Olympics, earlier threatened with controversy concerning Rhodesia, paused briefly, blinked an eye, said some words of mourning, then went back to fun and games. I can't help but wonder how many American athletes would be in Munich today if the dead were American, Russian, English, French, or Egyptian. Nations are willing to use Jewish lives as if they were pieces in a chess game: swapping them for image, strategic position and world appeasement.

The blame for the tragedy in Munich rests solely on the shoulders of some Israeli official, for he entrusted the lives of Jewish citizens with men from other nations. For when all facts are considered Jews must protect themselves, they must be responsible for their own safety and welfare. For who really cares if this tragedy happened at the Olympics, or on some hijacked jetliner? Jewish men are dead, Jewish wives are widowed, and Jewish children fatherless. Nothing else really matters, Jews are still the targets of discrimination in this world from the Middle East, to Russia, to the United States.

Here We Go Again

Welcome back. Another year of campus politics is beginning. Last year was hardly dull. A chancellor resigned in a furor over budget cuts and the growing power of UMass President Robert Wood. The Faculty Senate bumbled for a year in the face of students attempts to reform the Athletic Council and a reform was finally passed. A serious program of teacher evaluation was enacted. Trustee meetings were disrupted monthly by students, mostly from the Boston campus, concerned about ROTC, defense-related research, and recruitment on campus. ROTC was denied academic credit. And the Mini-Strike of 1972 ended with the creation of a permanent program, the Center for Social Change, to help students to learn through research and engage in action against societal injustice.

It is impossible to predict what the coming year will bring. None of the developments mentioned above could have been predicted last September. One can never predict. If you're on the offense, you look for openings and charge through; if you're on the defense, you try to protect your weak spots.

At UMass, it is students who are on the offensive. We play the role of initiators of change, while the faculty, at least those who seem to control the Faculty Senate, is on the defensive, seeking to protect its privileges and traditions. Students are the heathens in the academic paradise, not to be taught, but to be tolerated.

The Faculty Senate will be a big issue this year. The days when the faculty was an exclusive club determining academic policies for "their" students are over. Students are the ones who must suffer the consequences of faculty decisions about curriculum, requirements, and grading. Students must share the responsibility for determining those policies, with power equal to that of the faculty.

The Student Senate Academic Affairs Committee will be issuing a series of reports this year about grading and requirements. After widespread discussion by the student community, the student recommendations will be sent to the Faculty Senate meatgrinder. That's what the Faculty Senate does to student proposals, it chops them up, making them unrecognizable to the original proposers.

I haven't succeeded in hiding my bitterness about the Faculty Senate's total control over our education. That bitterness is shared by any student who has tried to help shape the direction of academic life on campus.

Racism is an issue that the white community can no longer ignore; and sexism is an issue that males can no longer joke about. A brief look at the people who hold power on campus demonstrates the problem to some extent. The student government is lily-white, and women are largely reduced to quiet knitting at Student Senate meetings. Student government has a responsibility to put its own house in order, before it ventures forth to self-righteously save the University from itself.

The McGovern campaign and several local political campaigns will, I hope, attract much of our commitment for the next two months. Four more years of Nixon will be a disaster beyond our wildest nightmares. John Olver, seeking a State Senate seat, and Jim Collins, seeking a State Representative position, are two young political leaders who will merit our support as their positions on the issues become clear.

The critical problem we face as students is the difficult task of organizing ourselves to achieve change. We really do have considerable power, if only we exercised it collectively. I think that the student government, especially the area governments, can be the skeleton for such organizing. Certainly, if change is to occur, we've got to start somewhere beyond merely griping.

Editorial Points

It certainly is not hard to tell that another school year is getting underway. Crowds wherever you go, traffic jams in the streets, no available parking spaces, and some lines to wait in. Welcome home.

The yearbook came out yesterday. Of course, those people who throw away their buff cards which they get at registration or those people who did not get a card at all will have to wait until November or later when the yearbook staff is trying to get rid of the extras.

For those of you that thought the new library didn't have many books in it yet, you're just using it a semester early.

Did you ever stop to count all the illegal hotplates brought into students' rooms? If they were laid out end to end and all turned on at once, not only would they stretch from the Library Tower to Whitmore Hall, they could serve as a substitute heating system for the pipes now being installed in the big ditch.

Shouldn't there be a sign on the top of the library tower flashing the time, temperature, and current dining commons entree?

This is the last day to vacation before your first class. Since classes won't run as long this year as they did last year, you'll have one less week to cut.

The 1972 Index has more written copy in it than ever before, so it will probably take everyone longer to read than ever before. (But it's not as big, so don't hit anyone with it.)

If last summer was billed as the sensuous summer, what do we call the fall? Facetious? Fornicating? Foolish? Fallacious? Foul? Freaky? Fun? ...

Letters To The Editor

Thirty Cents Worth Of Cooperation . . .

Dear Mr. Apostola:

Your circular soliciting my cooperation came today, and as I believe that it is better to air differences rather than to let them smoulder, I am taking this opportunity of writing to you.

Last time I was asked I contributed to the Description Guide. When it appeared, I picked up a copy and found, on the back of it, an insulting statement to faculty members telling them that before they "ripped off" a copy, they should remember that it cost the students eight cents.

Now you could not issue the Guide without the wholehearted cooperation of the faculty. You are asking us to give our time, however short, to preparing statements for your publications. My time, and that of my fellows, is certainly worth more than the 8¢ in question, and one would expect a complimentary copy of the Guide as a matter of course. This, however, is not the point. I would not care if I obtained a copy or not, though I think one ought to be offered, but greatly resent the tone and content of the statement on the back.

Insult was added when, on seeing students unpacking another student publication, this time directly addressed to-students and faculty, I picked one up to glance at and was truculently told by the people doing the unpacking that these cost the students money. Needless to say I left the copy.

Students might, I think, remember that their fees cover only about a third of the cost of their tuition. The rest comes from the taxpayers of Massachusetts among whom are my colleagues and myself. We therefore contribute, and that handsomely, to the education of the students apart from giving our services. On the latter theme allow me to add that I give far more time to those students who want it than I am required to give by the University and paid for. I do this gladly, and I am sure these sentiments are also those of colleagues.

Under the circumstances, therefore, I have made up my mind to contribute nothing further to any student publication, especially not to the Guide, unless an apology is published to the faculty and an invitation issued to those of the faculty who have made publication possible, and issued in courteous terms, asking them to take one copy each.

Sincerely,
EDWARD FEIT
Associate Professor Political Science

Or A Ripoff?

To My Fellow Students:

Nick Apostola, Chairman of the Academic Affairs Committee, gave me this memo to read after he had received it. I asked him for a copy, which he gave me, and I subsequently decided that every student should have the opportunity to read Mr. Feit's words and thoughts concerning the students he teaches.

Mr. Feit earns $18,269.68 for working a nine-month year. This past summer he made $500 for doing research for the University; that was only for one month's work. Mr. Feit did not contribute to the last Course Description Guide, the one for Fall 1972. He failed to even read correctly–the Guide costs 30¢ per copy, not 8¢.

Mr. Feit, an Associate Professor of Political Science, seems to forget that students also pay taxes; he is not the only one burdened by our government. He also shuts his eyes to that fact that hundreds of our brother and sister students could not come back to school this semester because they didn't have enough money to pay the semester bill, but Mr. Feit complains that he, who is making $18,269.68, shouldn't be forced into paying for a 30¢ "student publication".

He feels that he is doing us a favor by writing out a Course Description for the Guide, yet what really is happening is that we, the students, are giving him a free opportunity to advertise his course so that his enrollments will increase and he will receive an even larger salary.

Mr. Feit enjoys exploiting the students. He thinks that because he is a faculty member, everything should be given to him; that the students should pay for the Student Union-Campus Center, while he derives pleasure and use from the builiding equally as much as do students. Mr. Feit, while making $18,269.68, refuses to bear even a small portion of the burden that is borne by students. He will continue to rip-off Collegians, Course Description Guides, and other student property because he continues to believe in aculty superiority.

Well, fellow students, should Nick apologize?

Marshall T. Spriggs

(p.s. If he replies, we will know that he ripped-off a Collegian, won't we?)

Olympic Tragedy

To Our Jewish Brothers:

As a member of the Christian community, I wish to express my shock and grief at the tragic deaths of the members of the Israeli Olympic team at the hands of terrorists. I wish to extend my deep sympathies to the families of those killed. I know that at least most of the rest of the Christian Community here at UMass share my feelings. It would seem that even the Olympics are not a secure haven from man's inhumanity to man. Hopefully and prayerfully, this tragic event will move all of us another step closer to recognition that hate and violence can never bring us a better world. The most powerful world changing force for the better in the world today is true, unselfish, perfect love. To seek and find that perfect love should be the heartfelt goal of us all. Once again I join our Jewish brothers and sisters in sorrow over their loss. God grant that it may never happen again.

Though we have our differences, God is our witness that we love you. Shalom,

Dana Lee Phipps

Letters To The Editor

As in previous years the MDC will continue to print letters to the editor. The only requirements are that they be typed at sixty spaces, double-spaced and absolutely no longer than two pages in length. All letters must be signed and the author's address and telephone numbers must be included. No letter will be published without this information. Also, no letters will be printed without the name of the author. Please note this change in policy.

All letters are subject to editing either for content or space according to the judgment of the editors. Also, due to space limitations, we do not guarantee that all letters will be printed.

Cease And Desist

To the Editor:

As a new semester begins and the election campaigns begin in full force, I am pleading with you to restrict the number of times you bring up the following subjects, if only for whatever little sanity remains in any of us:

1) George McGovern's war record. Anybody that cares, knows about it already. One PT-109 should come along only once in a lifetime.

2) Your attacks on Spiro Agnew. Just because he will not bend over to kiss your fat little liberal asses somehow makes you people feel he is as narrow minded as you are.

3) Praise for the IRA. I must admit here is a group with more courage than myself. I sure do not have the guts to kill the mother of ten children, set off two hundred pounds of gelatinite in a crowded shopping center or toss a hand grenade into a bar. Those IRA are sure brave.

4) Criticism of Gov. Sargeant's attitude towards the UMass budget. There are bigger and more important considerations (read WELFARE) in the Commonwealth. believe it or not, than what goes on here in Amherst.

5) Praise for Chancellor Bromery every time he acquiesces to "non-negotiable" demands. Because he and his administrators do not have the guts to keep the school open in a crisis, or say "no" to a few spaced out freaks, is no reason to regard him as the Second Coming.

6) Finally, your "Collegian" guilt editorials. Your journalistic flagellations on racism, sexism, ecology, etc. are something you can recite while you are at Confession. Please stop trying to shift all your guilt on someone that does not share it as you do. If your simplistic solutions are so viable, how come you people are here at Massachusetts Cow College, and not in Boston doing something (aside from demonstrating.)?

Frank Baglione, are you still with us?

U.Y.A. Appeals For Volunteers

University Year for ACTION, UYA as it is called is starting its second year this semester, and still has openings. For those who do not know what UYA is, it is time to find out. UYA represents a new model of experience based education that many schools are moving towards.

UYA is part of the federal ACTION program, the conglomerate of federal volunteer programs. UYA has programs at 27 campuses across the country, UMass is the largest.

UYA takes student volunteers and places them in anti-poverty related agencies to work for a full year. The student becomes a regular staff member of the agency, but he receives full academic credit from the University, and a living stipend from the federal government.

Students work in the area of Health, Economic Development, Education, Consumer Protection, Administration of Justice, Housing, and Environmental Protection. They work in such agencies as Holyoke Legal Services, Belchertown State School, Northampton Jail, Springfield Model Cities, and Westfield Detention Center.

There are 64 volunteers placed in 22 agencies for Phase III, but there are still 19 slots open. These can be filled only before the end of the add-drop period.

These openings consist of Volunteers needed to work placements such as one in the area of housing, at Brightwood Social Services in Springfield. He will work with public housing tenants. Two Volunteers are needed in the area of education at the Title I Resource Center in Springfield. Also in the area of education, three more Volunteers are needed to teach physical education in the elementary schools in Holyoke. UYA Volunteers provide the only P.E. program these kids have. Four Volunteers are needed for the Westfield Detention Center to provide new programs for the juvenile delinquents incarcerated there, to try and help them adjust back into society. There are 9 openings in the area of Legal services. Northern Worcester County Legal Services is a new agency placement that is just being approved. The students there will work in five areas: Consumer protection work, such as investigating complaints and conducting surveys; Welfare rights; Family Law, doing work with such things as divorces, adoptions and law reform research; Housing, organizing tenant groups and investigating tenant complaints; and an Administrative Assistant is needed in the office to help run the program.

If you are an undergraduate or graduate student, and you are interested in this program, you should call the UYA office at 545-1381. This is an opportunity to get out of the classroom, and do something of real value, while getting an education. There will be a UYA table at Undergraduate registration today if you need information or have questions.

Aren't you glad they did away with all these signs and with them the confusion of last semesters course change day? Or are you still confused?

Nigerian Literature Is Subject of Course

The English department will offer two new courses this semester which were added after the Course Description booklet was printed last spring. "Modern Nigerian Literature" (English 380G, schedule no. 272615) will be taught by Chinua Achebe, a Nigerian novelist who is a Visiting Professor from the University of Nigeria. The course will introduce students to the physical and historical setting of oral traditions in Nigeria and to various novelists, poets and dramatists such as Tutuola, Okigbo, the Onitsha Market literature and Professor Achebe's own novels. It will meet Tuesday evenings at 7:30 in Bartlett 301.

The second course is titled "The Idea of Progress in America" (English 380D, schedule no. 275338) and it will be taught by Charles Nichols, a Visiting Professor from Brown University. Professor Nichols is an authority on American and Black literature and he plans to conduct this class as a seminar with each student presenting at least one oral and one written report. The course will attempt to define the idea of progress and its origins in the enlightenment with emphasis placed on the contribution of American writers and thinkers from Benjamin Franklin and Thomas Jefferson to Norman Mailer and Herbert Marcuse. The relation of progress to concepts of natural rights, the perfectability of man, moral law, science and determinism will be discussed. The class meets on Thursday evenings at 7:30 in Bartlett 301.

Asian Americans Studied

The Five-College Studies program will offer a colloquim on Asians in America, course number 386 (undergraduate number) and course number 686 (graduate number). It will meet 1:25-3:55 Monday, Sept. 11, Converse 3-2, Amherst College, where later meetings will be scheduled by a consensus of the class.

This course is offered to both undergraduate and graduate students through the School of Education, University of Massachusetts for 300 modular credits (full course credit).

It is the intention of this course to examine contemporary literature, ideas, and issues of Asian Americans as well as considering the historical experience of Asians in America. There will be a particular emphasis on developing the ideas of ethnicity and identification of Asians in America as they were influenced by the institutions, values, aesthetics of mainstream America. The course will address itself to both Asians as well as non-Asians.

Decorative Arts Offered

Contrary to earlier announcements, The History of the Decorative Arts will be offered by the C & ID Department for this Fall semester, conducted as before by Richard Rainsford. It will meet in Skinner Auditorium on Monday, Wednesday and Fridays at 3:35.

Admission is limited to majors in Interior Design, Art, and Environmental Design, or by permission of the Instructor. The course traces the development of human interaction with objects, using common household items from various civilizations as mirrors of their cultures.

Mr. Rainsford is available in Room 317 Skinner Hall or by telephone at 545-2739.

Labor Economics Studied

Ronald Ehrenberg will teach Economics 347 - Economics of the Labor Market. Emphasis will be placed on the forces which influence the distribution of income and methods to alleviate poverty. Throughout the course economic theory, empirical data, and policy applications will be interwoven.

If you have any questions, stop by Thompson Hall, Room 934, or call 545-0846. The only prerequisite is intermediate level microeconomics (now called Economics 203). Hopefully, this course will dispel the notion which some people have that economic analysis is sterile and useful only in blackboard exercises.

Witching Increased

History 185, "New Approaches to the Study of History", which this semester will focus on the social origins of the 1692 Salem witchcraft episode, has just added four new sections. For admission, see Pat Tracy, 718 Herter, on Thursday, Sept. 7, or Friday, Sept. 8, or come to Thompson 102 on Monday, Sept. 11, at 12:20.

Asian Studies Course Unveiled

The Asian Studies Program has been able to make a major addition to its offerings in the area of Japanese culture with a new course taught by Professor Yoshio Ozawa: Asian Studies 230 "Japanese Art and Culture" (Tu/Th 1:00-2:15, 102 Stockbridge Hall; no prerequisites). Since this course was cleared too late last spring to appear in the regular notices or catalogues, it is quite likely that most of the people who would be interested in it are not yet aware of its existence. This course will continue through both semesters; the fall semester will deal with the background of Japanese art (mainly painting, sculpture, and architecture through 1573). Cultural and historical background will be emphasized and instruction will be through lectures, slide presentations, and class discussions. For a student who will have time for only one course in Japanese civilization, this class will be an effective survey. It will also be an invaluable complement to courses on Japanese history, literature, politics, and language for those who plan to pursue Japanese or East Asian studies. At the same time, those interested in art will have an opportunity to gain a thorough introduction to one of humanity's richest artistic traditions.

Starting in the fall, the Asian Studies Program will be able to offer a three-year sequence in Chinese (Mandarin), a three-year sequence in Japanese, a three-semester sequence in classical Chinese, and several courses in various aspects of Chinese and Japanese linguistics. In addition, there will be several courses on Chinese and Japanese literature in translation taught under the Comparative Literature Department. For more information on these courses as will as the many other UMass courses dealing with East, South, and Southeast Asia see the ASIAN STUDIES COURSE LIST FOR FALL 1972 and the FIVE—COLLEGE ASIAN STUDIES COURSE LIST, both of which are available in the Asian Studies Program office in 804 Thompson Hall (545-0886).

Proposals are being submitted for the establishment of undergraduate (B.A.) majors in Chinese and Japanese language and literature. Although it will take several months before the proposals are officially approved, students wishing information about the majors should come to the Asian Studies Program office.

There is no major in "Asian Studies" as such, but a proposal has already been submitted for the establishment of an "Asian Studies Certificate" to supplement B.A. majors in established disciplines. Under this arrangement, a student would follow an ordinary B.A. program (such as in Anthropology, History, etc.) but would include within his or her program twenty-four credits worth of courses from the ASIAN STUDIES COURSE LIST. The Asian Studies Certificate would thus supplement a B.A. degree by giving a student recognition for a substantial amount of interdisciplinary work in the general field of Asian Studies. This certificate program is open to all students. For information about the program students should come to the Asian Studies Program Office.

Counseling sessions in regard to the Chinese and Japanese majors, the Asian Studies Certificate, or any of the relevant courses may be set up by contacting the Asian Studies Program office. All inquiries are welcome.

Mutts Inherit Many Millions

DEERFIELD BEACH, Fla. (AP) - The 81 canines who inherited $14.5 million from their late mistress still lead a dog's life. And unlike a neighborhood mutt, they can't even enjoy a romp with children or a romantic alliance under the moon.

When Eleanor E. Ritchey died in 1968, she left her entire fortune of $14.5 million to 150 stray dogs she had collected over a 15-year period.

But a handful of relatives contested the will, saying she had "lost contact with reality" in 1967 after neighbors filed a lawsuit which forced her to move the dogs to their present home.

Four years of litigation and many stock splits later, the estate had grown to about $18 million - most of it in stock of the Quaker State Refining Co. founded by Miss Ritchey's grandfather, Philip Bayer.

On Aug. 28, a Broward County Court settled the dispute. Four relatives not included in the original will receive 5 per cent each. The court upheld bequests of $5,000 to one of Miss Ritchey's longtime employes and $4,000 for the education of the employe's son.

The rest went to the dogs.

While four years may not be too long in the life of men, it's half a dog's life, and some 69 of the original 250 had gone to that Big Boneyard in the Sky by the time the litigation was finished.

But the 81 survivors are assured of ending their days in pampered-if sexless-luxury on a 180-acre ranch in this community north of Fort Lauderdale.

Miss Ritchey originally kept the dogs on another ranch nearer Fort Lauderdale, but neighbors, complaints about their loud and sometimes prolonged barking caused her to buy the isolated spread where they now live.

Only about a dozen of the 81 dogs are purebred animals. The rest are all-American mutts.

They will most likely spend their lives in a 4-by-10 foot fenced run, getting out most days for a short romp around the fenced compound far from the fringes of the estate.

Miss Ritchey's will provides that the money will go to Auburn University for veterinary research after the last dog is dead or 20 years - whichever comes soonest - so the animals are segregated by sex to make sure there are no future heirs.

Demont Stripped of Olympic Gold

MUNICH (AP) — The tragedy-marked Games of the 1972 Olympics resumed Wednesday after being stunned by "twenty hours of terror" and trouble escalated for the United States as swimmer Rick Demont was stripped of his 400-meter freestyle gold medal.

The International Olympic Committee took away Demont's gold medal because the 16-year-old world record holder from San Rafael, Calif., failed to pass the routine dope test.

Demont had taken a drug containing ephredine-specifically banned by IOC regulations-to ease an asthmatic condition.

The presence of this drug in his system forced Olympic officials to withdraw him from the 1,500-meter race, in which he also held the world record. The event was won by teammate Mike Burton.

There will be no gold medalist in the 400. The gold will be declared vacant, meaning that Brad Cooper of Australia, who finished second, will get only the silver medal.

The action marked the first time since the notorious Jim Thorpe case 60 years ago that an American Olympic athlete had been stripped of a medal after he had won it. Thorpe, one of the greatest athletes of all time, won both the decathlon and penthathlon in 1912, only to have the medals taken away later when it was learned he had accepted money for playing semi-pro baseball.

The incident might have been avoided with closer attention to the problem from U.S. administrative personnel and physicians.

They were aware of the dangers, since disqualifications of athletes for use of the drug have been common and well publicized.

This was the second major blunder-or oversight-of the American team during these Games.

Earlier, the team's two fastest sprinters, Eddie Hart and Rey Robinson, co-world record holders, were disqualified for failing to report on time for a preliminary heat in the 100. It was a case of misreading the schedule.

Meanwhile, the Munich Games sought to shake off the effects of the Arab terrorist raid on the Israelis' Olympic quarters which ended with a police shootout at a military air field near Munich and a helicopter explosion that left 17 dead.

Eleven of them were athletes, coaches and trainers of the Israeli team, memoralized in a special service Wednesday at the stadium.

It was there that the 84-year-old Avery Brundage, the outgoing president of the International Olympic Committee, boomed out the answer to the guerrillas' act of violence that sickened the world:

"The Games will go on."

The competitions resumed several hours later.

The Americans hope to get back on the beam by picking up their first handful of medals in track and field Thursday. They also will try to move into the basketball final.

The youthful basketball team under the veteran coach Hank Iba will play Italy on Thursday night and, if victorious, will take on the winner of the game between Russia and Cuba for the gold medal Saturday night.

The Americans, with only one gold medal to show for the first five days in track and field, are looking to 1-2-3 sweeps in both the 110-meter hurdles and the men's 400-meter race when competition resumes Thursday in the Olympic Stadium.

Rod Milburn and Willie Davenport, both of Baton Rouge, La., are favored to run 1-2 in the hurdles and Tom Hill of Knoxville, Tenn., an Army lieutenant, has his eye set on taking at least the bronze.

John Smith and Wayne Collett, a pair of former UCLA speedsters, and Vince Matthews of New York, will battle it out for the high spot on the victory stand in the 400 meters.

The day's other track finals include the hammer throw and the women's 400-meters, with no U.S. medals likely in either, and the first five events of the rigorous, 10-event decathlon.

America's best bet in the decathlon, won by a U.S. athlete seven of the last eight times since 1932, is Jeff Bannister, a 6-foot-3, 200-pounder from Los Angeles who is good in every event except the pole vault. Jeff Bennett of Vinita, Okla., and the U.S. Army, who stands only 5-8 and weighs 152 pounds is the other U.S. contender.

With both East and West Germany eating into the metal harvest in a wide variety of sports, there appears little hope that the United States can achieve its 1968 production of 107 medals, 45 of them gold.

The Soviet Union has surged ahead of the United States in gold medals 26 to 25 but the United States held the overall lead with 25 gold, 25 silver and 21 bronze for a total of 71. The Soviet Union's breakdown was 26-21-17 for 63. East Germany had 16-14-18 for 48.

Chris Heads For Open Semis After Beating Russian

FOREST HILLS, N.Y. (AP) — Chris Evert, the 17-year-old from Fort Lauderdale, Fla., had to survive a third-set tiebreaker to oust rallying Russian Olga Morozova Wednesday in a quarter-final match in the U.S. Open Tennis Championships.

Chris, the No. 3 seed, had to break the Russians' service in the 12th game to force the tiebreaker, then flashed through it with a 5-1 edge to finally win 3-6, 6-3, 7-5.

The young blonde joined defending champion Billie Jean King, Long Beach, Calif., Australian veteran Margaret Court and ninth-seeded Kerry Melville of Australia in the women's semi-finals.

Mrs. King, the current Wimbledon Queen and No. 1 seed, will play Mrs. Court, a six-time champion, while Chris goes against Miss Melville.

Mrs. King advanced with a 6-2, 7-5 victory over eight-seeded Virginia Wade of Great Britain; Mrs. Court had to work hard for a 6-4, 4-6, 6-4 decision over Rosemary Casals, the No. 3 seed from San Francisco, and Miss Melville eliminated upsetminded Pan Teeguarden of Los Angeles, 6-0, 6-2.

Miss Teeguarden had reached the quarter-finals by way of a stunning upset over second-seeded Evonne Goolagong in a third round match.

In men's fourth round action, unseeded Tom Gorman of Seattle and Roscoe Tanner, a Stanford student from Lookout Mountain, Tenn., joined three other Americans in the rough of eight.

Tanner, a 20-year-old lefty, turned back John Cooper of Australia 6-2, 7-6, 7-6, while Gorman breezed over Dick Stockton of Port Washington, N.Y., 6-4, 6-3, 6-3.

The once-dominant Australians managed to get only one player in the quarter-finals, laconic veteran Fred Stolle, who continued his string of upsets with a 4-6, 7-6, 6-4, 7-6 victory over 11th seeded Cliff Drysdale of South Africa.

As pictured above, the action promises to be hot and heavy in both men's and women's intramural football this fall. Entries for football are due Monday, September 11 (which means you have to organize your teams NOW!). Entry forms may be obtained in the Intramural Office, 215 Boyden.

Other intramural activities with impending entry deadline dates are men's and women's tennis singles (Sept. 13), men's, women's and co-rec tug-o-war (Sept. 13) and men's, women's and co-rec badminton (Sept. 13).

ChiSox Lose

CHICAGO (AP) — Joe Rudi's two-run homer and Don Mincher's pinch two-run double featured a six-run third which swept Oakland to a 9-1 thumping of the Chicago White Sox Wednesday and boosted the A's lead over the White Sox in the American League West race to four games.

Oakland's Ken Holtzman, now 16-11, gave up a run in the first inning when he yielded a walk and two of the seven hits he scattered in an effective performance, but the A's moved ahead 2-1 in the second. Singles by Reggie Jackson, who also doubled and hit a solo homer in the fourth, and Mike Epstein, a sacrifice and Sal Bando's double produced the runs.

Then the A's knocked out Sox starter Tom Bradley, 13-13, in the third when second baseman Mike Andrews dropped Bert Campaneris' pop fly for a three-base error.

Sox Blank Yanks; Tigers Win Too

By BOB ESTELLE

The Boston Red Sox won a 2-0 game from the New York Yankees in the first of three games to be played in Fenway Park. The BoSox won it on strong pitching by Jack Curtis and Bob Bolin and a strong defense lead by Rico Petrocelli and Reggie Smith. Curtis got his ninth win and Bolin recorded his second save. Both of Bolin's saves, incidentally, have occurred since his recall from Louisville.

The Red Sox runs came in the fifth inning when, with two out, Carl Yastrzemski hit a liner off the left field wall that got by Yankee centerfielder Bobby Murcer that went for a triple. Then, Smith parked a line drive into the centerfield triangle for his 18th home run of the campaign.

pitch t o Spikes put a scare into the crowd as the rookie pulled it just barely foul into left field. Then, on a three and two pitch, he struck out swinging.

The Sox also had some threatening moments in the fourth, when with two on and one out, Doug Griffin flied out to Murcer in center and losing pitcher Mel Stottlemyre fanned Curtis. They also threatened in the eighth when, with one out and the bases loaded, Smith was forced at the plate on Griffin's grounder to Gene Michael and Bolin hit a hard liner right at the Yankee shortstop.

The Sox, with that win, didn't gain any ground as the Tigers won their game with Baltimore by a score of 4-3. That game was highlighted by a three run first

The Race

	Won	Lost	Pct.	GB
Detroit	71	60	.542	--
Boston	69	59	.539	1/2
New York	70	62	.530	1-1/2
Baltimore	69	62	.526	2
Cleveland	61	70	.465	10
Milwaukee	53	79	.401	19

The Yankees threatened to score in the third, sixth and eighth innings but never got the clutch hit they needed. With men on first and second in the third, Curtis got Murcer on a deep fly ball to Ben Oglivie in left and then struck out Roy White. In the sixth, Murcer lead off with a single to left and then, Petrocelli made the play of the game by backhanding a hard hit ground ball by White and forcing Murcer at second. Felipe Alou made up for that as he doubled off the left field wall. But Alou and White were left stranded as rookie Charlie Spikes popped up to Luis Aparicio at short and Reggie made a great catch on Celerino Sanchez' deep fly to right field. The eighth inning produced a scare into the 18,235 that saw this game when, with two out, White and Alou put together back-to-back singles. Sox manager Eddie Kasko decided to remove Curtis and replace him with the aging Bolin. Bolin's first inning by Detroit off loser Jim Palmer. Mickey Lolich got the win as Chuck Seelbach picked up the save.

This pennant race should prove to be most interesting. Not just by the fact that four teams are involved and are only separated by two games but because of the effect that last spring's strike has on not only the AL East but on the rest of the major leagues as well. In the American East, for instance, the four teams fighting for the race have all lost games with the other contenders and this has put an uneveness into the schedule as Detroit will play a total of 156 games this season, the Yanks and Red Sox will play 155 and the Orioles will play 154.

WINNIPEG, Man. (AP) — The Russian ice hockey team rallied with two goals late in the second period Wednesday night and tied Team Canada 4-4 in the third game of an international exhibition series.

Each team has a victory plus a tie in the eight-game series. The next game will be played in Vancouver Friday with the final four matches being held in the Soviet Union.

Russia's Alexander Bodunov slapped in his first goal of the series with an assist from Vyacheslav Anisin at 18:48 of the second period to tie the score 4-4.

The Russians retaliated with a short-handed goal at the 3:16 mark when Vladimir Petrov beat Tony Esposito with a 30-footer, but Team Canada went ahead 2-1 at 18:25 of the first period on a goal by Jean Ratelle.

The Russian team then scored its second short-handed goal after a sloppy play by the Canadians. Valery Kharlamov beat defensemen Pat Stapleton and Bobby Clarke and got a shot past goalie Tony Esposito at 12:56.

A Few Early Choices

NEW YORK (AP) — With the regular star gazer in Munich, Germany, busily covering the Olympic Games, the first week of the college football picks have fallen upon this backup man.

The opening weekend of a packed schedule which includes powerhouses such as last year's national champion Nebraska, No. 2 Colorado, fourth-ranked Arkansas, No. 7 Alabama, and the nationally televised opener pitting Tennessee against Georgia Tech.

Colorado 35, California 3-The Big 8 shows its power behind the running of Charlie Davis with Coach Eddie Crowder and the rest of the Buffaloes predicting a national championship.

Alabama 24, Duke 0-Bear Bryant's defense is still awesome and even with graduated Johnny Musso, the ground game is relentless.

Mississippi State 28, Auburn 14-State has a talented black quarterback in Sophomore Melvin Barkum and the Tigers will find out quickly how much Heisman Trophy winner Pat Sullivan will be missed.

US Boxers Advance

MUNICH (AP) — Two U.S. Air Force Sergeants-welterweight Jesse Valdez and bantamweight Ricardo Carreras-beat two Russians Wednesday night and assured the United States of at least two Olympic boxing medals.

Carreras defeated Vasily Solomin 3-2, while Valdez was impressive in winning a 5-0 decision over Anatoly Khohlov.

Both winners moved into the semi-finals, where they are guaranteed bronze medals, if not better.

Valdez, 25, overcame a nervous first minute while he was puzzling out the Russian lefthander, who had both height and reach advantage. Khohlov landed with lefts and rights before Valdez began to bore in and reduce the effectiveness of the Russian's jab.

Fighting from inside, Valdez scored with a series of combinations, including two bolo punches to the Russian's stomach.

By the middle of the round, the Russian was bleeding from the forehead.

Valdez' semi-final opponent will be a tough, young Cuban, Exilio Correa, who outpointed Guenter Meier of West Germany, a medal winner in the 1968 games.

Student Room Requests Exceeds Supply

By DON BISHOP

As classes for the semester begin today, some students on campus are faced with the dual problem of selecting alternate courses, while not yet having permanent housing on campus.

The housing problem became evident yesterday as a sizeable number of students arrived here on registration day. A number of those coming Thursday found they did not have a room on the floor or even in the dorm where they thought they were living.

The difficulties seem to have come about as a result of a number of factors, including the new registration system itself and the late requests of several hundred students to be given housing on campus.

The Housing Office felt certain yesterday afternoon that the majority of students temporarily located in Hamlin House and the Campus Center would be given permanent dormitory rooms by the first of next week and possibly sooner. Members of the Housing Office staff have been working on the problem virtually round the clock.

According to Housing Office Director Bruce Cochran the occupancy level for all dorms on campus, is on paper presently over 100%. What this figure includes however, are those rooms momentarily being held for students who signed up for them last spring, but who have not yet arrived at school.

With the new registration system allowing people an option on when to come back to school, the Housing Office and the various dorms have been forced to wait additional days before releasing the rooms of students who do not show up. Dormitory Heads of Residence started on Thursday to telephone those students who reserved rooms but who had not yet arrived.

Cochran indicated that the present on campus housing shortage was partially due to the late requests for housing of several hundred students who could not find housing off-campus. He stated that the university had reserved spaces in the dorms for 11,300 back in May. Within the last 5 days alone some 400 to 500 students have been trying to get back in the dorms, reflecting the continuing inability of the local communities to provide off-campus housing for all those students who want it.

According to Cochran, maximum capacity for the dorms is somewhere around 11,750, so it appears that even after it has been determined who won't be coming back to their rooms and all those in temporary rooms have been found a permanent place, the occupancy level for this semester will be well above the 93% level of first semester last year.

Cochran added that the main problems have been in the male dorms rather than female dorms. Only one eighth of the temporary occupants of Hamlin House were females, and Cochran thought that they would be moved out before the weekend.

There are a small number of students that are presently tripled Cochran said. He emphasized however that this would also be strictly a temporary situation.

'Orange' Author To Speak

Few contemporary writers can claim the record turnout of successful books which Anthony Burgess has produced. In sixteen years he has had critics' acclaim for sixteen novels and eight works of non-fiction. One of his books, "A Clockwork Orange", is currently being run in motion picture houses throughout the world, a production by one of the film world's leading producers and directors, Stanley Kubrick.

Anthony Burgess will be here on Monday, Sept. 11th, at 8 p.m. in S.U. Ballroom to speak under the sponsorship of the Distinguished Visitors Program on the subject "The Meaning of A Clockwork Orange".

An extremely versatile man, Anthony Burgess has been a teacher, an education officer in the British Colonial Service, a composer, pianist, translator, a reviewer of books, music, television and records for British magazines and newspapers, and an active participant in the theatre world. He is on the staff of the Tyrone Guthrie Theatre in Minneapolis as writer and consultant. He translated and adapted Edmond Rostand's "Cyrano De Bergerac" for the Minneapolis theatre group and will write plays and adapt others and assist in selecting works for the repertory.

Mr. Burgess' latest published work in the United States is "One Hand Clapping", but among his other well known books are "Urgent Copy", "Re Joyce", "Enderby", "The Novel Now", "The Long Day Wanes", "Shakespeare" and many others.

In the Fall of 1972, Mr. Burgess will become Distinguished Professor at the City College of New York, a position similar to those he has held at Columbia University, Princeton and other leading American educational institutions. He has also been a very popular lecturer for college audiences.

John Anthony Burgess Wilson - he began using the two middle names, Burgess being his mother's maiden name - was born in Manchester, England, in 1917. He graduated from Manchester University with honors and after six years in the British Army became a schoolmaster for the next nine years. He joined the British Colonial Service in 1954 and served as Education Officer in Malaya and Borneo until 1959, when he began his career as a writer. While he was writing books he was making his living by journalism, reviewing television, music, records and books for British newspapers and magazines.

Mr. Burgess' first wife died after 26 years of marriage and a long illness. He is presently married to the former Liliana Macellari, who was a don at Cambridge University.

In 1968 Mr. and Mrs. Burgess left England to make their home in Rome, Italy. In articles and interviews at the time of their departure from England Mr. Burgess explained that his reasons for leaving England to make his home elsewhere were based on the high taxes in Britain and the general attitude toward writing as a profession. In the matter of taxes, a writer can pay 80 to 90 percent in income tax in one successful year after many threadbare years, contrary to the situation in the United States, where a taxpayer is allowed to average his income back over five years.

When interviewed by the British press when his decision to move from England was announced, Mr. Burgess said: "Britain does not like her writers very much. It humiliates them in its Honors list. A man who sails around the world gets a knighthood and all poor Evelyn Waugh ever wanted was a knighthood. Of course, he never got one. All Muriel Spark was given was the O.B.E. (the Order of the British Empire), which is what Mary Quant got for inventing the miniskirt."

UMass Grad Student Knew Slain Israelis

George Eisen, 29, a graduate student at the University of Massachusetts and a native of Tel Aviv, cried when he heard that 11 Israeli Olympians had been killed by Arab terrorists.

That was Tuesday night. Yesterday he still spoke with a catch in his voice. Eisen knew four of the Olympic athletes personally from his days at Wingate Institute, a college in Israel for physical education teachers.

Wingate is also a sports center. And Eisen remembers studying, working, living with the Israeli athletes.

"The problem is that these people (the terrorists) have guns," Eisen said. "And they are cowards, because only cowards can kill innocent people."

Eisen, an Israeli Army veteran who fought in the Six-Day War, said, "It is hard to understand this mentality that kills." Amitzur Shapira, athletics coach, was a "really great guy," whom Eisen had as a physical education instructor in track and field.

"We studied together, worked together — he was really a great guy," he said.

Zeev Friedman, weightlifter, was an Israeli immigrant from Poland, who "found a bed" in Israeli, Eisen said. He was "a fine sportsman". And another friend.

Jakov Springer, weighlifting coach, was older than the others, Eisen said, and was connected with the sports center, where there were training camps.

Eisen was at Wingate from 1965-1967. Later, he taught in a high school near Lod. Currently working for his master's degree in physical education, he hopes to remain in this country until he gets his doctorate.

Then he will return to Israel, he said.

Creditless ROTC Stays; Future Uncertain

By ROBERT L. SCHEIER

The Reserve Officer Training Corps (ROTC) is still on the University of Massachusetts- Amherst campus, but stripped of credit by the Board of Trustees and facing a dubious future.

Both the Army and Air Force sections of the program on campus are currently operating without contracts with UMass as a result of the loss of credit. School officials indicate the Army is still negotiating with the school over the credit issue, the Air Force program may leave UMass in another two years.

The administration has told the Air Force program not to enroll freshman or sophomores, in the wake of the Air Force decision not to renew its contract.

ROTC lost its credit in the wake of a student strike last spring in response to the mining of Haiphong harbor by President Nixon. During the strike, the building housing the ROTC program-- Dickinson Hall--was occupied for five days by students seeking the ouster of ROTC from campus.

Col. Paul H. Fischer, head of the division of military and air science at UMass, said the Air Force contract with the school stipulated its courses would be given credit on the same basis as other courses at the school. He said the contract which expired June 30 was not renewed after the Board of Trustees removed the credit.

Fischer said he would ask the University to make arrangements for several of the 30 ROTC students on campus who need their ROTC scholarships to attend school. He said none of the students had dropped out of the program because of the loss of credit.

The director of the Army unit on campus, Colonel George I. Connolly, said he wouldn't know the effect of the decision on enrollment until next semester. "Most of the students who are in ROTC are in it because they are interested in it, and they know what the situation is," he said.

Dean David C. Bischoff, assistant to the provost, said the Air Force decision not to renew its contract was a "fairly clear" signal the program would end in two years.

He said, though, that the Army was still enrolling students at all levels and was willing to go without contract with the school for another year while it trys to reach an agreement on credit.

The Board of Trustees' action puts into effect an earlier vote by the UMass Faculty-Senate, Bischoff said. The Senate had not objected to several proposed ROTC courses earlier in the year, he added.

According to Bischoff, the Army and Air Force had wanted their courses judged for credit on the same basis as all other courses on campus, while the Faculty-Senate had felt ROTC professors and courses were under less control by UMass than other courses.

"There is some middle ground we should strike for," he said, "that makes sense for the Faculty- Senate, the military, and the students."

"I think it is too late for the Air Force," he added, "but the Army is reluctant to leave the campus, and we're trying to work out an arrangement."

The ROTC program--which came to UMass in 1946--was one of the key issues in the spring student strike this spring at UMass, with students in favor of and opposing ROTC on campus distributing petitions to be presented to the Board of Trustees.

According to Col. Fischer, 4100 authenticated signatures were collected by those in favor of keeping ROTC on campus, while those calling for its ouster collected approximately 3400.

A group of about 100 persons, including members of Vietnam Veterans Against the War and a group calling itself the Coalition Against Oppression, occupied Dickinson Hall. They demanded an end to alleged racism and sexism on campus, as well as the ouster of ROTC from Dickinson and the creation of a "Center for Social Change" in its place.

Com. Screening Panel Formed

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

The first meeting of the newly formed SGA President's Council, charged with advising the Student Government Assocition President, Area Governments, the Student Senate and the SUG Board was held yesterday.

The only substantive issue considered at the meeting was the formation of a screening panel to interview and recommend students to fill vacant positions on student government committees. The panel will recommend students to SGA president Larry Ladd for appointment, subject to the Student Senate's approval.

Also discussed were dorm telephones and a planned student government conference.

The screening panel's first task of the semester will probably be to recommend students for positions on the Student Union Governing Board, the Fine Arts Council and the Athletic Council. John Hogan, speaker of the Student Senate, said the panel may have to fill up to 500 positions.

The panel will be composed of the chairperson of the committee in question, a member of the committee, two minority representatives and one Area Government president.

Disclosed at the meeting was that all lobby telephones in dormitories which have room phones would be made "red disk" phones. This would make them unable to place or receive off-campus calls. Lobby phones in dormitories which do not have room telephones would remain able to call off-campus.

Bob Moriarty of the Purchasing Department said this was done because persons off-campus were making uncollectible collect calls to lobby phones. Moriarty said the bill was over $900.

The switch will take place in October.

The purpose of the Student Government conference planned for October is two pronged; to teach new SGA officials and student senators how the campus works and discuss problems and issues that affect the entire campus.

Women Getting Mouth Cancer

CHICAGO (AP) - Women are smoking more and getting more cancer of the mouth as a result, two California dental researchers say.

This is one of the findings of Drs. Sol Silverman Jr. and Michael Griffith of the University of California School of Dentistry, San Francisco.

Smokers have a six-times greater risk of developing cancer of the mouth than nonsmokers, and the risk for women is nine times as great, they wrote in the September issue of the Journal of the American Dental Association.

"The cigarette habits displayed by the women in this study may account for the sudden and alarming increase of mouth cancer among women," they said.

Women also had recurrence of cancer of the mouth more frequently than men, probably reflecting, they said, "the greater reluctance on the part of women to reduce or stop smoking."

Silverman and Griffith studied 104 men and 70 women with oral cancer, except for cancer of the lip. They followed these patients over a period of time to evaluate their smoking habits and the occurrence of second primary cancers.

Eighty per cent of the cancer patients habitually smoked cigarettes at the time their cancers were diagnosed. Of the 116 who were followed for a year or more, 61 per cent continued to smoke.

Eighty per cent of the cancer patients habitually smoked cigarettes at the time their cancers were diagnosed. Of the 116 who were followed for a year or more, 61 per cent continued to smoke.

Of those who quit smoking, seven per cent developed second oral cancers.

Of those who continued to smoke but at a reduced rate, 16 per cent had second oral cancers, and 56 per cent of those who did not change smoking habits had additional cancers.

W. German Jews Warned Of Mailed Bombs

(AP)--The Olympic flag flies at half staff in the Munich Olympic Stadium during memorial service for the 11 Israeli team members killed by Arab guerrillas. On the field are Olympic team members. A crowd of 80,000 filled the stadium to capacity.

BONN (AP) - West German Jews were warned Thursday that terrorists may try to kill them this weekend with bomb packages disguised as Jewish new year's gifts.

At the same time, police tightened security after a reported threat of fresh violence by Arab guerrillas unless West Germany releases the three Arabs who survived Tuesday's Olympics massacre that left 11 Israelis, 5 Arabs and 1 German policeman dead.

And Egypt threatened "decisive action" against West Germany after Bonn accused Cairo officials of being partly responsible for the horror deaths in Munich.

Chancellor Willy Brandt's government told the 32,000 Jews in this country that it received a tipoff from an undisclosed foreign source that they may be the targets of mailed bombs this weekend during Rosh Hashanah.

A German Interior Ministry spokesman did not identify the terrorists. He said the packages may be sent from various places in Europe by persons pretending to be business people.

In Munich, Police Chief Manfred Schreiber said at a news conference the hostages had been "doomed men" regardless of German actions.

"Our only hope to save them was if the Arabs made a mistake," he said.

Schreiber said the Israeli government had repeatedly refused to yield to terrorist demands that 200 Arabs held in Israel be freed in exchange for the hostages.

He added that Tel Aviv expressed full confidence in the measures of the German police and only recommended that they try to stall for the maximum amount of time.

The games went on disconsolately, the five-ringed Olympic flag at half staff. Munichers watched in dazed near-silence, their hopes shattered of staging the "Getmutlich"-friendly, happy, care-free-Olympics.

In Jerusalem, 10 of the slain Israelis returned home in coffins draped in Star of David flags. Weeping relatives, high officials and thousands of other Israelis jammed Lod airport for a memorial service. The 11th victim, David Berger, was flown to his family's home in Cleveland, Ohio, for burial Friday.

Egypt Says Massacre West Germany's Fault

CAIRO (AP)-The Egyptian government said Thursday West Germany was at fault in the Munich massacre and that the Bonn government must bear full responsibility.

Egypt had nothing to do with Tuesday's shooting in which 17 men died, a government spokesman told a news conference. It was Egypt's first official reaction to the massacre.

The spokesman noted reports saying Egypt refused to help in Chancellor Willy Brandt's efforts to seek the release of nine Israeli hostages held by Arab terrorists at Olympic Village.

"The commandos and the Israeli hostages were killed in a German ambush, by German bullets and in a U.S. base in Germany," the spokesman said.

German Ambassador Hans Georg Steltzer was summoned to the Foreign Office for clarifications pending possible "decisive action," the spokesman added.

Steltzer said he was surprised at the Egyptian threat of action. He met with Froeign Minister Murad Ghaleb before the news conference and said it had been "a friendly atmosphere and a frank exchange of views."

CLEVELAND, Ohio (AP)-Funeral services will be held Friday for Olympian David Berger, whose interest in the birth of a nation inadvertently led to his death.

Kidney Patient Has Baby

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) - A woman kept alive for four years with an artificial kidney machine has given birth to a healthy baby here and doctors said it's a first in history.

The birth was announced by doctors at the Presidio Army Base Letterman General Hospital, but they did not reveal the mother's name due to her "fragile health."

The baby girl was normal at birth although six weeks premature, doctors said. The mother, 25, had been kept on the machine all through her pregnancy, they said.

The mother has suffered from a potentially fatal kidney disease for the past four years and must be attached to the dialysis machine up to 10 hours at a time, three days a week.

Nixon Nixes Tax Increase; But May Revise Tax Base

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon pledged Thursday he will not seek a tax increase if he wins a second term but left open the possibility that he will propose revisions in American's tax structure.

The President's views were relayed to newsmen by two Republican congressional leaders and by White House press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler. They were expressed amid continuing GOP charges that Democratic nominee George McGovern's proposals could result in a 100 per cent tax hike.

"A vote for McGovern is a vote for higher taxes, ...higher spending, ...higher employment, ...higher everything."

House Republican leader Gerald Ford then reported, "The President said this morning that there will be no tax increase proposed by this administration."

Later, Ziegler told newsmen, "We plan no tax increases and we contemplate no tax increases ...in the second term."

Responding to questions, Ziegler said he could not predict whether the President might propose revisions in the tax structure which could involve an increase in some taxes and a lowering of others.

Changes in the tax system might be proposed, Ziegler said, "if there are ways to bring further equity..." But he said he had no specifics on such changes because decisions have not been made.

He acknowledged that the administration is still studying the value-added tax a form of national sales tax. But, he said, a value-added tax "does not equate to tax increase."

The value-added tax has been mentioned as a possible method of bringing reductions in property taxes-local levies which Nixon has declared should be lowered.

Scott and Ford also mentioned Nixon's request that a $250-billion ceiling be clamped on federal spending.

Scott sarcastically called McGovern's proposals a "scheme-a-day" program and a program which would result in a $100-billion increase in the federal budget and would require a 100 per cent tax increase.

Ford repeated the estimates and said they excluded some McGovern proposals which "are too vague."

O'Brien Says Phone Was Tapped

WASHINGTON (AP)-Lawrence F. O'Brien said Thursday his telephone in Democratic National headquarters was tapped for several weeks prior to the abortive Watergate break-in and the eavesdroppers made daily transcripts of his confidential talks with leading Democrats.

O'Brien, then national Democratic chairman and now chairman of Sen. George McGovern's presidential campaign, also said some of the Watergate break-in suspects had set out May 27 to bug McGovern's headquarters but failed.

His declarations to a news conference were the latest round in the steadily expanding controversy which began June 17 when five men with eavesdropping equipment were arrested inside Democratic headquarters at the Watergate complex in Washington.

O'Brien said he had learned of the tapes, transcripts and unsuccessful attempt to bug McGovern headquarters on "unimpeachable authority."

He would not specify the source.

O'Brien said his attorneys had asked the Justice Departinent for any information it has concerning his private papers, documents and telephone conversations, but the department had refused. The department has been investigating criminal aspects of the case while a federal grand jury has been taking testimony.

O'Brien has filed a $1 million civil suit against the five men arrested.

O'Brien accused Atty. Gen. Richard Kleindienst of "the most appalling footdragging" in the case. But he said "the conspiracy of silence of President Nixon, John Mitchell and Richard Kleindienst will not deter us."

O'Brien also demanded that Mitchell, who quit as head of Nixon's re-election effort July 1, release reports of investigations which Mitchell said Nixon campaign people had made of the Watergate case.

O'Brien also announced that his attorneys would take depositions in the civil suit from more persons during September, including White House domestic adviser John Ehrlichman and Nixon campaign director Clark MacGregor.

At the White House, Ehrlichman said he was not aware of any effort to take a deposition from him but that if one was taken, he would say: "No one in the White House was involved" in the incidents.

He did not say specifically whether he would agree to give such a deposition.

Hoffa Refused Permission To Visit North Vietnam

WASHINGTON (AP)-Secretary of State William P. Rogers Thursday revoked the passport validation that would have allowed former Teamsters Union President James Hoffa to travel to North Vietnam.

It was reported earlier that Hoffa had wanted to go abroad about effecting the release of American prisoners of war.

State Department spokesman Charles W. Bray said Rogers acted after he "satisfied himself there were irregularities, including irregularities in the procedures by which the validation had been approved."

Bray also said Rogers "among other things does not believe private American citizens should be involved in negotiations with respect to the release of prisoners of war."

Initial reports indicated Hoffa had been invited by North Vietnamese trade unions to meet with American POWs and to discuss the situation involving their release.

The State Department initially said Hoffa had presented a letter addressed to Rogers saying he had been invited and that passport officials had issued Hoffa a passport and validation to travel to Hanoi.

Late Thursday afternoon, Bray announced the revocation of the travel validation, which does, however, not affect Hoffa's actual passport.

Bray said the original validation issued for Hoffa's travel as well as that for his attorney, William L. Taub, came from an unauthorized State Department employe.

The spokesman would not disclose the employe's name, but said that this was one of the technical, procedural matters on which Rogers based his action.

It was unclear exactly where Hoffa was Thursday.

Hoffa was released on parole last December after spending four years and nine months in a federal prison following his conviction on jury tampering and mail fraud charges.

The U.S. Parole Board approved his travel overseas for a 30-day period.

A North Vietnamese source in Paris said the North Vietnamese trade unions denied that they had invited Hoffa.

Israeli Troops Hit Lebanon

TEL AVIV (AP)-Israeli troops entered Lebanon Thursday in search of marauders after clashes in which two Arabs and an Israeli were killed.

A military spokesman said all troops returned safely about eight hours later. He did not say whether there had been any fighting in Lebanon.

The Palestinian news agency Wafa reported in Beirut that Israel was massing troops and tanks along the borders of Lebanon and Syria in an "unprecedented buildup."

The Israeli patrol struck across the border following two clashes near the Israeli settlement of Baram.

In the first incident, on Wednesday, an Arab and an Israeli soldier were killed, the spokesman said.

A patrol searching the area Thursday killed a second guerrilla, then crossed the border in pursuit of other raiders, chasing them to the Lebanese village of Yaroun, he said.

The spokesman did not mention the massacre in Munich, for which Israeli newspaper editorials have urged swift retaliation.

The Palestinian agency reported several Israeli tank columns took up positions near Lebanon and Syria while helicopters landed troops throughout the day.

The agency's correspondent in south Lebanon said: "The unprecedented size and strength of the buildup leaves little doubt that Israel plans to launch a large-scale attack on Lebanon and Syria to avenge the commando attack on the Israeli sportsmen in Munich," the agency added.

Jaki Byard Descends On Hill

This Saturday, September 9, Orchard Hill is proud to bring to campus Mr. Jaki Byard, pianist supreme. Mr. Byard came in eighth in the 1972 Downbeat Critics poll in the "established talent" category and second in "deserving of wider recognition" category. He is most respected in all music circles.

Mr. Byard has played with people like Rahsaan Roland Kirk, Elvin Jones, Charles Mingus, Maynard Ferguson, Charlie Mariano, Richard Davis, Joe Farrell, Alan Dawson, and many others. He is presently teaching at the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston.

There will be an informal reception and rap session with Mr. Byard at seven p.m. in the Webster Lounge, Orchard Hill, and it will be followed by a performance at nine. Both events will be free of charge and everyone is welcome and urged to attend.

Mr. Byard will be accompanied on drums by J.R. Mitchell, who has played with Pharoah Sanders and Byard Lancaster, and on bass by Robert Miller, who has played with Stanley Sogroff.

The Orchard Hill community hopes that Mr. Byard will be only the first of a long series of free, important performances on Orchard Hill. Donations will be accepted for the purpose of continuing the Orchard Hill Concert Series.

Sites For Fire Station Proposed

A memorandum from Town Manager Allen Torrey was presented to the Planning Board last night suggesting two places for a proposed new fire station for the town.

The two sites for the fire station, recommended by Fire Chief John T. Doherty to Torrey, are both off of East Pleasant Street, one near the University of Massachusetts Tillson Farm and the other near Eastman Lane.

The sites are near the proposed northeast bypass, and according to Torrey the new location would be sufficient to cover Amherst in case of a fire.

The property on which the recommended sites are located is owned by the University. The Board decided to forward the memorandum to Town Planner James Cope for further study.

In other action the board reviewed a site plan by Robert Glass for the addition of two buildings at the corner of Triangle and East Pleasant Streets.

Questions were raised by the board concerning traffic flow, and especially an entryway from East Pleasant Street to the proposed commercial area.

Also questioned by the board was the positioning of a drive-up photo drop-off center, saying that this might cause traffic problems with cars stopping and backing up traffic.

The reason for the rejection of the proposed entryway on East Pleasant Street was that it would move the commercial area too close to several houses.

Board member Theodore Bacon suggested that the houses owned by Glass be taken down. Glass recently acquired the parcel of land at the corner of East Pleasant and Triangle including several houses.

By adding the entryway "you would be creating a situation that would be disastrous to people living there," said Bacon.

Glass explained that it would not be economically feasible at this time to raze the buildings, but that it would possibly be feasible in several years, adding that he had a plan of slowly phasing out the three wooden structures.

The board decided to write a letter to the Zoning Board of Appeals listing their suggestions and unfavorable recommendation of the East Pleasant Street entryway.

In addition to the Glass site plan, the board released lots 9, 10, 11, and 13 on Iduna Lane upon a request by Howard Atkins.

Also released upon a request by William H. Lachman Jr. was lot 38 in the Meadow Brook Subdivision.

A revision to a subdivision plan requested by Otto J. Paparazzo Associates was signed by Board Chairman Mrs. Alice Epstein.

The revision request concerned reducing the size of a commons area within the Amherst Fields commercial project from approximately 1.3 acres to one acre.

Californians Favor Death Penalty

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) - Californians favor retention of the death penalty by 66 to 24 per cent - the biggest margin 16 years it has conducted public opinion polls on the issue, the California Poll said today.

The other 10 per cent of the 1,032 persons interviewed face to face in the July 31-Aug. 6 poll had qualified opinions or no opinions on whether to keep or do away with capital punishment, pollster Mervin D. Field said.

Public interest in the issue is great in California where an initiative constitutional amendment on the November ballot would restore the death penalty which the state Supreme Court ruled unconstitutional last Feb. 18.

In the poll completed last month, those interviewed were asked the general question of whether they favor "doing away with the death sentence, or do you feel that the death sentence should be kept as a punishment for serious crimes."

Westover Story Continues

By GILBERT J. SALK

Last spring, after Richard Nixon ordered the Haiphong Harbor mined, over 1,200 people were arrested for participating in non-violent civil disobedience at Westover Air Force Base, over a period of six weeks, and without a single incident between police and demonstrators. Vigils and leafletting at the Westover gates has continued on a weekly basis throughout the summer.

In order to bring the returning academic communities up to date on events, and to give people a chance to reinvolve themselves in the Westover activity, a week of information-sharing and dialogue is being planned by some of the participants who were in the area during the summer.

"Westover Revisited?" will appear on a different one of the Five-College campuses each evening. The exact schedule has not yet been determined. It will present a film of last spring's Westover action, present information on the current legal situation for those who were arrested, and solicit ideas on where to go from here.

Gil Salk, the UMass draft counselor, is coordinating "Westover Revisited?" on this campus. He has requested that people who wish to help plan the program contact him in the Draft Counseling Office in 923 CC.

In addition, events are continuing at Westover. A number of top brass are inspecting the Base today, and in preparation the Base Commander sent letters to all officers' wives living on the Base to be sure that their hedges and lawns were neatly trimmed. In response, a protest vigil will be held today from 7:15 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. at the Westover Main Gate. Leaflets pointing out the absurdities of concern over neat hedges while Air Force planes are defoliating Vietnam will be distributed to personnel entering and leaving the Base. No civil disobedience is planned. Vigil organizers urge members of the University community to attend for as long as they are able.

Get A Directory

Preliminary Telephone Directories listing local addresses and phone numbers for all undergraduate students and Stockbridge students are now available at the Campus Store. This directory is based on information available as of August 16, 1972. No free copies will be distributed to University departments. They must be purchased through the Campus Store at a cost of 25¢ each.

A final directory, including graduate students, will be published in October, based on updated information received from students through either Registration or the Housing Office, 235 Whitmore.

Chess Master Takes On All

Chess master Stephen L. Jones, a math professor at UMass, will give a simultaneous chess exhibition this Saturday, Sept. 9, starting at 1:00 p.m., on the Amherst Town Common. He will play all comers simultaneously. There is no charge for either players or spectators. In case of rain, the simul will be held in the Old Junior High School Gymnasium in back of the Amherst Post Office.

Prof. Jones won the U.S. Amateur Chess Championship in 1968. In the most recent rating list issued by the U.S. Chess Foundation, he is ranked first in New England. For more information about this exhibition or about the sponsoring UMass Chess Club, contact Jim Lane, 387 Hills South, UMass, 546-9479.

Strict Curbs Dictate Hunt For Alligators

GRAND CHENIER, La. (AP) — The first legal alligator hunt in a decade began yesterday, and the State Wildlife and Fisheries Commission called it a "harvest" rather than a "hunting season."

The experimental open season on alligators here in Cameron Parish will go on for 13 days.

The 60 or 70 trappers who have been commissioned by landowners to hunt the alligators are not in the business for fun.

They have a living to make; and, at $5 a foot for the hides, they would sooner forego some of the stringent regulations placed on them—especially the one that says they may not hunt at night.

The Wildlife and Fisheries Commission has outlawed night hunting to make it harder for poachers to operate, so the legal trappers have resorted to "fishing" for the reptiles.

While You Were Away

Two days ago Student Government Association President Larry Ladd and three aides released a report on the activities of the Student Government during the summer past past. Included were issues which had been left unresolved when most students left last May and a few developments which have just come to light. A few of them are worth mentioning here.

Mike Best, Assistant Professor of Economics, was rehired with a three-year contract. Judging from reaction to his firing received by this newspaper last semester, most students are glad to see Best back.

The UMass Board of Trustees voted in August to give the Student Senate the power to spend Student Activities Tax Fund money on or off campus, as long as it relates to the purpose of the Senate. This major change in policy gives the students much more flexibility financially and has good long-range potential.

The report also looked into the activities of the Student Union Governing Board. Ladd has indicated his displeasure with this body, saying that he wants it to be more directly accountable to the students, and he has set up a special panel to screen candidates for appointment to the Board.

So there should be some interesting things happening as a result of this summer's work. Only time can declare it a success or a failure, but it's nice to know that at least someone was watching the shop while we were all away.

That Does Not Compute

Kenny Pearlman wanted to go to the University of California at Santa Cruz, but his guidance department at Chelmsford High School didn't allow his application to go out until after Santa Cruz had already accepted its capacity of freshmen. Santa Cruz is best known for its "cluster colleges," which decentralize a large university. At Santa Cruz, there is recognition of the fact that today's university may be too much for one person to deal with.

Here at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst, there is a difference of opinion as to whether or not it is fair to ask the individual to deal with the total University. If he/she is a student, the answer is no, according to the Future University Report, according to Terry Mollner, and according to whomever hired Thomas Campion to be Vice-Chancellor with his sole responsibility being Special Programs. Clearly the understanding has been reached that one into twenty-one thousand won't go, at least not comfortably. Human beings are being encouraged to decentralize.

The computer, on the other hand, is getting extremely presumptuous. In a confidential conversation with H. Hills Skillings, University Scheduling Officer, the computer suggested that it would be able to handle scheduling for Fall, 1972, with a sophistication that would amaze all. There is one thing that must be said of computers. They only make big mistakes.

Kenny Pearlman came to Amherst this summer for Freshman Orientation. He was attracted by the new Project Ten Experimental Academic Program, and applied. Acceptance into this program means, among other things, that courses which fulfill regular University Requirements need not be taken. Kenny preregistered before learning that he was accepted into the Program. When he came back in September, his course choices were considerably different from in July. Tuesday he went to change his schedule. On Thursday, he received the schedule shown below.

At first his mind clouded with dark and unprintable thoughts. It is difficult to be told by a computer that you have no taste at all in choosing your own schedule. His every suggestion for his own intellectual betterment had been rejected by a computer. The computer, without ever speaking to him, had taken one cursory electronic glance at his hour plan, and bummed out completely.

Later Kenny discovered that the computer was at least partially in error. Two of his course selections were Project Ten courses. Every student who signed up for a Project Ten course was given "COURSE OVERENROLLED" on his/her schedule card. An aspect of decentralization is of course small classes, but there is not a school in the world with a teacher to student ratio of one to zero.

Why wouldn't the computer let anyone take Project Ten courses? At first everyone assumed that the computer still contained a program, written in 1969, which caused it to snarl and hiss and growl at the mention of Project Ten. Some, sensing a conspiracy, figured that the faculty of Project Ten had bribed the computer to give them a semester off with pay. The real reason is probably close to a paraphrase of an old Fenway Park expression, voiced by the concessionaires: you can't tell the students without a program. Every time anyone tried to feed the computer the schedule numbers of a Project Ten course, the computer regurgitated.

Kenny Pearlman may yet achieve 120 University credits and a bachelor's degree. Human beings may be letting him into courses beginning today. There was a fear circulating in the basement of Whitmore yesterday that Ken would major in Computer Science, learn how to outwit the computer, and thus have his revenge at some later date. Rumor has it that the Whitmore Bureau of Investigation has already started its dossier on Kenny Pearlman as a potential computer saboteur.

They needn't go to all that trouble, however. Kenny Pearlman is a self-styled nutritionist, one who yesterday was nearly driven to inventing Boone's Farm Crunchy Granola Wine. It would be easy enough for the computer to become his friend. All the programmers have to do is give the computer a tapeworm, one that eats organic people. Then Kenny Pearlman could go to classes just like all the other kids. Hoa binh.

McGovern in '72? Start Praying

"Greetings, scholars! Welcome to UMASS, our very own academic fantasy land in beautiful downtown Amherst. No doubt you've gone through the hassles of registrations, orientations, and alterations, etc....All ready for the swing of things. But wait, before you settle down to business, there's one more item...have you registered to vote, yet?"

No doubt this above paragraph sounds familiar. Perhaps you too have been approached by one of those zealous crusaders who are so eager to see that you exercise your right of franchise. Certainly their enthusiasm for democracy is commendable, but I'll bet my bottom dollar that their zeal for voter registration is motivated by a partisan concern rather than a genuine desire to enhance participatory democracy. That partisan concern couldn't be George McGovern, could it?

George McGovern's Grand Strategy for the Presidency rests in part on a theory that students, along with other alienated "blocs", will respond to a herd instinct and storm polls in November and pull the Democratic lever. By fusing these blocs into one lovely coalition, McGovern, so the theory goes, will ride merrily into the White House and unleash his crusade against war, poverty, unemployment, racism, sexism, indigestion, pollution, corruption, constipation, polarization, etc.

Let's face it. It is highly unlikely that the student population in America will give George McGovern the decisive support he desires, and even more unlikely that the American people will give it to George, either. If the election were held today, Senator McGovern would receive such an overwhelming repudiation that Barry Goldwater's '64 landslide defeat would look mild by comparison. And it is highly doubtful that registering more students will chip away at Nixon's margin. That margin has gone up, not down, in the past couple of weeks.

McGovern's loss in November will be unlike any other in recent history. It certainly won't be an enthusiastic mandate for the platform of the Republican Party, and certainly not in response to the personality of Richard Nixon. McGovern won't be able to claim, like the Republicans of the New Deal era, that the incumbent president was just too popular to defeat. Nixon never had the charismatic appeal that FDR had.

Many people, fired up by McGovern's victory in Miami, will be in shocked bewilderment in November. Why, they will ask, should the American people repudiate such a nice guy. Why will Richard Nixon, one of history's most uninspiring politicians, achieve such a landslide victory?

The answers to the above questions are what this columnist will attempt to deal with, in subsequent installments. The title of the series will be called "MCGOVERNISM", because at issue in the '72 elections is not personalities, but philosophies, and the entire McGovern candidacy is as clear-cut an "ism" as almost any other in recent history. Anybody who intends to vote in November owes it to his or herself to follow this series, for it may be the only questioning appraisal of McGovern in the local media.

Letters To The Editor

Why The Loyalty Oath?

To the Editor:

Do you solemnly swear to uphold and defend the State of Massachusetts under the penalties of perjury? You must if you want to work for any State agency including the University. Those who refuse to sign a loyalty oath to the state and federal governments will be fired.

I am scheduled to teach a section of Design in the Art Department this fall but the Personnel Office has just informed me that I will not be allowed to teach despite my signed contract unless I sign the loyalty oath card. I am writing to awaken the University community to this new law as the administration ought to have done last spring and to urge others to refuse to sign as I am doing. It might cost you a lot of money to do this since it is too late to secure jobs this semester at schools which honor freedom of thought and speech.

As I am opposed to the death penalty, involuntary servitude (the Draft), the waging of wars, compulsory indoctrination of children and numerous other policies of both governments I cannot endorse laws which enforce such policies. Yet I am not permitted to support only those laws which are palatable. As we pay our taxes in a lump so is our loyalty demanded without reservation. One must swallow the whole thing. By mixing the good with the bad the State makes it impossible for me to sign.

Those who have no objections to the character of our present government strong enough to prevent their signing may still object to the oath. We are all taught that a careful person won't sign a contract until he knows what it is in its entirety-he will take nothing on faith in a written agreement. But the constitutions are both subject to ammendment and interpetation which constantly changes. The signer is always in ignorance of the conditions of the contract. On this issue of agreeing to perform in a certain way in some future unknowable situation various religions have sensibly established rules against the swearing of oaths. How many German citizens foresaw their complicity in the massacre of millions of Jews when they swore allegiance to the German nation?

The government enlists you in its defense against an unspecified enemy - if later you should change your mind and recant you will be punished for perjury. What kind of loyalty is this which can be bought with jobs and threats? Its only the Lip Service Loyalty of the person who sees the oath as a stupid ritual which he must utter like a password to get into the clubhouse. He does not like to admit he is signing a blank check over to the government.

Some argue that the oath is useless and laughable since people sign it with all sorts of personal unspoken reservations. The act is called meaningless and therefore harmless. I reply that unspoken objections are no objections at all. The oath can't make people loyal but it does instill a fear of dissent and it does coerce people into demeaning themselves by lying. These are serious injuries to the individual. The threat of unemployment robs even the eager signer of the pride he might have felt in a free and voluntary declaration of his allegiance. He gets treated like the herd who must be threatened, cajoled and tricked into the ranks.

It is difficult to fix the source of the danger which has frightened this state into drumming up loyalty. Have taxpayers become so angered by political thievery that they plot revolt? Are we menaced by another state or a new Confederacy? Such an oath may be meant to protect the fatherland from secret agents. Picture the diabolical agent of the free-love communist state of Vermont at this moment working as a janitor in the State House and bugging the joint. See him sweat in fear as he reads the sacred oath card. Watch his hand shake violently as he attempts to sign. Pity the sobbing broken wretch as he is led off to jail. - The Spy Who Could Not Lie.

The oath aids violent revolutionaries by lending a patriotic aura to all who sign which the 5th columnist is happy to use as cover.

How meaningful is an oath from a political science professor who has taught in New York and Alabama and signed their oaths? Should he be trusted to carry the battle banner of Massachusetts (a codfish rampant on the field of mayflowers) against Rhode Island? Is such broadminded loyalty a sign of zeal or is he merely covering his bets? No doubt some will be found whose amoeba-like loyalty may be split-up amongst the 50 states and thrive - each pseudopod taking the shape of its container. But we are brittle vertebrates whose integrity is vital. Each has a limit to the shapes he can assume. We must treat our loyalty as we do our backbones - as single and not for sale.

SUG Too Powerful

To The Editor:

Why was it that the Student Union Governing Board found it necessary to find jobs for several of its members over the summer, to positions that never existed before and are not needed now, with student funds at $2.40 an hour for a guaranteed 40 hour week, and yet found it necessary to cut the hours for the average student to work part time at the Student Union Lobby Counter this year by cutting the work hours for students almost in half? Is there any possible reason for depriving the student body of the many services that the lobby counter supplies by forcing the lobby to close on long weekends and vacations (already a reality) and necessitating it to close at 8 at night instead of 10 for the rest of the year (a distinct possibility)? I truly doubt it. This is only a sample of the arrogant manner in which the S.U.G. Board recklessly uses its uncontrolled power. Are ordinary students not allowed to support themselves? Must one be a member of an elitist, power-oriented group to get a job? Should a student organization be allowed to have limiteless authority, yet function autonomously, allowing the rest of the campus no way to regulate their membership or their actions? The answer to this final question is a resounding no! The S.U.G. Board should immediately be disbanded.

Registration Litterbugs

To the Editor:

Upon leaving Boyden Gymnasium yesterday after attending my seventh registration day at UMass I was appalled at the litter covering the floors and steps leading up to the main gym where registration was taking place. The litter being mimeographed sheets of paper, I feel, presented a danger to the safety of the people having to use those often crowded stairs.

Whatever information they carried I do not know because to stop and pick one up with a herd of people following would be an unwise decision.

As I left I could just imagine what could happen to a student who had the misfortune to slip on that mess. Maybe one did.

This condition has been present all of the years that I've been here. Whoever distributes them should have smartened up by now and realized that most of the damn things go unread.

I suggest that if the information that they convey is so important then those responsible should seek to have the news printed in the campus newspaper as a news story or an ad.

I feel feel that the elimination of these mimeographed "flyers" would eliminate a hazard and also cut down on the wasted paper that has to be sent to the dump. Also their elimination would give the custodial staff more time to perform duties more important than picking up the trash discarded by thoughtless people.

Homophile League To Continue Their Services

A phone rings once, perhaps twice in a small office on the Student Union Balcony. One member of a sizeable and ever-increasing R.S.O. group answers, "Student Homophile League, can we help you?"

Often the voice at the other end of the line begins hesitantly yet anxiously to question some part of his or her own sexuality. Perhaps the caller is seeking information for a paper, a research project, or for a close friend or loved one. Whatever the purpose of each caller's inquiry, each call is dealt with candidly, respectfully, discreetly as they are received week after week throughout the school year.

In an attempt to continue their services to the university community throughout the new school year, the Student Homophile League has drafted the following introductory statement. They urge you to consider it carefully should you see the need to ask some serious questions about sexuality this year.

"Homosexuality is no laughing matter; and it is nothing to fear. The Student Homophile League is here on the university campus as a recognized student organization in an attempt to provide counseling, information, support, friendship, and personal growth opportunities to the Gay community of the area. As part of the league's services to the university community at large, members of the S.H.L. speakers bureau are available to provide speakers for rap-sessions and classes wishing to deal frankly with this area of human sexuality.

The league also maintains the largest and most comprehensive library of Gay books and periodicals in the area. This library is made available to inform all those interested and to help dispel the myths and countless halftruths which surround this much talked-about yet poorly-understood subject.

We, the members of S.H.L. realize that it is often no easy matter being a homosexual in a predominately heterosexual world. We realize also that it will be a long struggle for the Gay population in this nation, (eight million, at the lowest estimate), to achieve the respect and pride they deserve. S.H.L. is a first step toward gaining this pride and respect; for it is only through recognition and dialogue, coupled with direct action, that leads to any resolution of minority rights issues. We know personally that there is no need to feel guilty, dirty, or "perverse" merely because of homosexual capacities. Through S.H.L., many of us have come to know a freedom and a lack of fear, a certain pride in ourselves and in our life-style for the first time in our lives. We have gained good friends on this campus and have worked hard together to rid ourselves and others like us of the oppressed feelings so often heaved upon us by an ignorant and insensitive straight majority.

The members of the S.H.L. know what it is like to quail and quiver at their first encounter with the group. They, too, understand that many of you who read this article will be tempted to call in order to make some form of personal contact with others like yourselves. They know also that many among you will be apprehensive of the consequences, perhaps a bit frightened and will want utter discretion. We respect these feelings and wishes because many of us have had a most similar experience when we first contacted S.H.L. We urge you, however, not to be so fearful as to crawl back from life because you have been told by your parents, your church, teachers, politicians, police, courts, etc. etc. that you are bad and deserve to be punished for what you really are. We urge you to make this the year you more fully explore your own sexuality if you feel this is part of your conflicts. We remind you that Gay doesn't mean "alone".

The office of the Student Homophile League is located in room 413E of the Student Union balcony. That office is open daily on weekdays and can be reached by phoning 5-0154. Meetings will be held on an almost weekly basis throughout the school year and a notice of each meeting will be printed in the notices column of the Collegian. The first meeting of this school year will be held on Thursday, September 14th at 7:00 P.M. in the Campus Center building. Check the notices column on Thursday, or call the S.H.L. office for more information.

There is some question about when the town really was established. Daniel Gookin led a group of settlers to the spot where Worcester now stands and founded Quinsigamond Plantation in 1674. The settlers left a year later during King Philip's War and didn't return until 1684.

The name of the settlement was changed to Worcester at the second settling, and some sources say it then became a township. But, the settlers left again during Queen Anne's War of 1702. In 1713, they returned and in 1722 the General Court chartered Worcester and named it the seat of Worcester County.

The celebration begins today with birthday parties in some of the city's surrounding communities. The two weeks of festivities will be highlighted by a queen's coronation ball on Sept. 16, a nightly fireworks display from Sept. 18-23 and a 250-unit parade Sept. 24.

Special themes will highlight days throughout the celebration.

Phone Service Poor In N.E.

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

New England's rush to both the suburbs and rural areas and a swelling desire of man to talk has meant a busy signal for much of the region's telephone service.

At the heart of the problem has been a failure to foresee where people would live, who they'd call and how much they'd talk. At issue is the continuing rhetoric between the giant, virtually monopolistic, phone company and some consumer critics over who's to blame for the current problems.

Critics charge the phone company with mismanagement. They say the utility simply got caught with its pants down and failed to properly anticipate the nation's growth and now is forced to play a costly game of catch-up which often means poorer service at a higher rate.

The phone company says it isn't so.

Whatever the problem, the result has been a lack of sophisticated equipment where it's needed most in New England - in quickly growing areas of Rhode Island, eastern Massachusetts and southern tiers of New Hampshire and Vermont.

While most of the trouble is in southern New England, particularly the Boston area, even rural northern New England has a problem - long waiting lists for private lines.

For New England Telephone and Telegraph Co. the utility that controls most of New England's phones, all this has meant a costly plunge to catch up with demand.

Despite the irritation of telephone lapses, however, officials of the agencies that regulate the phone company in northern New England say overall service is adequate.

Their response sharply contrasts that of counterparts in Massachusetts. There, says John R. Verani, chairman of the state Department of Public Utilities, "service problems are rampant."

"The phone service in Vermont is generally acceptable," according to Rexford Roberts, telephone engineer for the state Public Service Board.

"I would say the phone service has improved over the last three to five years," he said.

In New Hampshire, Gerard O. Bergevin, one of the three members of the Public Utilities Commission, said he believes the phone company "is improving its record from month to month."

As in Vermont, most New Hampshire complaints come from the southern section of the state, the fast growing strip along the Massachusetts border.

The New Hampshire commission is conducting a study of telephone service because it is "aware that in certain areas of the state at times customer demand exceeds the company's capabilities to provide the high standard of service customers expect and should receive."

In Maine, the public Utilities Commission says it receives more complaints about the telephone company than any other utility - about 5,000 over the past 10 years. Most of these are from customers who want to switch from party lines to private lines.

"In certain parts of the northern states in areas that are rural or undeveloped," the spokesman said, "there are delays, and those delays are frequently rather lengthy."

The spokesman, who asked not to be identified, said that since these areas are sparsely populated, construction is expensive. It takes a lot of time and material to service a few customers.

The situation, he said, will take about five years to clear up.

Phone company critics maintain these situations could have been avoided with better planning.

"For some strange reason," says Francis J. Hickey, the Massachusetts DPU's executive secretary, "the company completely blew it in regards to the growth factor. They simply didn't expect this kind of growth at all."

And they miscalculated, Hickey says, because of poor management.

"Certainly you'd have to be an absolute boob not to anticipate new construction," he said.

One DPU official estimates that the company's projections of demand fell short by about 20 per cent.

When a phone call is too faint to hear, gets cut off in mid-sentence or simply doesn't go through, the problem is often a lack of cable-switching equipment and other central office machinery to handle increasing numbers of calls.

Complaints that there isn't enough phone company equipment to handle calls "would be justified in certain areas," the spokesman said.

But criticism of the company's predicting ability, the spokesman said, is ridiculous, especially from the government, which he said makes planning errors too.

"We've had situations where for reasons that are not immediately obvious to us, there develops for a period of over a couple of weeks a very distinct change in the volume of usage by customers." As a result, the equipment cannot handle the increased volume, he said.

A similar situation arises, he said, when a suburban town has a sudden increase in population or a community begins to shift from single family homes toward apartments or offices.

Scouting Up-To-Date

DOVER, Vt. (AP) — Lighting a campfire without a match and helping old ladies across busy streets were once the hallmarks of the Boy Scouts of America. Today's urban scout is more likely to know the treatment for rat bites while his California counterpart might hold a merit badge in surfing.

It's all part of making scouting "more relevent" 250 New England scouting professional leaders were told at a conference here.

"And we don't call them Boy Scouts any more," John Glass, the organization's national marketing director, said at Mt. Snow Wednesday.

"Studies have shown that the word 'boy' signifies immaturity, so we just call them 'Scouts' now," he said.

The New England professional scouters, he said, were attending the two-day conference to learn the details of a new philosophy aimed at making the program meaningful to boys in different environments.

The leaders were to return to their 32 New England Scout councils to explain the new emphasis to about 200,000 scoutmasters and other volunteers who in turn would present the program to about 750,000 Scouts in the region, according to Glass.

Glass said the volunteer workers would be taught to assume new duties as guidance counselors serving as "adult male leadership models."

New England scoutmasters, he said, would learn techniques needed when "sitting down with the boys and discussing their short-range goals in 'personal growth agreements' which scouting would help them reach."

Despite the new style berets and an optional elimination of the program's traditional neckerchief, Glass said the program changes "are mostly psychological rather than physical."

With "relevency" as the new watchword of scouting, he said, the program would encourage boys to set such diverse personal goals as improved school work or better communication with their parents.

The youngsters, he said, will no longer be required to adhere to nationwide standards and programs, but will be encouraged to develop programs which fit their locales.

For example, he said, Scouts in Vermont might choose to develop a merit badge in maple sugaring; Maine boys might opt for a merit badge in lobstering; and youngsters coastal areas might set for themselves merit badge standards in surfing.

ABA, NBA Merger One Step Closer

WASHINGTON (AP)-A Senate subcommittee approved legislation Thursday which would allow the merger of the National Basketball Association with American Basketball Association.

A key amendment tacked onto the bill, introduced in the Senate more than a year ago, would virtually eliminate the controversial reserve clause for professional basketball. The amendment would permit drafted players to be signed only for two years. After that point a player would become a free agent, able to negotiate on his own with any team.

This amendment could open the door to similar legislation involving other professional sports, a subcommittee staff member said.

The subcommittee added one amendment which applies to all major sports. It calls for the end to television blackouts in the home area of bowl and "unscheduled playoff games" which are sold out.

A spokesman for the subcommittee said this provision would not affect regularly scheduled playoff games-such as pro football's Super Bowl. He said, for example, that it would apply to playoffs involving two teams which were tied at the end of a regular season.

Other amendments would:

—Void the $1.5-million entry fee which the original bill would have permitted the NBA to assess against each ABA team as a condition for merger.

—Protect high school and college basketball games by providing television blackouts of pro basketball games on Tuesdays and Friday nights in areas where scholastic basketball games are being played. This could involve virtually the entire nation.

The bill, which was strongly attacked by many professional athletes in all sports, goes next to the full Senate Judiciary Committee.

The measure was approved by the Antitrust and Monopoly subcommittee. The amendments were passed unanimously by the five-man subcommittee, the spokesman said, except the one eliminating the entry fee. Sens. Philip P. Hart, D-Mich., and Roman Hruska, R-Neb., voted to retain the $1.5 million assessment.

Ashe Stuns Stan; Reaches Semis

FOREST HILLS, N.Y. (AP) - Arthur Ashe scored an amazing three-set upset over defending titleholder and current Wimbledon king Stan Smith Thursday to advance to the semifinals of the U.S. Open Tennis Championships.

Ashe, the No. 6 seed from Miami, used a piercing backhand to forge a 7-6, 6-4, 7-5 decision over Smith, the No. 1 seed here, in the quarterfinals.

Ashe, who won this title in 1968 while he was still an amateur, next goes against Cliff Richey, the No. 12 seed from Sarasota, Fla., who advanced along with Ilie Nastase of Romania and longshot Tom Gorman of Seattle.

Nastase, the No. 4 seed who was beaten by Smith in the Wimbledon finals, and the unseeded Gorman meet in the other men's semifinals Saturday afternoon, with Nastase a heavy favorite to make it to the finals.

Nastase ended the upset string of Australian Fred Stolle with a 6-4, 3-6, 6-3, 6-2 frolic over the 33-year-old veteran.

Gorman just got by unseeded Roscoe Tanner, a Stanford student from Lookout Mountain, Tenn. 7-6, 5-7, 7-6, 5-7, 6-4 just five games less than the maximum 65.

Richey looked bad in a 3-6 opening set loss to South African Bob Hewitt, but rallied to sweep the next three sets 6-2, 6-4, 6-2.

Rico, Harper Homers Put Sox on Top

By BOB ESTELLE

The Red Sox moved into first place tonight as they combined a 10-3 victory over the Yankees with a 9-0 Baltimore win over the Detroit Tigers. The Red Sox game was never close as they scored four runs before the New Yorkers drew blood. Sonny Siebert went the distance as Steve Kline took the loss.

The Sox first scored in the first when leadoff hitter Tommy Harper walked. Then, when he attempted a steal of second base, catcher Thurman Munson threw the ball into centerfield and Harper went to third. He then scored on Luis Aparicio's sacrifice fly. The second inning was even better. With two out, Doug Griffin and Siebert put together back-to-back singles and then, Harper put one over the left field wall to make it 4-0.

The Yanks were the next to score when with two out, Johnny Callison singled to score Munson and Bobby Murcer.

But the red-hot Sox retaliated in the sixth when Siebert led off with a homer into the left field screen. Incidentally, that was the 100th HR for the BoSox this year continuing a 27 year streak. After that, Harper was hit by a pitched ball and then, after Aparicio flew out, Kline was lifted in favor of veteran Wade Blasingame, acquired by the Yankees last June from the Houston Astros, who walked Yaz, got Reggie Smith on a pop up and delivered a home run to Rico Petrocelli.

With the two runs that came in the fifth off Ben Ogilvie's double, the score was 10-2.

The Yanks made a gallant try in the ninth when with two on and one out, third baseman Bernie Allen grounded out to Yaz at first as Roy White scored from third. Gene Michael then managed to get a base hit to score Callison. After pinch-hitter Rusty Torres' infield hit, Siebert got Horace Clarke to ground out to Doug Griffin at second to end the game.

The Oriole-Tiger game was a laugh as the O's got three in the first and added six more to win 9-0. Mike Cuellar got the win as starter Fred Scherman, normally a reliever, took the loss. Thus, the top four look like this:

TEAM	WON	LOST	PCT	GB
BOSTON RED SOX	70	59	.543	--
DETROIT TIGERS	71	61	.536	1/2
NEW YORK YANKEES	70	63	.527	2-1/2

Yes, ladies and gentlemen, the Red Sox have a good chance. Now they are in first and they have more games remaining at home than any other team in the race. And we all know how tough the Red Sox are in Fenway. Maybe, just maybe, this is the year.

Tigers Blanked

BALTIMORE (AP) - The Baltimore Orioles scored seven runs in the first two innings and trounced the Detroit Tigers 9-0 Thursday night behind the four-hit pitching of Mike Cueller.

A two-run double by Tommy Davis highlighted Baltimore's four-run first inning. Brooks Robinson, who singled to score Davis, also rapped a two-run triple in the second.

Fred Scherman, 6-2, normally a reliever who was making only the third start of his career, failed to retire a batter. He was replaced by Bill Slayback after giving up two singles and the double by Davis.

Slayback was touched for RBI singles by Robinson and Andy Etchebarren and was lifted in the second after Robinson's triple.

Cuellar, 15-10, allowed hits in the second and third innings, then retired 12 consecutive batters before Aurelio Rodriguez opened the eighth with a bunt single.

Boomer Does It

CLEVELAND (AP) — George Scott, who hit a home run earlier, broke a 1-1 tie with a two-run shot in the eighth inning to send the Milwaukee Brewers to a 7-1 American League decision over the Cleveland Indians Thursday night.

Scott powered his first homer with one out in the fourth inning to give starter Bill Parsons a 1-0 lead.

Carlton Gets 23rd Win

PHILADELPHIA (AP)-Steve Carlton posted his 23rd victory Thursday night as he pitched the Philadelphia Phillies to a 2-1 National League decision over the St. Louis Cardinals.

Carlton gave up nine hits and struck out nine, allowing the run in the seventh inning after two outs. His strikeouts gave him 272 for the season, the most ever by a Phillies pitcher. Jim Bunning fanned 268 in 1965.

The Phillies scored their first run off St. Louis starter Al Santorini in the fifth on Larry Bowa's 11th triple of the season-most in the major leagues-and another triple by Tommy Hutton.

Carlton, who has lost only eight, completed his 16th game in his last 19 starts as he earned his 100th major league victory.

US Cagers Advance To Finals

MUNICH (AP) - The United States sent its never-beaten basketball team into the finals against Russia and picked up two victories in track Thursday, but still could not catch the Soviet Union in the gold medal race of the Munich Olympic games.

Hank Iba's cagers, led by the scoring of Jim Forbes of Texas-El Paso with 14 points and the defensive work of Mike Bantom of Philadelphia, crushed Italy 68-38 and qualified to meet America's traditional court rival, Russia, for the championship Saturday night.

Hurdler Rod Milburn and quarter-miler Vince Matthews were the track aces who captured the gold medals.

Previously, the Americans had been able to grab only one gold-the 800-meter victory by David Wottle of Canton, Ohio-in five days of running, jumping and throwing.

But when the national anthem was played following Matthews' victory in the 400 meters, a victory-stand incident drew whistles and boos from some of the 80,000 spectators in Olympic Stadium.

After Matthews, a 24-year-old black from Brooklyn, N.Y. had won the 400 meters in 44.66 seconds, with Wayne Collett of Santa Monica, Calif., second, the two runners adopted a casual-and what was interpreted as a disrespectful-attitude during the playing of the National Anthem.

Matthews raised both arms over his head as he leaped off the stand. As whistles and cat-calls continued, Collett raised a clenched fist to the crowd before entering the portal of the dressing room.

The gesture was not as flagrant as the black gloved salute at Mexico City four years ago by John Carlos and Tommie Smith, which resulted in the expulsion of the two athletes from the Olympic Village, but there was speculation it might draw censure from the U.S. Olympic authorities.

Matthews denied that the two runners were engaging in any protest.

"We consider ourselves the best quarter-milers in the world-Wayne Collett, John Smith, Lee Evans and myself. Collett stepped up to show that we are a team," he said.

At the end of the day's events, the Soviet Union-with two victories in track and field, one in equestrian and another in women's volleyball-still led the United States in gold medals, 31-26. But the United States maintained its edge in total medals, 75-69. East Germany is third in both categories with 53 medals, 18 of them gold.

Dan Kamal

Ed. Note: The following is a figment of our writer's slightly biased imagination. But someday.....

"Well, Upton, it's almost time for the opening game of the regular season, and it seems that your Pats haven't quite improved to this point the way that you had hoped."

"Ah, yes, that is true, but I believe that given a little more time, the material we have is going to be a winner."

"But Uppie, isn't it going to take an awful lot of time to recuperate from the pounding the Broncos gave you?"

"Nah, that whole nightmare (and mind you, we do think of it as only a bad dream) was Daryl Johnson's fault. All the mouthing off he did hurt the whole defensive unit immeasurably. I mean, think about it, just because the guy was an all-star a couple of years, he gets upset because we kinda forgot about him. After all, it's hard to remember all the guys who play for you. Besides Daryl had a personality conflict with one of our coaches, and we can't tolerate that."

"Yes, Up, I was meaning to ask you about that. Don't you think Coach Mazur is taking kind of a hard line with the players? Being tough is one thing, but can the Patriots afford to lose some of the players they've lost recently?"

"Well, if you're talking about Kiner and Nance, you can't say I was wrong. Look at where they are now. On waivers."

"Let me make one thing perfectly clear to you. You writers are all alike--all you think about is winning. Well, it may take us a couple of years more than I expected, but when we do start winning, it will be with a bunch of football players who want to play football and nothing but football. They're gonna want to practice hard; they're gonna want to play hard; and goddamit, they're gonna win--for me, for Mazur, and for all of New England--and maybe even for Billy Sullivan! Then maybe you'll get off my back."

"That sounds pretty good, Uppie, but aren't you confusing attitude with talent? Let's face it, you're guys may be hungry, but th guys you have at linebacker, fullback, and defensive back could be sta ing, and they're still not going to do the job."

"What do you mean? Odell Lawson will be a great power runner. What's that, he's been cut? Oh, yeah, well Maitland's damn good and Tarver's even better--they just haven't really got started yet. And as for defensive backs, if only Carwell and Outlaw and whoever else we have back there cut down on their missed assignments, then we'll be all right. And linebacker--well we've got Cheyunski in the middle and two good ones on either side of him. I can't think of their names right now, but they must be good. Oh, what the hell's the use talking to you writers. Wait a minute--don't forget who we have at quarterback--THE Jim Plunkett. We'll never let him go. His attitude is good."

Candidates' Aides Seek Local Youth Vote

By ROBERT SCHIER

Top aides to presidential candidates Senator George McGovern and President Richard Nixon discussed their respective campaigns and made a pitch for the youth vote before an audience of 500 at Hampshire College Friday night.

Gregg Petersmeyer, who is a 23-year-old special assistant to the president, predicted the President would capture a majority of the youth vote in the November election, and asked the students to look at Nixon's Vietnam policy from the perspective of his "grand plan" for foreign policy.

John G. Stewart, the McGovern spokesman, charged the President had not come forth with specific tax reform proposals, and told the largely student audience the main issue in the campaign was "what would be different in this country with George McGovern as President."

Petersmeyer, who graduated from Harvard this year, is working as a special assistant to the President helping to organize the incumbent's drive for young voters. He said the President plans foreign policy considering the effects of a policy on other nations over a long period of time.

This "grand plan", he said, is designed to insure long-range stability in the world and could give the President a place in history as "the greatest peacemaker of the 20th century".

Citing the Nixon trips to China and Russia, Petersmeyer said the President has seized on "economic realities and splits in the Communist world" in formulating foreign policy.

"Nixon recognizes what motivates his adversaries," Petersmeyer added. "When he went for the summit in Moscow, it was a purely vested interest thing. Both sides had something to offer the other, so an agreement could be reached."

Stewart, who was a former legislative and administrative assistant to Senator Hubert Humphrey (the 1968 Democratic presidential candidate), said Senator McGovern could still win despite what he called some "difficult and horrible months" in the campaign.

Stressing McGovern's tax reform proposals, Stewart--currently a special assistant to McGovern's national campaign chairman, Lawrence O'Brien--said the current tax code is "shot full of loopholes".

He said closing alleged loopholes in the tax code and taxing "money made by money at the same rate as money made by men" could raise an additional $22 billion in tax revenue without raising taxes on those whose income comes from wages and salaries.

Referring to McGovern's proposed $30 billion cut in defense spending by 1975, Stewart said Republican charges that it would represent "unilateral disarmament" were "nonsense."

"McGovern came up with the proposal by starting from the beginning and deciding what was needed for the country's defense, rather than starting out with programs that are already going on," Stewart said.

Petersmeyer claimed the President will get the youth vote because only one out of four persons under the age of 25 lives outside of a family environment--either their own or their parents'.

He said these students would not vote according to "youth issues".

In response to a question, Petersmeyer defended the President's economic record, saying the country was in a sustained economic boom with some "soft spots" created by the cutbacks in defense and aerospace spending.

Stewart acknowledged it would be difficult to put McGovern's tax reform proposals into effect, but said growing public awareness of the tax issue--and the support of House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Wilbur Mills--could make it possible.

Both speakers received only perfunctory applause from the audience, which directed most of its questions to the Nixon aide. The questions ranged from what the Nixon administration is doing to control heroin traffic to representation of youth at the Republican National Convention.

After one student asked Petersmeyer to ask the President to outline his specific tax program, the assistant to the President said a tax bill Nixon had submitted to Congress in 1969 would begin to "change the direction" of the tax code.

Charles R. Longsworth, president of Hampshire College, got some of the loudest applause of the evening when he identified himself while conducting an impromptu grievance session with the students while waiting for the speakers to appear.

'Redmen' Name To Be Dropped

By ERNIE ROTMAN

Although most students are unaware of it, a long-lasting UMass tradition is about to fade away. The well known UMass nickname "Redmen" is about to become as archaic as an old western.

The whole affair was brought about last spring. It seemed that a group of American Indians from New York wrote a letter to the administration of UMass asking them if they were aware of the "defamatory" connotations of the word Redmen and if they would take any steps to curtail the use of this word.

One portion of the letter referred to "undesirable racial connotations" of the Redman nickname in citing their demand to UMass for the abolishment of the name from the school. The Indians claimed that there was and is an analogy between the words Redmen and nigger as they are occasionally directed to the respective racial groups.

Whitmore replied to the letter asking by all personnel, administrative staff, athletic personnel, and media to refrain from the use of the word Redmen as much as possible. One of the first actions put into effect was the removal of the headings Braves and Squaws from all UMass rest rooms.

However, some things cannot be changed, at least as of yet. The UMass baseball team, after having just purchased new uniforms, will have a difficult time removing the Redmen labels from their uniforms. The statue of Metawampe, as of this writing, has not been picketed by the American Indian Federation. One unusual point to mention, however, is that nobody, including this reporter, has been able to track down that mysterious letter that supposedly came into Whitmore from the Indians in New York.

According to S.G.A. President Larry Ladd, there is a possibility of a contest being run in the near future to give a new nickname to UMass. He also mentioned that all possible names would be screened to avoid unreasonable requests. As Dean Bishoff put it: "If the entries in the contest were not screened, we might end up with another 'Miss Football' incident." The previous statement refers to a male who ran in a contest that was to pick the football queen and in this previously all female contest actually came out the victor.

Dean Bishoff said that he was pleased with the possibility of the contest and that "the result of the University's responsive attitude of trying to change the nickname would make the transition easier."

There is no nickname yet although several have been suggested, both seriously and in jest. Among those suggested are the UMass Statesmen (which incidently was suggested at the time the name Redmen was picked and rejected quite quickly, according to Secretary McCartney), the UMass Minutemen, and even the UMass artichokes.

As of this semester, all UMass publicity items will delete the term Redmen and the Indian figure from their content. Those students that have any of these other items, though, might consider saving them for soon they will become antique items and could be valuable. Perhaps someday soon a collector may pay the same good money for a UMass Redmen sticker that he would for an old coin or a valuable stamp.

The dropping of the nickname "Redmen" is the reason the Collegian sports head on page sixteen is missing its Indian profile. When the new name comes, it will be filled.

Get Your Yearbook

Yearbook distribution will continue at the truck near the Student Union from 9 a.m. until 5 p.m. today, according to an Index spokesman.

He indicated that only two-thirds of those eligible had picked up their copies of the 1972 Index when the truck closed Friday at 5 p.m.

Anyone who paid the student tax both semesters last year may stop by the truck and present their "Index" card which they received in the registration packet.

For those who did not receive the proper card, alternate arrangements may be made at the trailer.

Housing Shortage Coming To End

By DON BISHOP

The early semester problems relating to the shortage of on-campus housing, appeared to be ending last night, although 99 students were still being temporarily housed in the Campus Center and Hamlin House.

According to Housing Office Director Bruce Cochran, the rooms still being held for students who had reserved them last spring but who had not yet arrived on campus, would be released at 12 p.m. tomorrow. This will clear the way for the permanent on-campus placement of those in the temporary housing.

The problems this year apparently developed for two primary reasons. One related to the fact of the new registration system being first tried this semester. The new system has allowed students to come back over a period of approximately one week as opposed to one or two days as in the past.

The other factor this year came from the last minute application of several hundred students, both graduate and undergraduate, to get back on campus. This was due to the usual shortage of off-campus housing.

Cochran had no definite figure as to how many rooms were still being held on Sunday. He stated that it changed from minute to minute as some students arrived late and it was confirmed that others were not coming back at all.

Officials in Hamlin House reported that 175 students had stayed for at least one night in the dorm. Of that figure, 64 were still there on Sunday. The Campus Center was holding 35 students yesterday.

While the Housing Office was able to report openings in the dorms as they learned of them, many students found permanent rooms for themselves, by personally checking with the Heads of Residence in the various dorms on campus.

One student, who moved out of Hamlin over the weekend, said that he was given the feeling that the Housing Office would find him something eventually, but that it would probably come quicker if he looked on his own.

Cochran stated that as far as he knew, there were no more than 5 triples across campus on Sunday. He expected these and the temporary residences in Hamlin House and the Campus Center to be cleared up by Wednesday of this week at the latest.

'Opening Celebration' Tomorrow

Musical groups, administrators, and town officials will welcome new and returning students to the University of Massachusetts-Amherst Tuesday, Sept. 12, with Opening Celebration 72-73.

Celebration will combine the usual freshmen convocation, freshmen reception, and opening convocation and add musical entertainment and an all-university barbecue-for the first time. It will also be Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery's first beginning-year talk to the University community; and the first time popular bands have participated.

Distinguished Teacher Awards will include three to faculty members and three new ones to graduate teaching assistants. The selections were made by a faculty-student committee after a nomination process in which all segments of the University community took part. With the awards go stipends from the Esso Foundation–$1,000 each for the faculty members and $500 each for the teaching assistants.

The University Marching Band, under the direction of John Jenkins, will play several selections, including excerpts from Simon & Garfunkel's "Sound of Silence", and marching tunes. Flight, a well-known area musical group which includes former UMass students, will do original jazz-soul material. The John Peters Quartet, which includes UMass students, will entertain with jazz, and Cornbread will play soul.

Greetings will be given by UMass President Robert Wood who will be introduced by Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs Robert L. Gluckstern. Student Senate President Larry Ladd will give the welcoming talk; and Chancellor Bromery the opening address.

The all-university Opening Celebration 72-73 will be at 3:30 p.m. in the field across from Southwest Residential College. The barbecue following will be free to UMass meal-ticket holders and $1 to others.

PLEASE NOTE: The press is invited to attend Opening Celebration and the barbecue which follows. Guest tickets needed for the barbecue may be obtained from the UMass News Bureau, Munson Hall. Telephone (413) 545-0444.

Tooze Battles Booze

MIAMI BEACH (AP) — Ruth Tooze, who has spent a lifetime battling liquor, is in Miami Beach this week for the kickoff of the WCTU's 1972 "Priorities for Victory" crusade against alcohol.

Mrs. Tooze has served as president of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union for 13 years and is expected to be re-elected for a 14th term at the group's 98th annual meeting which opened here Sunday.

She us undaunted by the odds against temperance. "I don't think we're losing. No effort for the right is ever lost," she said.

The 300,000 members of the WCTU and its affiliated youth groups are looking ahead to the organization's centennial two years from now.

Membership is open to any woman who signs the temperance pledge and pays her dues-"three dollars and 65 cents a year," says Mrs. Tooze. "A prayer and a penny a day."

The WCTU opposes the use of sacramental wine, fights proposed legislation to allow the interstate sale of liquor-flavored candy and frowns on the reconstruction of moonshine stills as tourist attractions in national parks.

"This is a cradle-to-the-grave organization," said Marie Caylor, the WCTU's public relations counsel.

Cancer Breakthrough

NEWCASTLE, England (AP) — Potential cancer sufferers may be identified long before physical symptoms appear, a British research team reported Sunday.

This discovery, they said, may point the way to an eventual breakthrough in treatment based on stimulating the body's own natural defenses.

The report came from Prof. E.J. Field and a medical research team working at Newcastle General Hospital. The team is sponsored by the British government's Medical Research Council.

Writing in the British Medical Journal, Field forecast that by the end of the century mass screening for cancer will be standard practice, and immunotherapy--an attempt to assist natural defenses--may be available to potential sufferers even before the site of the cancer is located.

He explained that the diagnostic tests involved are expensive and complicated and must be radically simplified before mass screening could begin.

The team's work is based on its discovery that the white blood cells of people with cancer develop a special reaction to a protein present in malignant tumors.

US Supports Israel In 2nd UN Veto

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) - The United States on Sunday vetoed a call on Israel to stop reprisal raids in the Middle East that did not carry a simultaneous U.N. condemnation of terrorism such as the Arab massacre of Israeli athletes.

Ambassador George Bush cast the second U.S. veto in Security Council History, declaring: "We seek for a world where athletes need not fear assassins and pasengers on planes need not fear hijacking."

Bush's veto followed joint vetoes by the Soviet Union and China of moves that would have linked the Munich Olympic tragedy to the Israeli air raids against Syria and Lebanon.

He said the Munich tragedy had no place at the Security Council session and that the slaying of the athletes had been noted "by the official organs of the Soviet Union" with a statement of "deepest regret."

The first veto by the United States was cast March 17, 1970, on a Rhodesian question.

China's veto was the second by the Peking government in less than a month. On Aug. 25, China vetoed Bangladesh's bid for U.N. membership.

It was the Soviet Union's 109th veto.

Bush explained that he voted against the resolution because it did not deplore terrorism. "We are...deeply convinced," he said, "that the council would have done neither itself nor the parties any good by adopting a resolution that ignored realities-which spoke to one form of violence and not another, which looked to effect and not to cause.

"We do not countenance violations of international law. We do not countenance terrorist acts. We seek for a world where athletes need not fear assassins and passengers on planes need not fear hijacking. We seek a just and lasting peace in the Middle East."

He asked whether anyone really could suggest that there was no relation between the Munich massacre and the Israeli raids.

"The fabric of peace in the Middle East is inextricably related to the massacre in Munich," he said.

The resolution vetoed by Bush in the Security Council was sponsored by Yugoslavia, Somalia and Guinea.

It said:

"The Security Council, "Deeply concerned by the deteriorating situation in the Middle East,

"Calls on the parties concerned to cease immediately all military operatons and to exercise the greatest restraint in the interest of international peace and security."

The vetoes by China and the Soviet Union were on amendments sponsored by Britain, Belgium, France and Italy, which made reference to terrorism.

The vote on the resolution was 13 countries in favor, the United States against and Panama abstaining.

The affirmative count was four above the nine votes necessary for the adoption of any council decision, but it was nullified by the U.S. veto.

Those in favor were Britain, France, China, the Soviet Union, Argentina, Belgium, Italy, Yugoslavia, Guinea, Somalia, Sudan, India and Japan.

New Trade Policy Urged

NEW YORK (AP) - A panel representing 200 American businessmen and educators has urged a broad revision of U.S. trade policies toward Communist nations, including liberalization of credit terms and removal of virtually all restructions on non-military experts.

Rogers Ignored In POW Issue

WASHINGTON (AP) - The strange case of James Hoffa's efforts to reach North Vietnam makes clear that by design or constant oversight Secretary of State William P. Rogers has been left out of administration plans concerning American prisoners of war.

The untidy affair points also to poor liaison among some of President Nixon's highest advisers and underlines Rogers's failure to end an internal feud plaguing the State Department for years.

The secretary's lack of a role in administration thinking on the POW issue became clear the moment the news broke last week that Hoffa planned to go to North Vietnam to negotiate for the release of some prisoners.

The first public word came in a Detroit News story for Thursday that the former Teamsters Union president planned to visit Hanoi at the invitation of North Vietnamese trade union officials.

In their noon briefings with newsmen Thursday, spokesmen for both the White House and State Department said all they knew was that Hoffa, paroled from federal prison last December, had obtained a passport validated for travel to North Vietnam.

At that moment nobody in the State Department knew anything more and Secretary Rogers hadn't even been told that much.

He didn't find out until a few hours later when the administrator of the department's Bureau of Security and Consular Affairs, Barbara Watson, complained she hadn't been consulted on approving Hoffa's passport for travel to Hanoi.

Rogers is said by sources to have exploded with anger, and he ordered Hoffa's travel validation revoked, saying the failure to notify Miss Watson constituted "procedural irregularities."

But it was more than technical problems that sent Rogers into what some department insiders called "almost uncontrolled rage."

He had learned late Thursday that the White House had known for two months of Hoffa's plans and if not approving had not discourage the trip.

Referring to Hoffa's sentence for jury tempering and mail fraud, Rogers is quoted as saying "how could they send that jailbird" to negotiate on POWs.

His anger was sparked also by what the sources said was his feeling of betrayal because the White House had used him to denounce former Atty. Gen. Ramsey Clark's recent trip to North Vietnam.

It has not been determined whether Rogers was purposely left out of the Hoffa dealings or was just forgotten, but it is equally clear he wasn't told until he asked.

What he didn't know was that on July 5, Hoffa, his attorney, William L. Taub, and Teamsters Vice President Harold Gibbons had met in San Clemente, Calif., with Henry Kissinger, President Nixon's chief foreign-policy advisers.

Although the White House now acknowledges the meeting as well as some involvement by President Nixon it says Hoffa was not encouraged to make the trip.

However, it has not stated that he was discouraged and Taub claims Kissinger approved the plan and took steps "to get the ball rolling" on travel validation.

Taub says, and the White House concedes, that Kissinger asked Hoffa to delay his trip until after July 20 because the foreign-policy adviser had a secret meeting set for July 19 with Le Duc Tho, Hanoi's main peace negotiator.

11 Nations Play Peaceful War Games

BRUSSELS (AP) - Armed forces of 11 North Atlantic allies open the biggest combined land, sea and air maneuvers in their peacetime history Thursday. The war games continue until Sept. 28.

About 64,000 men, 7,000 planes, 300 warships and 60 merchant vessels are taking part. There will be exercises on both sides of the Atlantic but mainly along Europe's western coast from Portugal to Norway's far north.

Called "Strong Express," the exercise is one in a long series of maneuvers designed to give national forces experience in working together-and to show Moscow that it can be done.

Leaders of the alliance say their solidarity over 23 years has been a major element in preventing Soviet aggression. Convinced that the alliance does not get enough credit, they have invited about 200 newsmen to view the games.

Reporters from Communist countries have not been asked, but military spokesman said they would not be barred from news conferences at headquarters in the remote Norwegian village of Bardufoss.

The Czechoslovak Communist party newspaper Rude Pravo said the maneuvers were to "help improve the defense capability" of the Warsaw Pact. It did not say when "Shield 72" will start.

Soviet troops were expected to make up a great part of the units in "Shield 72." Independent-minded Romania probably will send only staff officers.

"Strong Express" comes more than two years after the big Soviet exercise "Okean" showed that Moscow's growing naval power was now great enough to assert itself in the Atlantic as well as the Mediterranean. "Okean" brought together 80 ships at its peak.

Gen. H.F. Zeiner Gundersen, Norway's army chief, expects Soviet naval vessels and trawlers to appear during the allied maneuvers. This has become common.

They will be trying to keep an eye on a whole panoply of allied naval strength, from carriers to hovercraft. The allies will practice landings, submarine and antisubmarine warfare, the protection of convoys, the laying of mines and countermine measures. Planes will pretend to attack from carriers and will patrol from land bases.

Attention will focus on Norway's far north, an increasingly important strategic area. A line from Greenland to Iceland to Scotland is the forward limit of American defense.

The Russians have made their northern fleet the most important of the four they maintain. It includes the largest number of their Y-class strategic submarines, each armed with 16 nuclear missiles that have a range estimated at 1,750 miles.

Terrorist Is Diplomat?

NEW YORK (AP) - Newsweek magazine says the head of the Black September Arab terrorist organization in Western Europe and a prime suspect in the Olympic slaughter is Daoud Barakat, is now serving in Switzerland as an accredited diplomat from Yemen.

Describing what it calls "evidence of growing complicity" and cooperation among revolutionaries around the world, Newsweek said Sunday that young radicals of many nations have been trained by Palestinian terrorists in guerrilla skills.

The trainees, Newsweek said, are believed to include "representatives from the U.S. Weathermen faction and the Irish Republican Army."

"In some instances, foreign embassies serve as the main conduits for underground activities through their diplomats and pseudodiplomats," the magazine said.

Saigon Airport Under Attack

SAIGON (AP) - The northwest corner of the big Tan Son Nhut Airbase just outside Saigon was fired on Sunday and it was placed on red alert, meaning under attack, for 45 minutes.

During the period of alert, troops were organized to defend the base and all air traffic was waved off.

In addition to serving as a joint U.S.—South Vietnamese military base and the headquarters of the U.S. Command, Tan Son Nhut is Saigon International Airport.

Details of the incident which triggered the alarm were sketchy. A command spokesman said the type of projectiles fired into the base was not known, but they apparently were about the size of grenades that can be fired from a handheld launcher.

There also was no word on whether South Vietnamese troops were able to locate the attackers, the spokesman said.

In a related development, explosions ripped through a bomb-storage area and two hangars at the big U.S. and South Vietnamese airbase at Bien Hoa, 15 miles northeast of Saigon.

The Saigon command said two South Vietnamese were killed and 20 were wounded.

Field reports said several Americans were injured as they dived for cover and five Vietnamese aircraft were damaged.

Reports on the cause of the explosions differed.

In the air war, nearly a dozen of the fastest American and North Vietnamese jet fighters battled in the skies only 15 miles north of Hanoi on Saturday in the biggest dogfight since the resumption of full-scale bombing last April, the U.S. Air Force said Sunday.

Two Soviet-built MIGs were shot down, the Air Force said, one by Capt. Chuck DeBellevue, 27, of Lafayette, La. It was his fifth MIG kill since last May and qualified him as the Air Force's second Vietnam ace.

North Vietnamese antiaircraft gunners shot down one of the American planes as it was heading back to its base in Thailand after the dogfight between four U.S. Phantom jets and seven MIG19s and MIG21s, officials said.

But the two crewmen, Capts. William J. Dalecky, 26, of Wauwatosa, Wis., and Terrence M. Murphy, 34, a former Army tank corps sergeant from Jacksonville Beach, Fla., parachuted into 100-foot high trees on a rugged hillside in northern Laos and were rescued by a helicopter 30 minutes later, the Air Force said.

The U.S. Air Force fighters that battled the MIGs were escorting American attack planes on raids in the Hanoi area. The F4 fighters were alerted that the MIGs were headed their way after they had threatened another U.S. strike force 50 miles away.

The two MIG kills raised to 49 the number of enemy fighters downed by U.S. crews over North Vietnam since last March 30 when the enemy offensive began in South Vietnam, compared to 18 American planes downed by MIGs during the same period, the U.S. Command said.

Jane Fonda Said To Be Clean

WASHINGTON (AP) — According to texts being studied by congressional investigators, actress Jane Fonda used her Hanoi radio time to pose questions to U.S. servicemen but limited her advice mainly to pleas for ending bombing of North Vietnam.

In these broadcasts she called bombing a war crime but didn't urge defections.

"Can we fight this kind of war and continue to call ourselves Americans? Are these people so different from our own children, our mothers, or grandmothers? I don't think so, except that perhaps they have a surer sense of why they are living and for what they are willing to die," she was quoted as saying in broadcast from North Vietnam.

A 4,800-word transcript of remarks attribued to Miss Fonda, during her July visit to North Vietnam, was obtained Sunday from sources close to the House Internal Security Committee. The panel has asked the Justice Department to report by next Thursday on the status of the department's review of the case.

If the department finds her remarks did not violate U.S. laws on treason, sedition or efforts to undermine military morale, the committee has said it wants the attorney general to recommend legislation "which would be effective to impose criminal sanctions under similar circumstances in the future." Miss Fonda says she has done nothing wrong, and she denies that she told U.S. servicemen to defect.

According to the transcripts, there is no reference to defection.

Letting The Sunshine In

MOSCOW (AP) — Some sunlight does penetrate the dense, seething clouds shrouding Venus, and the planet's surface has granite rocks similar to those on earth, Soviet newspapers said Sunday.

The papers carried a detailed summation of data from the flight of Venus 8, which parachuted through Venus' clouds July 22, made a soft landing and transmitted radio signals for 50 minutes from the planet's sizzling surface.

"The key question during the landing of the station Venus 8," the summation said, "was whether the sunlight reaches the surface of the planet or whether it is absorbed completely by the atmosphere and the clouds."

The article–also carried by the official news agency, Tass–said a photometer aboard the landing capsule received data "from the beginning of the descent to the touchdown."

"This unique data," the report continued, "would allow us to conclude that a certain amount of solar rays in the visible part of the spectrum penetrates to the surface of the planet."

The report added, however, that "the Venusian atmosphere considerably weakens the sunlight" the further it penetrates the atmosphere, which is about 97 per cent carbon dioxide, 2 per cent nitrogen and the rest oxygen, water vapor and ammonia.

McG Scoffs Polls; GOP Donators Want Anonymity

Sen. George McGovern scoffed at polls, Sargent Shriver viewed Israeli air raids tolerantly, and Clark MacGregor said big Republican contributors want anonymity as the political rhetoric rolled along on Sunday.

The Democratic presidential nominee told one of his largest campaign crowds, at Espanola, N.M., that any young person or worker who supports President Nixon "is too confused to know which end is up."

His remarks were prompted by newly released Gallup Poll figures indicating Nixon has reversed an earlier deficit and taken a wide lead among young voters while increasing his advantage among manual workers.

"I don't believe that poll," the South Dakota senator said, noting once more that at one point pollsters had given him only 4 per cent of the vote for the Democratic nomination.

Shriver, his vice-presidential running mate, said he doesn't condone but cannot condemn Israel for its air strikes against Syria and Lebanon in retaliation for the murders of the Jewish athletes at Munich.

Shriver coupled this assessment with a call for a new Marshall Plan for the Middle East to pacify and reconstruct that troubled region.

MacGregor, director of the Committee for the Re-election of the President, said his group had contacted many of those who had contributed to the Nixon campaign prior to the effective date of a new law requiring disclosure of large donations, asking them if they would mind identified. He said it would "obviously be to our political benefit to make the names public" as Democrats insist they should but the committee found the contributors generally opposed. He had said earlier that the committee would not make any disclosures over objections of the givers.

Shriver was interviewed on the ABC TV-radio program "Issues and Answers" while MacGregor was heard on the similar CBS program "Face the Nation."

Also in the political news: -The Gallup Poll which drew McGovern's scorn said that after trailing McGovern by 48 to 41 per cent among under -30 voters in early August, Nixon surged to a 61-36 margin in a poll taken just after the Republican National Convention in late August.

Similarly, the poll said that while Nixon's edge among manual workers was 49 to 35 per cent in the earlier poll it rose to 64-28 in the latest one. —Herbert G. Klein, White House communications director, told a Republican rally at Lake Villa, Ill., that McGovern proposals would "inevitably raise taxes, add to the welfare rolls, causing disastrous unemployment and accelerate inflation."

—Two members of the policy council of the National Women's Political Caucus, agreed that both major parties have made significant strides in their commitments to women's rights. But they agreed also that "surely not enough progress has been made."

Gloria Steinem and Jill Ruckelshaus were interviewed jointly on the NBC TV- radio program "Meet the Press.

A Different Opening

All new and returning students have been invited to attend the Opening Celebration tomorrow at the fields across from Southwest. This new innovation will replace the old Freshman and Opening Convocations of past years. It is another fine attempt by the University's administration to bring us all together and show that everyone here is human.

The administration has gone out of its way to get everyone to take part in the festivities. Classes beginning at 3:35 or later are cancelled. President Robert Wood, Chancellor Randolph Bromery, Vice Chancellor Robert Gluckstern, and Student Government President Larry Ladd will all be there to welcome students. Distinguished Teacher Awards, which now include three for graduate teaching assistants, will be presented. Performances will be given by the University Marching Band, Flight, The John Peters Quartet, and Cornbread.

Many have scoffed at previous convocations. This opening celebration however, will prove different from those of the past. It will be more student oriented and not just an "administration show," as past performances have been called.

The Opening Celebration will also allow students and administrators to meet each other openly.

Besides, a nice afternoon meeting old friends or making new ones is just what everyone will need after the frustrations of registration and the first days of classes.

How The Co-op Failed

For all the good the people from the Student Senate who were here this summer did, there was one notable failure; the inability of those who stayed around to start a co-op of some kind which would have opened right around now. The story of why it failed is a rather sickening example of how two groups which are run by and supposedly for students can mess each other up.

The conflict arose between the Student Senate, whose chief spokesman was Treasurer Bob Chiller, and the Student Union Governing Board, led by such members as Barry Cohen and Guy Ross. It happened like this:

Chiller went to the SUG Board with the idea for the co-op, to be set up in the book drop area of the University Store plus an adjacent area where a candy counter was to be removed. Two cash registers which had not been previously used for anything were to be employed also. SUB Board told Chiller to bring back detailed plans for their analysis.

Somewhere along the line Ross came up with the idea of charging the co-op rent, since all revenue producing space in the Campus Center-Student Union pays rent. There were motions put before the Board to charge the co-op rent, not to charge it rent, and to let the co-op run for a year rent free and to discuss the rent issue after everyone had seen the idea in operation. The final vote was in favor of charging rent to the co-op, and things were heading towards a massive foul up, with the worst yet to come.

Now let's move to the day when the detailed plan for the co-op was to be presented to the Board. It was a Tuesday, and Chiller had received a copy of the plan from David Booker, who was in charge of the Senate side of it, the day before. It had then been decided (the day before the meeting) that the co-op plan, originally one in which stereos and cameras where to be sold, wouldn't work.

Chiller went before the Board and told them this, and that the co-op plan had been changed to sell food instead of stereos. It had been previously agreed the Campus Center officials to allow the co-op to be set up in the University Store as long as the Senate would grant the store the right to sell accessories to whatever the co-op was to sell. In view of the fact that Chiller did not have a feasibility plan ready for the new food co-op idea, he asked the Board only to guarantee him that there would be a place for them to set up shop once a plan had been drawn up.

Right about here is where the roof began to cave in. A hassle ensued over the whole idea of the SUG Board alloting space to the Senate, which should have been no problem, and disagreement also arose over the rent issue, with the Senate side claiming that a student run co-op shouldn't have to pay rent when the students are already forced to pay a $62.50 fee every year to support the Campus Center. From this side there seems to be a lot of logic in that argument, but the SUG Board didn't see things that way.

An interview with Guy Ross of the SUG Board didn't do too much to change my mind, either. First Ross attempted to tell me that I couldn't understand the whole situation unless I was aware of the complex economics which comprise the operation of the Campus complex. This argument is not relevant to the topic of the co-op under any circumstances, as the idea is not hard to understand.

Ross' second argument was that every profit making enterprise in the complex is a co-op, but since the idea behind the co-op is that is must be started voluntarily by a group of people, this doesn't make much since either. Granted, the businesses under Campus Center roof are suppose to turn their profits back to the complex, but in reality, where only the book store is making a profit, this is a practically non-existent situation.

The money from the co-op would have gone (assuming that a profit would be realized) into either funding social action projects off campus or back into the Student Activities Tax fund, where the net result would be lowering of this tax for the students. Unfortunately, thanks to the SUG Board and its members, we're not going to get a chance to see this until January at the earliest. We may never see a co-op.

Which alll brings us down to a few simple observations. First, the SUG Board is to my mind not doing its job, which should be that of a branch of the Student Government. They appear to be more interested in the keeping of the status quo. In the meantime, the student paid Campus Center fee is rising. Second, the branches of the Student Government in this school are not working well together, and the student, whose interests they should be defending, is the loser. This is mainly because of the failure of the SUG Board to respond to the interest of the students.

The Board has complained in the past that this newspaper is pro Senate and anti SUG Board. Maybe it's because there isn't much reason to be pleased with the performance of most of the members of the Board (in all fairness it should be said that there are a few good people on the Board. They simply aren't in large enough numbers to swing the vote when something like this comes before them.)

Well, that's how it happened. And it's going to keep happening until something is done to make Student Government at UMass work like a team, instead of separate bodies that end up destroying the good things that come along through needless fighting.

The Candidate's Wife

"Listen — For Just A Little Bit More We Can Get A Real One"

(Mr. Buchwald was so exhausted from the excitement of the Republican National Convention that the doctor advised him to take a rest. He has left behind some of his doctor's all-time favorites.)

WASHINGTON–It is regrettable that when the wife of a candidate for public office is interviewed, she can't say what is really on her mind. In order to be a good candidate's wife, she must show a stiff upper lip and stick with the standard cliches about her husband, her home and her children.

Now, for the first time, thanks to a new extrasensory perception process, I can reveal what really is going on in the mind of the wife of the candidate. Her thoughts are in italics:

"Mrs. Goodfellow, what is the most important role a wife must play in her husband's political career?"

"She must give him moral support when he is discouraged. She must be his ears and eyes when he isn't around, and she must be able to help him relax at the end of a hard day's campaigning."

As well as keep him off the bottle and away from all the skirts who think he's God's gift to women.

"You have four children. Do you find they miss their father when he is out making speeches all the time?"

"I imagine they do. But Charlton is a wonderful parent and he always makes time for the children, no matter how many political commitments he has."

Would you believe he hasn't seen them since the Fourth of July?

"Do you find the children understand why both of you have to be away from home so much?"

"Oh, yes. They're wonderful about it, and they're as interested in the race as we are."

They've only run away from home twice–the second time they asked to be placed in an orphanage.

"Oh, no. One must understand that politics is a rough business, and I'm used to it."

But if I ever see the wife of Charlton's opponent, I'll scratch her eyes out.

"Mrs. Goodfellow, do you find it tiring to be constantly in the limelight and always on your best behavior?"

"I love it. When we first got married, Charlton indicated he wanted to go into politics, and I knew that although it would place me in the spotlight, our lives would be exciting, thrilling and rewarding. I wouldn't change my life for anything."

Except to be married to a plumber or somebody else with a respectable job.

"How do you manage to keep so beautifully dressed all the time?"

"I make do on Charlton's salary. You just have to know where the bargains are."

If it weren't for the trust fund Daddy left me, I'd be in rags right now.

"Mrs. Goodfellow, do you ever get any time alone with your husband?"

"Oh, yes. We steal many hours together and talk about the children and the funny things that have happened during the campaign and the intimate day-to-day happenings of our lives."

The only other people present are his political campaign manager, his pressman, his finance chairman and 43 other volunteer workers.

"Mrs. Goodfellow, if your husband wins his race for office, will you change your living habits in any way?"

"Oh, no. I'm going to be the same person I was before."

I'll just take more tranquilizers.

Letters To The Editor

Register To Vote

To the Editor:

On Tuesday, September 12, from 10:00 A.M. - 6:00 P.M., the Amherst town Clerk will be on the concourse level of the Campus Center to register individuals wishing to vote in Amherst. According to the changes in the Massachusetts election laws, one no longer needs to prove residency for a specified period of time; you need only present yourself at the appointed time, prove Amherst as your place of residence (and that can be a dormitory) and prove that you will be at least 18 years old by the time of the next election.

The right to vote in this country is as fundamental as "Ma and apple pie". It's a right guaranteed to the American citizen. For one to be discontent and critical of one's government and yet refrain from exercising one's franchise, it is not only hypocritical but also makes a mockery of the ideals for which many of us stand.

With an organized student vote we can begin to mobilize student influence. We now have at hand the opportunity to create a new form of political force, a political force unlike the machines of Tammany Hall, Mayor Curley and Richard Daley. Those were and are machines restricted to the few, for the benefit of the few. An efficient force in Amherst would make any local candidate dependent upon the student's votes. We would have the opportunity to elect officials who would not cut the budgets of Belchertown and Monson State Hospitals, authorize such ecological disasters as the Montague landfill incident, and raise tuition rates and cut back on services at the University at the same time.

Right here in Amherst, Student influence could determine the future. I know that you have all heard this line before and have seen little or nothing materialize, but I have yet to be disuaded from this notion. I'm not advocating a revolution to "take over the Town", but let's be realistic. Not only does Amherst survive because of students, but it makes a killing at the expense of us. Must we really deal with outrageous prices, harassment, and poor living conditions? I believe that an organized effort with the inclusion of all for the benefit of all could achieve a transition. It might be idealistic to think that we can achieve significant change in this area, but I believe we owe it to ourselves to attempt this transition and to set an example for others. REMEMBER this is an election year and the choices which we could be influential in making in the national and state elections this November and in the town elections this winter are the choices which we will have to live with for the next two, four, and six years and that's an awfully long time.

SUG Not Guilty

To the Editor:

I am writing in reply to Mr. Nazzaro's letter of 8 September, I will attempt to acquaint him with some of the realities of the University situation. I realize this is foreign territory to you Mr. Nazzaro but please bear with me.

Sir, there were four members of the S.U.G. Board employed in the Campus Center, four members out of twenty five on the board. Four jobs out of four hundred in the building. I was one of those persons, working in the Pool Room ten hours a week for $1.90 an hour. One member was washing dishes for $2.10 an hour and a third was sorting dirty linen for $2.10 an hour. None of these jobs were new, unnecessary, particularly desirable or much fun nor were they found for the members by the Board. Only one member of the S.U.G. Board held a job similar to the one you describe, it was not obtained for him by the Board nor is it very representative of the jobs the other members had in the Campus Center. Mr. Nazzaro, it would seem that your argument is with an individual rather than an organization which you know nothing about. Assaulting the organization does not solve your problem.

Sir, the area in which I worked this summer also had it's hours cut severly just as the area in which you worked. It is to be expected that student service areas will be closed a little earlier on evenings when only one fourth of the University population is present to use them. The primary purpose of the lobby counter is not to give you a job. It is there for students and when they aren't there, your salary (and mine) are expensive luxuries.

There is a conscious attempt on the part of S.U.G. Board members to stay on campus during the summer. This is not because of the fine working conditions around here but simply because it is during the summer that the Administration does it's best work. The powers that actually run the University, including the Campus Center have shown a marked propensity for shuffling staffs, changing policies and adapting operations during the summer months when they are safe from student observation. Those of us who did stay on campus did so to keep an eye on things. Last summer we had a new Campus Center Director appointed by Whitmore as well as having the whole Campus Center Staff reorganized, all without any consultation with S.U.G. Board.

Mr. Nazzaro, if you persist in considering S.U.G. Board to be part of an elite I invite you and any other student reading this to join the elite S.U.G. Board by walking down to room 104 in the Campus Center and asking to join. There is a lot that must be done in the Campus Center and we need help, not ill contrived and misdirected criticism. We are a very accessable elite.

To the Editor:

Friday night, September 8, 232 Cance was found entered, apparently with a master key and over $650 of stereo equipment and radios were stolen. Missing is one Naco AM-FM stereo receiver and amplifier, a Masterworks stereo cassette tape player, a Realistic turntable, one AM-FM portable radio, a Hi-Sonic Digital AM-FM clock-radio and about 75 cassettes, most bearing the name of Tom Jodka. We are offering a reward for the return of the above merchandise.

Editorial Points

The line outside the Union last night to see "Midnight Cowboy" stretched all the way to past the Campus Center Garage. Didn't the people in the last part of the line know that the movie would sell out long before they got to the ticket window?

It looks like 1972 will go down in history as the year politics took over the Olympics. There oughta be a law...

The all University barbeque and Convocation on Tuesday ought to be interesting. It could be the last time this year that the whole University gets together in the same place and everyone is smiling.

The Russian Hockey team has everyone in Moscow forgetting that Boris Spassky ever existed.

Two Sides To The Coin

To the Editor:

Unfortunately, Bill Manburg's editorial, "11 Dead; Olympics Go On", of the September 7th Collegian indicates that he, too, possesses the dangerous and typical lack of understanding of Arab bitterness towards Israel. While Mr. Manburg attempts to arouse our sympathies for the Jews being "pushed...from the fields of Israel into the seas," he tragically ignores the fact that the Jews seized Palestine for the creation of the State of Israel, drove most of the Palestinians from their homeland, and continue to treat the remaining Palestinians as second-class people.

During the past years, when I resided on Kibbutz Dan in Israel, I witnessed innumerable, disturbing incidents of outright prejudice, discrimination and hatred by the Jewish people towards the Arabs within Israel. For the most part, the Jews would not even acknowledge the existence of prejudice. All too often the Jews employed the "why some of my best friends are..." attempt at proving their lack of bigotry. On as many occasions, the Israelis described the Arabs to me as "uncivilized," "crazy" or "animal-like" people.

With the perpetuation of Israeli animosity and misunderstanding of the Arabs, and the continual denial of such, we can expect constant war in the Middle East and neverending acts of terrorism by El-Fatah, Black September and other fanatical Palestinian groups. Moreover, as the Arabs in Israel propagate faster than the Jews, the unhealthy relationship between them cannot but snowball into an ultimately explosive situation.

Shame On You

To Marshall T. Spriggs and Edward Feit:

After reading your editorials I became nauseous. A little humor is okay, but that was too much! How do learned men such as yourselves expect world peace when peace and brotherhood have not been impregnated first in the heart?

Mr. Feit, it is a foolish man that is offended by words, for not every man says what his heart truly feels, and every man hears only what his heart wants to hear. If it is true that you, as a taxpayer, deserve a copy of the Guide because the state pays the complementing two-thirds of the institution's expenditures, then all state taxpayers own two-thirds of a copy, not just those fortunate enough to need one. In order that you contribute to further student publications, you owe yourself an apology for being so defensive. If you have too much pride to do that ask yourself why.

Mr. Spriggs, are you sure that thirty lousy pennies present sufficient evidence that an attack on a person's character is in order? Assured, you have the right to stand up for your beliefs so why do you not complain so loudly when you buy a pair of boots for thirty-five dollars that are worth only eleven and a half to the manufacturer. This case of "the ripoff" is only one in a million.

I say this to all men so that they do not make the same mistake: Every man holds in his past the reason of his behavior. Do not judge a man before you know his reason, right or wrong.

Culturnatives

What Culturnatives Is All About

By GILBERT J. SALK

This is a column of changes. It's not intended to provide all of the answers to all of the world's problems. Unfortunately, things aren't quite that simple. Instead, what I propose to do is suggest some alternatives for you to think about and accept, reject, or, hopefully, build upon.

It's called CULTURNATIVES because it is primarily about cultural alternatives. I'm coming out of a strong belief that the revolution will only succeed when people learn to relate to themselves, each other, and their environment in new, more humanistic ways.

That means changing one's perceptions of reality, at least on a temporary, experimental basis, in order to try on new approaches. It means trying to imagine the actualization of things which "can't be done". It means taking concepts out of the "what if..." stage to the "why not?" stage, and not settling for the first excuse given.

I'll be writing about ways of living on less money, thus making you less dependent on jobs you may not like. I'll suggest different ways of relating to the environment instead of exploiting it. I'll write about crafts and love and non-violence and men's/women's/gay lib (really all the same thing) and communes and sex and making a living by enjoying yourself. The ideas will be mostly mine, with my biases and my misunderstandings. At times, if I'm doing it well, you'll agree, at other times get pissed off, but, hopefully, usually you'll have something to think about.

I won't monopolize. If you want to contribute a column or two, get in touch with me and I'll give up space and let you in.

I'll usually review a book or two which is relevant to the day's column. I won't usually write bad reviews unless I come across a book that's getting a lot of publicity but which seems to be a real rip-off. I'd prefer to recommend books which I find useful.

At times, I'll get political. I'm a pacifist, and I get very uptight when I see my brothers and sisters killing each other or fucking each other over. I'm convinced that Richard Nixon is insane (and I'm not using the word lightly). I don't see any more nobility in the actions of the North Vietnamese, the Arabs, and the IRA than I do in the policies of murder followed by the U.S., the Israelis, and the British. That's usually enough to infuriate the radicals and the conservatives, so I don't really know what to call myself.

That's me, and that's CULTURNATIVES. If you like it, please tell me. It feels good to hear it. If you don't, tell me why not. I don't promise I'll change, but I will consider it.

Above all, if you have something to say, say it. Use the Collegian—it's highly accessible media. Or call a dorm meeting or a rally or form a new group or use an old one or (peacefully) take over Whitmore, but let people know where you are. You're never more alone than when you're quiet, so give people a chance to find you. This institution can be changed, and it might be that your idea is the one that will do it. Give it a chance.

If you want to rap, I can usually be found in the Draft Counseling Office in 923 CC.

Match Put Out By Rain

A simultaneous chess exhibition on Amherst Common Saturday afternoon was abruptly cancelled when a sudden thunderstorm inundated the playing site. Stephen L. Jones, a chess master and assistant professor of mathematics at UMass, had been playing his 51 opponents for less than an hour when the "simul" broke up. No games were completed.

Prof. Jones has given such "simuls" before, but never against so many opponents. There were also about a hundred spectators present, including several who had hoped to play but couldn't find room at any of the tables.

One of those most disappointed by the cancellation was the master's strongest opponent, Barry Cohen, a UMass senior and last year's New England Intercollegiate Chess Champion. Cohen, the current SUG Board Chairperson, has faced Dr. Jones at several of these simuls at the UMass Chess Club and hasn't won yet.

"I get good positions, but he worms his way out of them," Cohen explained. "This time, I would've nailed him."

Despite the unhappy ending, most of those who participated were eager to play chess again. They will get their chance at the first meeting this semester of the UMass Chess Club, which sponsored Saturday's fiasco. The meeting will be in the New Hatch (in back of the Hatch) in the Student Union on Tuesday, Sept. 12, at 7:30 P.M. There are no dues, and the club welcomes students and non-students alike. All are also invited to the First Univ. of Mass. Novice Chess Championship, open only to those who've never played in a U.S. Chess Federation rated tournament.

The tournament will take place in Room 804 of the Campus Center this Saturday, Sept. 16. Registration is from 9:00 A.M. to 9:30 A.M., the entry fee is $1, and the winner will receive a trophy. No one is eliminated; everyone can play five games.

Fishman Named Campaign Coordinator

UMass sophomore Reid Fishman has been appointed University coordinator for the candidacy of James G. Collins. Collins, who is running for State Representative from this district, is a Democrat and himself is a 1968 graduate of the University.

Fishman comes to the popular Collins campaign as no stranger to politics. Last year he was the chairman of the "Students for McGovern" movement, and coordinated the successful Amherst election day activities for McGovern's primary triumph. Fishman had previously worked for Eugene McCarthy in 1968 as well as some congressional candidacies.

A native of Fall River, Fishman is also on the editorial staff of the DAILY COLLEGIAN, and has been a long-time activist in the movements for peace and the freedom of Soviet Jews. Currently, he is a resident of 327 MacKimmie House in the Southwest area.

In an interview, Fishman stressed the tremendous importance of student participation in local elections. "Most of the laws that govern us are not made by the President or the Governor, but by the State legislators. Only by helping to elect sensitive people to the legislature can we hope to have a fair and honest approach to the problems in this state and particularly this area."

Fishman noted that his candidate has been connected with the University since 1964, including 1967-68 when he was President of the Student Senate. Fishman stated firmly that there is no candidate so informed about the problems of the University community than Collins, now employed as the Assistant Director of "Upward Bound", a program for low income youth.

Any student interested in helping in the Collins candidacy should call Reid at 546-9797 or Collins at 549-6886. Fishman urged people to call immediately, as the primary is on Tuesday, September 19, and students will be needed to help on election day.

Students Guard Their Rights

By TONY GRANITE

LEGISLATIVE WATCHDOGS are cropping up on campuses around these USA, according to reports from the student media.

Latest intelligence comes from the Vanguard of Portland (Ore) State U. which tells of PSU's membership in the Oregon Student Association, "whose purpose is to introduce Oregon college students to the structure and mechanics of the Oregon State Legislature."

Denying that OSA is a lobbying organization, a spokesman says "There is a great need to keep students aware of the decisions that are affecting them, and to let them know how they can express their satisfaction or dissatisfaction with these laws."

TENANT RIGHTS are being explained to students at UTenn-Knoxville, according to a dispatch in the Daily Beacon there. The Student Senate is preparing a booklet for Fall distribution which will tell students their rights and responsibilities as tenants, plus consumer hints.

A POLLING PLACE has been approved by the Brazos County Commissioners Court to be established on the campus of Texas A&M, according to a page one piece in the Battalion.

But not in time for the November presidential election. A plan worked out by members of Student Government divides the College Station precinct into three precincts, including one composed of the University campus. The community precinct has had a voting population of 3,718 which, according to state law, exceeded a maximum 2,000 voters per precinct.

The realignment involves 1,040 registered voters on campus of some 6,000 students in residence. Tentative location for the polling place is the Memorial Student Center, effective Mar. 1, 1973.

But it didn't last. The magazine was reported discontinued for the latest edition of the Directory of the College Student Press in America.

SEOUL (AP) — President Nixon will be re-elected this year and Taiwan merged with mainland China within five or six years, Asian fortune tellers predicted at their convention Sunday.

The 100 fortune tellers from Japan, India, Taiwan and South Korea attending the International Predictors Congress also said there will not be another world war but that the cold war will continue.

They foresaw reunification of the divided countries--Germany, Korea and Vietnam--within 10 years.

Among the fortune tellers' other predictions at the end of a three-day conference were:

- Around 1990, a holy man as great as Christ will appear northwest of Japan, possibly in Korea.
- Asian peoples will suffer from one of the poorest harvests in history in 1977 and East Europe will be flooded in 1994.

Major League Roundup

A's Drub Rangers

ARLINGTON (AP)-The Oakland A's who didn't get a hit until the sixth inning, came from behind the six runs in the eighth and beat the Texas Rangers 7-2 Sunday.

The triumph increased Oakland's lead in baseball's American League West to 3-1/2 games over the Chicago White Sox, who lost to California . Rich Hand pitched no-hit ball for the Rangers through five innings before pinch hitter Gonzalo Marquez singled. Pinch runner Allen Lewis stole second and scored the tying run on Bert Campaneris' single.

The Rangers took a 2-1 lead off reliever Roland Fingers in the seventh on Joe Lovitto's single, a stolen base and Larry Bittner's single before the A's erupted in the eighth.

Jim Panther took over for Texas in the eighth and after getting one out, second baseman Vic Harris booted Mike Hegan's bouncer to open the gates for the A's. Campaneris singled, Joe Rudi squeezed Hegan home with the tying run and was safe on a fielder's choice.

Matty Alou singled Campaneris home and Steve Lawson came in for the Rangers. Reggie Jackson struck out but Mike Epstein singled Rudi home and Lawson gave way to Pete Broberg.

Broberg walked Gene Tenace, Alou scored on a wild pitch and Sal Bando singled in the final two runs.

Drago Stops Twins On Four Hits

KANSAS CITY (AP)-Dick Drago, making his first start since being struck on the jaw by a line drive Sept. 1, stopped Minnesota on four hits and John Mayberry hit a two-run homer Sunday to lead the Kansas City Royals to a 3-1 American League baseball victory over the Twins.

Drago, who had suffered a hairline fracture of the lower right jaw, struck out five and walked only one. His lone slip was a home run by Harmon Killebrew, a 450-foot shot over the center field fence. It was Killebrew's 23rd of the season and No. 538 of his career, fourth on the all-time list.

The Royals struck in the first against Dick Woodson, 12-14, after a two-out walk to Richie Scheinblum. Mayberry then hit a 3-1 pitch 400 feet into the right-center field bleachers. It was Mayberry's third homer in three days and his 19th of the season.

Paul Schaal singled an insurance run across the eighth.

Expos End Famine Beat Bucs 8-2

MONTREAL (AP) -Mike Jorgensen's 11th homer of the year-a three-run shot off Bruce Kison-highlighted a six-run Montreal outburst in the third inning that sparked the Expos to an 8-2 victory over Pittsburgh Sunday.

The win for Montreal snapped a six-game losing streak against Pittsburgh and was only the Expos' fourth win in 15 meeting against the defending world champions, who lead baseball's National League East by 12 games.

Montreal loaded the bases on Kison, 8-6, in the second inning, but scored only on a wild pitch.

But the Expos sent 11 men to the plate in the third inning against Kison and reliever Luke Walker. Boots Day led off with a single and was forced at second. Ken Singleton followed with a walk and Ron Fairly drove the first run home with a single.

Winning pitcher Mike Torrez, 16-9, greeted Walker, making his first appearance since Aug. 6, with an infield hit and Day drove in the final run Bob Robertsons' 11th homer in the seventh inning accounted for the Pirates' two runs.

Chicago took a 2-0 lead in the first when Rick Monday and Glenn Beckert singled in runs. Rudolph hit his second home run of the season in the third after a walk to Monday and singled home Monday who doubled, in the fifth.

Mets Win 3-2

NEW YORK (AP)-John Milner's 16th home run of the baseball season and rookie Brent Strom's clutch relief pitching helped the New York Mets defeat St. Louis 3-2 in National League play Sunday.

Father Describes Son's Heroics

The 21-year-old junior college transfer, in his first varsity game, led the unranked Bruins to the biggest upset of college football's opening weekend-a 20-17 shocker over top-ranked Nebraska Saturday night before 67,702 in Memorial Coliseum.

Harmon's father, former Michigan All-American Tom Harmon, described the game as UCLA's television play-by-play commentator. It may have been like this:

"There's the center's snap, Harmon places the ball and Herrera kicks. It's good: The Bruins lead, 20-17, and there are only 22 seconds left in the game. What an upset!"

Harmon said he didn't realize he ran so much--21 times for 71 net yards. field goal after running and passing the Bruins on an 11-play, 45-yard drive. It originally was ruled a 20-yard kick.

Harmon said he didn't realize he ran so much 21 times for 71 net yards. But the Nebraska defense shut off the outside, so instead of pitching back to a trailing halfback, Harmon often put his head down and got the yardage himself.

He threw only eight passes, completing four. But one was a 46-yard strike to Brad Lyman for a touchdown and a 10-0 lead in the second quarter. Another was a third-down, 13-yarder to Jack Lassner in the game-winning drive for a first down on the Nebraska 20.

Harmon also had confidence in Herrera, who lettered last year. In a way, so did Coach Bob Devaney of Nebraska, who chose to decline a five yard penalty against UCLA on the play preceding the kick.

"We didn't play as well as UCLA, but we can't dwell on a loss," said Devaney, whose team had won 23 consecutive games and was unbeaten in its last 32. "It wasn't a matter of over-confidence. We knew that UCLA would be ready..."

Obviously, UCLA was going to be "up" for the game, and Coach Pepper Rodgers described how future opponents can gauge the Bruins' readiness.

"I somersaulted when I led the team onto the field," Pepper said. "When you see me do that you'll know I think we are ready."

Nebraska wasn't the only member of The Associated Press Top Twenty to have its problems. Fourth-rated Arkansas bowed to eighth-ranked Southern California 31-10, virtually assuring that the rankings would undergo some wholesale changes this week.

The Razorbacks were soundly thrashed by eighth-ranked Southern Cal as Mike Rae completed 18 of 24 passes for 269 yards, set up two touchdowns with long completions and ran five yards in the third period to snap a 3-3 halftime tie.

Shorter Wins Marathon But Russians Dominate As Olympics Near End

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

MUNICH (AP) — Frank Shorter, a frail-looking law student out of Yale University, gave the United States its first Olympic marathon victory in 64 years Sunday and took some of the sting out of America's most disappointing showing in the history of these international games.

The bitterest and most embarrassing blow came when a special jury denied an American protest of the last-gasp 51-50 loss in basketball to the Russians Saturday--the first time a U.S. team had ever lost a basketball game in the Olympics.

"We were robbed," insisted the band of young collegians making up the American team. They were so angry they refused to show up at the Olympic Stadium to get their silver medals. The veteran coach, Hank Iba, reported heart-broken, flew home.

The traditionally dominant Yanks also were chagrined when the big, imposing Soviet team, with its hammer and sickle emblems, walked off with the team honors, winning 51 gold medals to 33 for the United States.

With only the equestrian grand prix jumping and closing ceremonies remaining on the program Monday, the Russians had a total of 100 medals compared with 92 for the United States. East Germany was third with 66 medals, 20 of them gold.

The American track and field team won only six gold medals, worst of all time. However, the U.S. total of 22 topped Russia's 18.

The United States won a total of 107 medals in 1968 at Mexico City and led the Russians in gold, 45 to 29. East Germany got only 25 in all.

The Yanks won four golds in Sunday afternoon competition, one on a brilliant 400-meter relay triumph by the men sprinters, two archery championships and Shorter's unexpected marathon triumph--the first for an American in the marathon since John Hayes won in 1908. They also got a silver in the women's 1600 meter rally.

A couple of Finns running in the tradition of the great Paavo Nurmi won gold medals. Laase Viren, who previously had taken the 10,000, captured the 5,000 in Olympic record time. Pekka Vasala put on a killing burst in the stretch to dethrone Kip Keino of Kenya in the 1,500. World record-holder, America's Jim Ryun, who fell during his qualifying heat, didn't make the finals.

Other gold medals went to Juri Tarmak of the Soviet Union in the high jump with a jump of 7 feet, 3-3/4 inches; Faina Melnik of the Soviet Union in the women's discus with an Olympic record of 218 feet, 7 inches; Kenya in the men's 1,600 meter relay in which America didn't field a team; West Germany in the women's 400 meter realy; and West Germany in field hockey.

Shorter, born in Munich of American parents, took the lead after about one-third of the 26-mile, 385-yards course over Munich roads and highways. Then, he turned the exhausting race into a one-man affair, bursting into the big Olympic stadium with none of the other runners in sight.

He led by a big margin over the final stages of the race and there was a gasp from the crowd when another figure--not Shorter--burst through the portal and started the final swing around the red oval track.

But it was only a prankster--seeking a moment in the sun -- and soon the thin, 130-pound Shorter shot into view, making his traditional circuit and finishing in 2 hours, 12 minutes, 19.7 seconds.

It was a day of records. The world record was broken by East Germany in the women's 1600-meter relay with 3:22.92 and equalled in both the men's and women's 400 relays.

Unable to put a team on the field in the men's 100-meter event because of the expulsion of Vince Matthews and Wayne Collett for so-called "disgraceful" conduct in victory ceremonies, the American sprinters went out to prove themselves in the shorter relay race.

The Americans were timed in 38.19 seconds, equalling the mark a U.S. team set in Mexico City four years ago. The Russians followed in 38.50 with West Germany third in 38.79.

A bad pass on the final exchange hurt the U.S. women's sprint team, which finished fourth in the 400, won by the West Germans in 42.81 seconds.

Dwight Stones, a blonde, floppy-haired teenager from UCLA, won a bronze medal in the high jump, won by Tarmak of the Soviet Union. It was Stones' first international meet and he cleared a lifetime best of 7 feet 3 inches.

The Finns were remarkable.

Not since 1928, when Nurmi, Harry Larvi and Ville Riotola swept the three distance races, had one country won the 1,500, 5,000 and 10,000-meter events in a single Olympics.

The United States took both gold medals in Archery, an event reintroduced to the Games after 52 years.

Loss of the basketball title was the crowning blow in a series of disasters and disappointments for the Americans, who couldn't get their two top sprinters to the 100-meter trials on time, lost a gold medal because 16-year-old swimmer Rick Demont of San Rafael, Calif., took some medicine for asthma and saw its greatest miler, Ryun, stumble and fall in a qualifying race.

The final basketball game, which ended well after midnight Saturday night and carried its confusion into into the early hours of Sunday morning, saw the Russians take control almost from the first whistle and step off to leads as high as 12 points in both the first and second halves.

However, just when the cause appeared most hopeless, the young, gutty Yanks, averaging little more than 20 years in age, not only surged back but even shot ahead 50-49 on two free throws by Doug Collins of Illinois State with three seconds to play.

That's when bedlam broke.

The Russians passed the ball to midcourt and then called time out with one second remaining. The Americans, with Coach Hank Iba leading the outburst, protested this was a violation of international rules.

The Russians got another chance to put the ball in play--with one second apparently remaining. When the ball was thrown and the buzzer sounded, the Americans began a wild victory celebration.

But just a minute. The referees cleared the floor and then ruled that the Russians should have another chance--this time with not one--but three seconds--remaining. The Americans were livid with rage.

A long pass was thrown across the court to the 6-foot-7 Aleksander Belov, who grabbed the ball and scored on a jump shot. The score was now 51-50, Soviet Union.

The Americans lodged a formal protest. The protest was studied and, after 14 hours, denied. The Yanks had lost another round.

"We got the works--they're all a bunch of liars," said Ken Davis of Georgetown, Ky., a 6-1 guard.

"How can a bunch of old men like that look at a movie and tell what went on?" protested Tom Burleson of North Carolina State.

"They've been trying to rook the Americans in basketball for years," added Kevin Joyce, a 6-3 guard from the University of South Carolina. "Now they've succeeded."

Ray Seales, a 20-year-old college freshman from Tacoma, Wash., won the United States' only gold medal in boxing, scoring a 3-2 decision over Anghel Anghelova of Bulgaria in the light-welterweight class.

FOR THE FIRST TIME in 52 years Archery has been included in the summer Olympics. Shown here is John Williams of the United States team which took both golds in the Archery competition yesterday in Munich. (AP Wirephoto)

Sox Take Two; Widen Lead

CLEVELAND AP- John Curtis pitched a four-hitter and Luis Aparicio hit a home run as the Boston Red Sox beat the Cleveland Indians 2-0 to sweep a baseball doubleheader Sunday.

The Red Sox won the first game 5-1 in 12 innings. The two victories increases the Boston lead in the American League East to 1-1/2 games over the Baltimore Orioles.

The sweep also means that Detroit drops two games behind Boston and New York falls 2-1/2 games behind.

Curtis, 10-6, allowed three singles to Buddy Bell and another safety to Jack Heidemann.

The Red Sox scored without the benefit of a hit in the second inning as Rico Petrocelli walked to lead off the inning, moved to second on an infield error, to third on an outfield fly and home on an infield groundout. Aparicio's second homer of the year came as the leadoff hitter in the ninth.

Carlton Fisk's 20th homer touched off a four-run rally in the 12th in the first game. A two-run error by Jack Brohamer followed a walk and two singles before Aparicio pushed the final run across with a bunt single.

The sweep ran the Red Sox record in September to 9-2 and lowered the pitching staff's combined earned run average for the month to 1.85.

Curtis' shutout was his second consecutive victory since being returned to the starting rotation last week. Five days ago Curtis and Bob Bolin combined to shut out New York and Sunday's performance ran Curtis' scoreless innings streak to 17.

In the first game

In the first game, Marty Pattin stopped several Indian threats before Craig Nettles tied it at 1-1 with a two-out homer in the ninth. On Saturday, Nettles homered in the 10th to defeat the Sox, 2-1.

Pattin completed 10 innings of the opener before giving way to Bob Veale, who pitched a scoreless 11th to earn to earn his first victory since being purchased from the Pittsburgh Pirates organization, and Bolin, who pitched the 12th.

Manager Eddie Kasko conceded his team had been getting good pitching in its drive to the top of the AL East, but he said he couldn't "pick out a single reason for our winning streak. If I said the pitchers were doing it the hitters would get mad."

Kasko said Curtis, who made only 90 pitches, pitched poorly to only two batters-the first hitters in each of the first and ninth innings.

The Indians and Red Sox close out the four-game series Monday night with Sonny Siebert, 12-11, going for Boston against Cleveland's Dick Tidrow, 13-13.

Tigers Lose

DETROIT AP - Horace Clarke and Bobby Murcer each drove in two runs while Mel Stottlemyre fired a three-hitter as the New York Yankees beat the Detroit Tigers 5-0 Sunday.

The loss dropped the Tigers into third place in baseball's American League East, one half game behind Baltimore and a half game in front of New York.

Clarke singled in a run with two out in the third inning and hit a solo homer in the sixth as the Yankees beat Mickey Lolich, 20-12, for the third time in four decisions.

Happy Nastase Takes Open Crown

FOREST HILLS, N.Y. (AP) - Ilie Nastase, a rakish Romanian with the grin of a rogue, jumped on Arthur Ashe's uncertain service for a 3-6, 6-3, 6-7, 5-4, 6-3 victory and the men's title Sunday in the U.S. Open Tennis Championships.

The long-haired, 26-year-old native of Bucharest leaped high in the air after tapping a little drop shot across the net at match point as he became the first European to win the American men's title since 1934.

The hawk-faced Nastase picked up a $25,000 check for first place that helped erase the memory of his five-set loss to Stan Smith in the Wimbledon finals earlier this year.

Nastase had been seeded No. 4 in this tournement and the lean and lithe Ashe, from Miami, was No. 6. Ashe was attempting to duplicate his victory in the first American open while he was still an amateur in 1968.

Nastase's victory prevented a second consecutive American sweep of the national titles. Mrs. Billie Jean King, from Long Beach, Calif., had taken her second consecutive women's title with a 6-3, 7-5 decision over Australian Kerry Melville Saturday.

Nastase, one of the game's most colorful characters but possessed of flaring temper, was down two sets to one and trailed four games to two in the fourth set before he began battling back.

He began shaking his clenched fists, grimly mouthing encouragement and instructions to himself.

He took his own service in the seventh game, had a love-40 lead in the eighth, went to deuce, then pulled out the break that pulled him even.

O's Blank Brewers

BALTIMORE (AP) - Jim Palmer of Baltimore allowed seven hits and aided by a sparkling catch by outfielder Rich Coggins, pitched the Orioles to a 2-0 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers Sunday.

The Orioles scored an unearned run in the first inning on a throwing error by Milwaukee catcher Ellie Rodriguez and Terry Crowley singled home a run in sixth.

Palmer, 19-8, didn't allow a hit until singles by Rodriguez and George Scott in the fourth. His own throwing error on a pickoff attempt put both runners in scoring position, but Palmer fanned Johnny Briggs and retired Joe Lahoud on a fly ball.

In the seventh, Lahoud singled with one out but was doubled off base when Coggins dashed into the right field corner to grab Mike Ferraro's slicing liner just before crashing into the fence.

Burgess Unveils Meaning Of "Clockwork"

By MARK VOGLER

British-born novelist Anthony Burgess spoke before an estimated crowd of well over 1500 last night at the Student Union Ballroom, discussing the meaning behind his book "A Clockwork Orange" and then polishing off the evening by giving a rendition of "Cyrano De Bergerac"--a play he is currently adapting as a musical for Broadway.

Burgess began by telling the audience that the term "a clockwork orange" was an idiom used by very old men in England.

"They would say 'he's as queer as a clockwork orange' - meaning that the person was bizzare on a purely colloquial level.

"It's true meaning is the attempt of high computerizing. Turning us all into total mechanical entities, instead of sweet, delicate, and juicy creatures. It's like turning an orange into a piece of machinery."

Burgess then spoke about morality and attempted to tie in his complex explanation of the term with the theme of "A Clockwork Orange".

"There is an area of good outside of morality, and there is an area of good inside morality. But we don't have the same semantic dicotomy-with evil. There's a matter of choice between good and evil."

"We can be predestined to good, but determinism doesn't work in the area of evil. Man's superiority over the animals is his ability to choose between good and evil."

In Burgess' book, Alex (the main character), a young hoodlum who craves violence and causing trouble, is aversely conditioned through a scientific process by the State so that he is incapable of performing an evil act.

Burgess suggested that the very nature of limiting even the most criminal members of society from making their own choice between good and evil is wrong.

"We cannot kill evil at the root, because we kill humanity in turn. The choice of selecting between good and evil should be left up to the individual, even if it's Adolph Hitler."

Getting more philosophical toward the end of his talk, Burgess said: "It's better to perform evil than nothing. If there's a choice between evil and pacifity, then we ought to do evil so that we might discover what is good. It's a very dangerous thing to say, I know, but it's probably true."

A unique characteristic of his book which he pointed out to the mass audience was Burgess' incorporation of his own "slang". It combines both American and Russian words.

"When you use slang, don't use real slang, invent your own, Burgess said kiddingly. "If it's invented, it never existed. Therefore it cannot die."

Burgess added that he had programmed the book so that Americans might learn Russian without knowing it. But what irritates him is that the American edition contains a glossary for the new words. So he urged all to tear out these pages.

The author forwarded his message of "A Clockwork Orange" to the students: "I have greater, greater sympathy with youth today when I think of all the problems that my generation has left to them to solve."

"You've got to fight the state. You musn't let them computerize everything and let big business get away with things. So to hell with the state, you've got to be free."

And with that final statement, Burgess dispensed with the michrophone and expressed aloud lines from the text of "Cyrano De Bergerac".

During the question and answer period which followed Burgess voiced his major disapproval with Stanley Kubrick's motion picture "A Clockwork Orange".

"What bothers me, he said, "is cutting much of the explicit sex out. It never really does any kind of harm to anyone. Yet, all the violence is left behind."

Burgess said that he wouldn't recommend aversive conditioning to the skinheads of Britain.

"We musn't give aversive conditioning to anyone. They're still human beings, even though thev're skinheads."

'This Bullshit Must Stop'

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

What makes them special is that they hold the dubious honor of being the first students on campus to have their room robbed.

Last Friday night two men or women, the story varies, were seen walking out of their room with all their stereo equipment. All that was left was one speaker. They lost $650 worth of records, tapes, and equipment. Understandably, they are upset.

Mike was all set to live off campus this year, until the 21 policy was changed, making him ineligible because he would be 21 during the semester, and not before it's start as the new policy specifies.

"I feel cheated. I tried hard to get off campus. If not for the change in the 21 rule I would be. And now I come back and they have too many people for the dorms. And now they've told me that I have to get robbed $600."

They had spent the night at Hampden dining commons listening to the bands that were playing. At one thirty they came back and found the door to their room open, the room emptier than it was earlier that evening.

They are sure they locked their room, and think whoever robbed them had a master key.

Tom: "The University says it's not their fault, but I think it is. I think blame is a dumb trip, but somebody had that key and somebody lent it out. It's too damn easy to get a master key, too many master keys in this school. Too damn many keys to these rooms."

The next day the head of residence called the Physical Plant and reported a missing sub-master, presumably to the second floor.

Saturday, the physical plant lock people came up and replaced their lock. Tom and Mike asked them about the rest of the floor, presumably now subject to burglary. The lock men said it would take three men working all day to change the locks on one floor. They would wait and see if any more rooms were broken into.

On inquiry the Physical Plant said that "Many sub-masters are lost, and a surprising number of masters." They said that they can't change all the locks on a floor until an official work request is filed by the dorm, (which has yet to be done) and even then it must go through channels, and the backlog of approved re-keying is months long.

It could be done right away, if they knew the key was stolen (for instance, if a counselor was mugged and his key taken) or if the Area Government appropriated the money themselves to have the floor rekeyed. Otherwise, wait and see.

Tom and Mike don't have much chance of having their property recovered. In 1970 there were 24 arrests for forcible entry, in 1971 seven, and till July of this year one. Considering the number of robberies on campus, they don't feel too optimistic. The two detectives who came to their room that night said they would do what they could.

Mike. "Nobody gives a shit as long as it's not their stuff that gets ripped off. People prop the back doors open so they won't have to walk around to the front door to get in. Anybody could walk in."

They gave the Collegian a letter which was published Monday offering a reward for any information leading to the return or recovery of their equipment. Why a reward?

Mike. "As an inducement for people to pass information on to us or the police. Who stole it, where it is now."

The two people on their floor who might have seen the people who robbed their room refused to talk to the police. They didn't want to get involved.

These words were at the end of Mike and Tom's letter to the editor. "This bullshit must stop. You may be next."

Registration Drive On Today

By SUSAN HUBBARD

Voter registration for the November 7 General Election will be held today from 10:00 a.m. until 6:00 p.m. on the Campus Center Concourse level. Amherst Town Clerk, Ms. Estelle Matuscko, will be aided in the registration by several students serving as assistant registrars.

Skip Casper, head of the UMass voter registration drive, has worked over the summer with the Attorney for Students, Richard Howland, on setting up this special registration. Casper was asked to head the registration effort by Larry Ladd, SGA (Student Government Association) President.

Last fall and spring, a similar voter registration was held for students in the Campus Center. Casper hopes that "the confusion of these previous registrations will be eliminated" due to the simplified procedures which are to be followed today. Three tables, alphabetically designated A-F, G-N, and O-Z, will each display signs informing prospective voters of registration policy.

Anyone who will be 18 years of age by the Nov. 7 election and is presently residing in Amherst is eligible to vote. No specific length of prior residence in the area is necessary. Proof of age, in the form of a driver's license or a birth certificate, and proof of residence are necessary and must be presented when registering. A rent receipt or other document proving one's off-campus residence is considered sufficient.

All registrants must fill out an information sheet, and upon producing their proof of age and residence, swear to the validity of that information. Finally, each registering voter must sign his or her name, so that he or she will be placed on the official town record.

Those who register today will be ineligible for the Sept. 19 primary, for which a voter must have registered one month prior to the election date, or before Aug. 19. However, the Nov. 7 election will be open to all those registering today.

"This special registration was arranged through the cooperation of the Town Clerk and the members of the Town Board of Registrars," said Casper. "This period of time, from Aug. 19 through Sept. 19, is usually a 'closed period' for voter registration, but special arrangements have been made so that the new voters' names will be officially placed on the voting lists as of Sept. 20."

"By law, the Town Clerk can be petitioned to appear in a particular place for a special voter registration," he said.

"But this was totally unnecessary due to the full cooperation received from Ms. Matuscko and the Board of Registrars."

Also aiding the registration effort was Dean of students William F. Field, who was instrumental in allowing a notice to be included with schedule materials which were mailed to students in Aug. During the summer, Suzanne Devoe also worked with Casper on the arrangements for the registration.

"Even those students who considered themselves to be presently registered in Amherst should check a list of voters posted outside Attorney Richard Howland's office," remarked Casper. "Amherst annually polls all residents (this was done last January), and those who fail to turn in the cards that were mailed to them may find that their names have been removed from the voting list. In May, approximately 400-600 names were removed from the list of registered voters for this reason." Casper said that these people could re-register today.

Students acting as assistant registrars will be sworn in this morning in the Student Senate offices.

If unable to attend today's registration, new voters may still register at the Office of the Town Clerk, in the Amherst Town Hall, Monday through Friday from 8:00 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

Student Loses Job Over Loyalty Oath

By ROBERT L. SCHEIER

A UMass graduate student says he has lost a job as a teaching assistant in the Art department this fall because he has refused to sign the state's loyalty oath required of all state employes.

Donald Grant, a 1964 UMass graduate in English, says he does not plan any legal action against the university, but says he feels the loyalty oath is wrong and unnecessary and wanted to register his discontent.

Grant, who is currently working for his Masters in Fine Arts degree in painting and print-making, is apparently the only employee who has refused to sign the oath, which is being required of all state employees for the first time in nearly three years.

The oath, which was suspended in October, 1969 by a U.S. District Court for being "vague and unspecific", was found constitutional by the U.S. Supreme Court in April of this year.

It pledges the signer to uphold and defend the United States and Massachusetts Constitutions, and to oppose the overthrow of either the state or the United States by "force, violence, or any illegal or unconstitutional method."

Grant, who claims he only found out the oath would definitely be required the day before registration (last Thursday), says he will not take any legal action because he is satisfied that under the law requiring the oath, he must lose his job.

"It's just important that people see things straight," he said, "and when they do, they should stand up for the way they see them."

He also says he has been jailed for refusing induction into the armed services, and has worked as a printer's assistant, newspaper reporter, and studied at an art school in New York before coming back to UMass to get his MFA.

"Apparently, I'll just have to go for jobs in private schools," he said.

The director of Personnel and Financial Services for UMass says the school has been instructed by the state's Attorney-General's office that the oath will be required not only of all new employes, but of all university employes hired while the oath was not being administered.

According to John L. DeNyse, the administration is still compiling figures on how many employes will be affected, "but it's liable to run over 2,000," he said.

While several employes have come to him to express resentment at signing the oath, he said, Grant is the only one to refuse to sign it.

Employees at several state hospitals, had refused to sign the oath, and brought the suit seeking to have the oath declared unconstitutional.

DeNyse would not comment on any deadline for employees to sign the oath, but said the oath is mandatory.

Grant says he had tried to find the details of the oath prior to registration, and claims that no one in the administration could give him any details about the oath.

"I found out about the oath a few weeks after I got the job," he said, "but I hoped nothing would be done."

"I had decided years ago not to sign any loyalty oaths," he said. "It all started when I recognized in grammer school that patriotism wasn't what it was cracked up to be, and that nationalism was an evil."

Kissinger Begins Talks With Soviets

MOSCOW (AP) — Henry A. Kissinger met with Soviet leaders yesterday - the first day of a journey to Moscow to discuss Vietnam, nuclear arms limitation, trade and European security.

There was no immediate word from either the American or the Soviet side on which Kremlin leaders took part in the first day's meetings with President Nixon's national security adviser or what specific subjects were discussed.

Kissinger was to see Party General Secretary Leonid I. Brezhnev, Premier Alexei N. Kosygin and Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko in talks that will continue through Wednesday. Both sides kept mum on the proceedings.

U.S. sources would say only that the talks opened with a broad review of American-Soviet relations.

The White House apparently was placing the Kissinger visit in the framework of the continuing contacts that were to follow Nixon's May summit meeting in Moscow.

There had been speculation Kissinger might meet with Le Duc Tho, adviser to Hanoi's delegation to the Paris peace talks on Vietnam. But Tho went on to Paris and said he did not meet Kissinger in Moscow.

It could not be ruled out that Kissinger, who has met with Tho several times, might see the North Vietnamese Politburo member in Paris on his way home.

When reporters met him in Paris, Tho made no reference to a Viet Cong statement, broadcast and heard in Saigon, purporting to clarify its previous proposals.

The statement said the Viet Cong was "prepared to accept a provisional government of national concord that shall be dominated by neither side."

The Viet Cong essentially restated the peace plan it submitted to the Paris peace talks last July. In elaborating on that plan, the Viet Cong had said no faction would dominate a coalition government.

The latest statement reiterated Viet Cong demands that the United States unilaterally end the fighting, that the United States abandon all support of President Nguyen Van Thieu, and that Thieu be deposed before a coalition government is formed.

The Viet Cong said two factions - the Viet Cong and the Saigon government - would each pick its own representatives to serve on the coalition government. But it specified that Saigon government representatives would have to be selected by "a Saigon government without Nguyen Van Thieu."

House Committee OK's Big Defense Bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rejecting a four-month money cutoff deadline for Indochina war operations, the House Appropriations Committee approved a $74.6-billion defense bill Monday, including $1.8 billion extra for intensified war activities.

It was the biggest defense bill since World War II, and also $1.8 billion larger than the funding for last fiscal year.

The bill contains $4.3 billion less than requested by President Nixon, including a $450-million cut of his request for extra war money.

The bill is scheduled for House action Thursday, and Rep. Joseph B. Addabbo, D-N.Y., whose antiwar amendment was rejected by the committee, said he will take the fight to the House floor.

His amendment, identical to the one being pressed by Sen. Edward W. Brooke, R-Mass., would cut off all money for the Indochina war, except for withdrawal, in four months in return for release of American prisoners.

The $74.6-billion defense bill, approved by voice vote, is the biggest single appropriation ever put to Congress although combined war bills totaled $101 billion for fiscal year 1944.

The committee rejected all $297 million for a Safeguard antimissile site to protect Washington, D.C. It scrubbed military plans to relieve GIs of KP duty, calling such chores "wholesome and character building."

Federal Loan Snarl Delays Tuition Aid

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A foul-up in the federal guarantee loan program has left thousands of college students returning to campus across the country this month without money to pay tuition.

Some students may be turned away, others will have to come up with the money from other sources, but most schools have hastily arranged deferred payment plans for students whose loans have been delayed.

The Office of Education of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare for 5-1/2 years has operated a program under which it insured tuition loans from banks to individual students. The Education Act amendment that became law June 21 changed the ground rules for those loans and led to what one college financial aid officer called "the infamous interlude."

Tuition loans were previously granted to any student whose adjusted family income was less than $15,000. The new law required schools to confirm the "demonstrated financial need" of all students seeking the low-cost loans.

G.M. Recalls Cadillacs

DETROIT (AP) — Owners of nearly 37,000 1972 Cadillacs were asked Monday to return the cars to dealers for an inspection designed to spot about 5,000 overly long rear axle shafts.

Cadillac officials said the shafts, which may be a fraction of an inch too long, could cause unusual pressure on the wheel bearing. Unless the defect, heralded by loud noise, is corrected, the bearing will fail, causing loss of the rear brakes, the firm reported.

Hanoi Bridge Blasted

SAIGON (AP) - U.S. jets smashed the strategically important Paul Doumer Bridge within the city limits of Hanoi in one of the most intense raids of the war on the North Vietnemese capital, the 7th Air Force claimed yesterday.

In the ground war, officers reported the threat to Hue had been ended with the smashing of an enemy division that had menaced the old imperial capital in the northern front.

The bridge, said to carry all traffic from the Chinese frontier to the demilitarized zone, suffered its heaviest damage of the war in raids Sunday, said an Air Force spokesman.

Three spans were destroyed and three damaged by F4 Phantom jets using 2,000-pound laser-beamed bombs, the Air Force announced.

Four military barracks with their complex of assembly and repair plants and storage and distribution depots on the fringes of Hanoi also were bombed, said the Air Force.

*A Navy A7 jet was shot down by a SAM missile 14 miles southwest of Hanoi on another mission. The pilot is listed as missing.

Since the start of the enemy offensive last March 30, 90 U.S. aircraft have been reported lost over North Vietnam. There have been 98 airmen listed as missing with 37 of them known to have been captured.

"We've broken the back of Hanoi's 324B Division," a U.S. adviser told Associated Press correspondent Holger Jensen.

It is the first significant victory claim on the northern front, contrasting with the government's failure so far to recapture Quang Tri, north of Hue.

Field commanders said remnants of the 324B Division, which fought its way to within 12 miles of Hue last month, are retreating southwest toward their traditional sanctuary in the A Shau Valley, 30 miles southwest of the city.

Fire Bases Bastogne and Checkmate, which had changed hands frequently in June, July and August, are now firmly in government control.

American officers were particularly impressed by the South Vietnameseist Regiment's performance because it had suffered a 70 per cent turnover in personnel due to casualties.

Seventy South Vietnamese helicopters were destroyed or damaged Sunday by explosions at a bomb dump in the big Bien Hoa base, 15 miles northeast of Saigon, according to field reports.

Two Vietnamese were killed and 21 Vietnamese and 40 Americans were injured by the blast.

Cause of the explosion is being investigated. Sabotage is suspected.

KP Duty To Stay

WASHINGTON (AP) — Plans to eliminate KP and cigarette-butt-policing details as an incentive to attract more young men into the new Army were rejected today by the House Appropriations Committee.

Calling the duties "wholesome and character-building," for GIs, the committee cut $125 million earmarked for hiring civilians to do the jobs. The cut was made from a $74.6-billion defense appropriation bill scheduled for a House vote Thursday.

The committee recommended that the civilian kitchen-police and cleaning-detail programs already under way be terminated by next April 30 in all services, and that the potato-peeling, trash-collecting and latrine duty be turned back to soldiers, sailors and airmen.

The Marine Corps had held off hiring civilians for the jobs pending the committee's decision, and the committee said it appreciated that.

The other services, particularly the Army, already have begun to eliminate the onerous tasks as part of the effort to change the military image and attract enough young men for an all-volunteer service by next June 30.

The committee was especially critical of the Army, which it said got $34 million from Congress for hiring civilian kitchen help as a pilot project and so far has committed $73.7 million to it.

The committee rejected the program for all services as too costly, undertaken with no studies of the effect of the duties on military discipline or on how enlisted men really feel about doing them.

VD Study Toll Rises

WASHINGTON (AP) - Reports written by doctors in charge of a federal syphilis experiment show that at least 28 of the Alabama black men used in the study died as a direct result of untreated syphilis.

Officials of the U.S. Public Health Service, which conducted the experiment (called the Tuskegee Study), said previously that seven men died as a result of untreated syphilis.

In the 40-year Tuskegee Study, at least 431 Macon County, Ala., black men were denied treatment for syphilis so that PHS doctors could determine through eventual autopsy what damage the untreated disease had done to their bodies.

After one group of autopsies, PHS doctors reported, "In 28-30.4 per cent of the 92 syphilic patients examined at autopsy, syphilitic involvement of the cardiovascular or the central nervous system was established as the primary cause of death."

That toll could be much higher than 28. Of some 431 untreated syphilitics-and that figure probably is higher since some early participants in the study dropped from sight and were replaced-74 survive, meaning at least 357 have died.

If the 30.4 per cent syphilis-caused death rate found for the first 92 men autopsied held true for the entire deceased portion of study population, the toll of men who died of untreated syphilis would be 107.

In addition to the high death rate, the reports detail a grim series of side effects suffered by participants in the Tuskegee Study, which began in 1932 and continues to this day.

From a 1946 report:

"Examination...did reveal evidence of arteriosclerosis hardening of the arteries more frequently in the syphilitic than in the control non-syphilitic group.....

Senate Defeats Tax Reform Plans

WASHINGTON (AP) - Efforts to adopt two tax-reform amendments to help pay for the $34.8-billion revenue-sharing bill failed in the Senate yesterday.

The votes came as Senate leaders pushed for final passage of the big bill-one of the major items remaining for action by the 92nd Congress.

However, Democratic leader Mike Mansfield of Montana said so many amendments remained that passage might not come until Tuesday or even later.

The tax-reform amendments were offered by Sens. Frank Church, D-Idaho, and Gaylord Nelson, D-Wis. Both said they could not vote for the legislation unless the Senate did something to raise at least part of the money to pay for it.

The first proposal, defeated 56 to 21, woul have repealed the accelerated depreciation benefit for business adopted last year as part of President Nixon's program to stimulate the economy.

It's not Watergate, but maybe it should be bugged!

Let's Do Something

This space is from this point on being filled by a civic service message. Words to the wise listener that are dedicated to at least partially clearing up an undealt with, ignored question on this campus; Racism.

We are all now participating in a cha-cha class, that is one step forward two steps backwards, an easy enough dance to learn: So many people credit themselves for their mere recognition of people of culturely different backgrounds that they allow their initial fear of the 'unknown' to force them backwards. Simply enough put: Seeing is one thing and relating is another. Of course now will come the justifications of deliberate ignorance (I don't have the time, they aren't worth it, there's too much hate involved, etc.) but we have a good basic premise so let's go on from there.

The next dance we learned is a popular number called egotripping. Now if all the radicals in the back will regain their seats, I'll elaborate. Pride is definitely a beautiful thing.

You have to have pride in what you are if you're ever to move on to what you want to be. However, a bad scene is likely to ensue when people of two different ethno-cultural backgrounds meet. Before he or she will look 'wishy-washy in front of one of 'them', he or she will turn off completely while all the while resting assure that they have done their part in the battle to alleviate racism. (Remember that ethnic joke that didn't go over so well?).

Solution? Come on now. Again to put it simply, it is the realization of the inherent beauty in everyone. This of course means giving up the last line of defense that we all draw on in hard times (ex. "So what if I fucked up this time, those (fill in your favorite here) still Shit!"). A solution so simple, yet loaded with the inherent wisdom of centuries. But be careful what you do with this 'message'. Those who have professed in the past have been called dreamers, fools, and madmen. They have been beaten, tortured, and murdered. If these notions seem a trifle romantic to you try them on someone you know already and see how long you have to wait for the ridicule, the scorn and the put downs. Until everyone gets hip it's going to be a rocky trip, but if it makes sense to you, a worthwhile one.

Although I don't usually endorse commercial slogans, it wouldn't hurt to give a listen to the Schick Ejector ad, "Sometimes Different Is Better". A saying that can apply both to yourself and to others as well.

Voter Registration

The Amherst Town Clerk will be on the Concourse Level of the Campus Center today from 10:00 A.M. to 6:00 P.M. to register individuals who wish to vote in Amherst.

According to the recently revised Masschusetts voting laws, a person no longer needs to prove residency for a specified period of time in order to be eligible to vote here. One need only present him/herself to the Clerk and prove that he/she lives in Amherst to be eligible to vote in Amherst. Residency in a dormitory is sufficient proof for those of you who live in dorms.

To paraphrase Voter Registration Chairperson Skip Casper's words, it's useless to criticise your government and fail to exercise your right to vote. For those of you who feel that there's no hope of your doing any good with your vote in the national election (we disagree), there is still the opportunity to do a lot of good in the local elections, with many candidates running who are really worthwhile.

One more thing. If you don't register, there's a good chance that the people who are elected aren't going to be very palatable to you. By then it will be too late, and you could have to live with these people in office for as long as six years. If you think back to where you were six years ago, you'll discover that it's a very long time. So don't waste your opportunity – register to vote today.

'ALL I EVER GET IS TEA — WHY IS THAT, KISSINGER?'

McGovernism Takes Over

Taking over the Democratic Party is one thing. Taking over the United States of America is another thing entirely. The Democratic Party was seriously weakened by a disease of contradictions which made its seduction by McGovernism a matter of inevitability. The United States, on the other hand, is in much tougher shape. At lease for the time being.

The Establishment commentators and opinion makers were caught with their pants down when it became apparent that McGovern stood a strong chance of winning the nomination. They had failed to predict that it was possible for anyone to subvert the pragmatic, "middle of the road" liberalism which has controlled the Democratic Party since the days of the New Deal. Once McGovern had won, the commentators scurried frantically to find some explanation for the demise of the "middle of the road." Some of them sought to attribute McGovern's success to his organization, or his popularity, or his charisma, or his youthful supporters. But these explanations hold about as much water as their previous predictions that Senator Muskie was invincible.

George McGovern's success cannot be attributed to any specific aspect of McGovernism. Plain and simply, McGovernism triumphed, not by its own virtues, but by DEFAULT. Those who are to blame for this default are those other "front-runners" in the campaign for the nomination: Senators Humphrey and Muskie.

Symbolically, Humphrey and Muskie represented the "middle of the road" and McGovern represented the "extreme Left" of the Party. In fact, there were no FUNDAMENTAL differences between the three. All three adhere to the same philosophical premises which constitute contemporary collectivist Liberalism. If one cares to examine the compiled voting records of both Humphrey and McGovern, one will find that Humphrey has been to the "left" of McGovern in his capacity as a United States Senator.

The difference between McGovernism and the pragmatic liberalism of the "middle of the road" candidates is that McGovern made explicit programs out of the implications of the traditional New Deal Democratic program. The conflict wasn't between candidates who held different principles. The conflict was between differing degrees of consistancy in enunciating those principles. Throughout the campaign for the nomination, Senator McGovern articulated the Liberal program with greater consistency, whereas the other two candidates faltered through the primaries, spouting off evasive generalities, and playing a game of mee-tooism to McGovern's initiatives. They yielded the initiatives to McGovern because they wanted to hold on to that mysterious no-man's-land: the "middle of the road."

For years, the commentators have been rhapsodizing about the holiness of the "middle of the road." Truth, we have been told, lies not in extremes, but in moderation. No one bothered to ask the experts what they meant by the "middle of the road." What would one think of a candidate who ran on a platform of moderate prosperity, moderate freedom, moderate law enforcement, moderate justice, and moderate honesty, etc?

Those who went to the polls in the Democratic Party primaries gave a swift kick in the rear to the notion of the "middle of the road." What they really voted against was the continued evasions, contradictions, and fence straddling which characterized the rhetoric of Humphrey and Muskie. The two candidates who took definitive stands on the issues were those who did the best in the primaries: George S. McGovern and George C. Wallace.

Yes, Wallace. His record in the primaries was another big surprise to the "experts." Although most of Wallace's stands were the opposite of those taken by McGovern, both candidates projected an image of moral certainty. The bussing issue, which was a hot potato in many primaries, gives us a concrete example of the impotence of the "middle of the roaders": McGovern took a consistant stand for it, Wallace was dead-set against it, Humphrey claimed that he wasn't contradicting himself by being both for and against, and Muskie was busy denouncing the "extremism" of Wallace without really opposing Wallace's stand on bussing.

Now McGovern is the Democratic Party nominee. He is, at present, busy trying to convince the Daleys, the Johnsons, the Meanys, and the majority of the registered Democrats that the positions he took during the campaign were misinterpreted, that he really isn't all that radical, and that his is in fact a "middle of the roader" at heart. President Nixon, who is not known for being a [illegible] of explicit conviction, is all of a sudden taking [illegible] offensive. And McGovern is now trying to convin[illegible] everybody that he isn't really against a strong military potential, he isn't really for legalized abortion, he doesn't really propose to give everybody $1000, but he does think he can win in Nov. I'll bet on him. One Thousand Percent!

Boltwood Needs Your Help

To the Editor:

I am writing hopefully to make the University Community more aware of the Boltwood-Belchertown program. The program enables students to work directly with the residents of the Belchertown State School as friend and companion. There are many types of programs each dealing with specific groups of residents and each rewarding for both the student and residents.

Basically the program allows students to become involved with people who appreciate your concern and your love. It allows us as students to help make people who have little control over their lives a bit happier. It allows us to learn about and experience people who are too often overlooked. It allows us to get off our asses for just once.

The Collegian, WMUA, and other local media will have information about organizational meetings to be held next week. Please try to attend one of these meetings. Many people will be gratefull for your concern.

Inflation

To the Editor:

This is just to alert those students on campus who have not yet noticed the prices you are asked to pay in the Hatch this year, once a haven from the inflated prices of the Campus Center. Tuna sandwiches (the sawdust kind you used to pay 50¢ for in order to avoid the line waiting for hamburger) are now 60¢. A large soft drink, now similar in size to the old small size, is 20¢. And of course there is the continuing problem of of overpriced, undersized, snack cakes: ring-dings, cupcakes, etc.

A regular size can of brand name tuna costs approx. 63¢; large size mayonnaise about 79¢; McDonalds' hamburgs cost about half the price, the service is faster, and the french fries are better. Pound for pound, there is probably less grease as well.

For those of you who can't take advantage of alternative means of nourishment, it is probably small consolation to note that in every case, a non-competitive service, presented with a captive consumer, seldom need improve its service or product. Food services at UMass can be likened in this sense to AT & T, the electric company, the registry of motor vehicles, prisons....We are not alone.

Hurt Pride

To the Editor:

I have always had great pride in my driving ability. After eleven years of driving, my record showed one ticket for speeding.

Today my pride was crushed...so was my car's front end. I couldn't believe it when it happened. A rear end collision. No question as to whose fault it was. (Gulp) mine.

The reason I am writing this letter is to protest the circumstances of the accident and also to warn other drivers who may be as proud of their record as I was. I protest the fact that there was an art exhibit on the side of the road to distract me from my driving. Yes an art exhibit. Maybe you've seen it on Rte. 9 by the shopping center with a large sign saying, "MUST SELL. ARTIST IS HUNGRY." Well, being a sensitive young artist myself who couldn't resist looking, just as I realized I'd seen this same "exhibit" three times before this summer at three different gas stations in eastern Mass., I also realized that this time I wasn't going to stop in time. There really ought to be a law along the same lines as "indecent" exposure where people could get hurt under certain conditions.

I was lucky. Only my pride was hurt.

Winter Is Coming

Index? Ugh!

To the Editor:

Well, folks, I just read Index '72...as I write this it is difficult to realize(sic) why I bothered – and easy to see why many feel the Index should be abolished. Though editor Sobzak claims to have made attempts at "relevancy" and to understand the responsibility of a yearbook to reflect the dynamic forces within the institution and in the society, he has managed to subvert the community to the '72 Index as his personal memorial: witness his closing remarks, page 392. Such a public declaration of accomplishment and love may be gratifying to Mr. and Mrs. Sobzak in their waning years, but it means little to the rest of us.

Perhaps the most insulting entry is the treatment of the women's movement. The cavalier tone of the scant 2 paragraphs (considerably less representation for 1/2 the campus than for 1 editor) reflects the sexist attitudes of most communications media, both on campus and off. But more importantly, the piece insults the women of this campus, and the intelligence of those in the community who have taken the time and effort to understand the meaning of the women's movement, its importance to the university and the society as a whole – an effort that Mr. Sobzak and apparently the rest of the Index staff has yet to make. Without further comment I refer all to pages 154, 166, and the Index budget figures approaching $80,000.00.

Time To Register

To the Editor:

The gap between rhetoric and deeds widens as the politician's bid for a constituency widens. What fails to get through Congress, let alone what never reaches Congress, is enough to boil the blood of anyone who has ever been handed a line by a junior high school Civics teacher about our democratic system. Nelson Rockefeller is still going to enjoy the privileges of being extremely wealthy, even if you register to vote.

The possibility that Richard Nixon will be re-elected in November is a distinct one; in any case it is improbable that he will carry Massachusetts. The world will not end simply because you don't vote, nor will it be saved simply because you do vote. Perhaps your vote will not amount to anything in the cosmic scheme.

Nevertheless, you should register to vote today. What is involved is a freedom of choice, a choice not only of whether to vote for McGovern or Nixon, or O'Leary or Droney, or even Rosencrantz or Guildenstern. It is also a choice of whether or not to vote. You do not have that choice if you are not registered. Unregistered, you simply cannot vote.

Both major political parties have a great fear/respect for the kids, a fear based on the '60's when we were a threat to their complacency. No candidate is truly interested in being friends with us; they just want our vote. If you aren't registered, you allow them to ignore you.

By all means, make every politician who asks for your vote earn it, but first establish your right to vote. If you don't like politicians, at least don't let them get too comfortable. Shake them up a bit: register to vote today.

McG Analyses Nixon Response To Charges

VERNON CENTER, MINN. (AP) - Sen. George McGovern said Monday the Nixon administration's sharp response to his allegations of special-interest favoritism in the U.S.—Soviet wheat deal indicates he has hit "a real sore point."

McGovern's answer to the second news conference in three days by Agriculture Secretary Earl L. Butz came after the Democratic presidential nominee told a farm gathering here that the Nixon administration seeks to eliminate family farmers.

If elected, McGovern added, he will move "to stop the takeover of American agriculture by absentee corporations and Fifth Avenue Farmers."

Noting that Butz had called his accusations "a bald-faced lie," McGovern declared "I may be a little bit bald but I'm not a liar."

He vowed to press his contention that the administration engaged in a conspiracy of silence with large grain corporations to withhold from farmers the magnitude of the wheat deal in order to buy up wheat at lower prices.

McGovern spoke to the annual "Farmfest USA" festival in this Minnesota town while awaiting the arrival of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass. Kennedy is being counted on to give his campaign a psychological lift by drawing large crowds to rallies from Minneapolis through the industrial Midwest to New England.

But the loudest applause came when McGovern returned to his longtime antiwar theme, vowing to end "the tragic, wasteful, immoral and futile war that is now bleeding our resources in Southeast Asia."

Most of McGovern's major points have been made before: a pledge to raise farm income by raising parity, the price deemed fair to farmers in relation to their costs; a tax-reform proposal that would reduce property taxes by having the federal government assume all welfare costs and one-third of local education costs; and a measure to bar non-farm corporations from engaging in farming by eliminating their tax advantages.

Kennedy is to appear with McGovern Tuesday in Chicago, Detroit and Cleveland, Wednesday in Pittsburgh and Philadelphia and Thursday in Albany, New York and Waterbury, Conn.

R.I. Votes Tuesday

PROVIDENCE (AP) - Thirteen state legislators face renomination tests Tuesday as voters in 16 Rhode Island communities cast ballots in primary elections.

Overall, 27 contests have shaped up for General Assembly nominations. All but one Senate fight in Central Falls are among Democrats.

In 17 of the state's communities there will be no elections because both Democratic and Republican tickets for congressional seats and five general state offices were nominated without opposition.

In addition to the legislative primaries, voters in various communities will settle battles for council nominations and seats on state and local party committees.

Incumbent Democratic senators involved in primaries are Francis H. Smith of Woonsocket, Joseph L. Varley of Central Falls and Thomas N. Goodwin, Rocco A. Quattrocchi and Louis H. Pastore Jr., all of Providence.

State representatives facing renomination opposition are Democrats Albert J. Lepore, Robert F. Adamo, Alphonse J. Rayatta, Joseph M. Berg, Leonard H. Forrest Jr. Louis H. Richards, Richard H. Kiley and George A. Newbury.

POW In "McG Club"

WASHINGTON (AP) - The mother of a Navy flier who is a prisoner of war in North Vietnam enrolled her son Monday in George McGovern's fund-raising effort, "The Million-Member Club." She said her POW son asked her in a letter to enroll him.

"I can't tell you how moved I am by this," said Eleanor McGovern, wife of the Democratic presidential candidate, upon receiving a check for $25 from Mrs. Marion Kernan of Washington, D.C.

Mrs. Kernan's son, Joseph, 26, joined the Navy soon after graduating from Notre Dame University in 1968. His plane was shot down over North Vietnam last May 7.

Bus Schedule Bungles

The Coordinator's office admits to the usual errors, omissions, and unwarranted confusion in this year's Five College Bus Schedule, but with your collective patience and intelligence, we should all get over it very soon.

1) Two bus runs between 3:00 and 5:00 PM on Route #2 (Smith-Amherst-UMass-&return) were totally forgotten. The missing times are on a YELLOW slip of paper which you should have gotten with your bus schedule. If you don't have one, GET ONE. Write the times on your schedule. Buses around dinnertime are too important to be left out.

2) Another flurry of confusion arises yearly over the SAT & SUN 12 mid. and 1 AM buses. Remember–if you are getting a 1 AM late-night bus on Saturday, it's really Sunday morning. The two late weekend buses are on FRIDAY and SATURDAY nights. If you are out there waiting for a 1:35 AM bus on what you thought was Sunday, you're 24 hours too late.

If you haven't got a schedule, go immediately to your nearest Registrar's Office, Five College Information Center, or the front Information or Reception Desk at your college. We hope you will find the Five College Buses to be convenient and pleasant travel around the Valley this year.

Lost and Found

The University Lost & Found, located at the bottom of the escalator in the Campus Center is open from 8 A.M. to 8 P.M Monday thru Saturday and from 1 P.M. to 8 P.M. on Sunday.

Last year over 1,000 lost articles were returned to their rightful owners. Unfortunately, however, 45% of the total number of lost items went unclaimed, and were therefore donated to charitable institutions after being held for one semester.

Can This Be Bobby Fischer?

Bobby Fischer is planning to change his life-style substantially now that he is the world chess champion, Life magazine says in its issue out today.

An article entitled "Can This Be Bobby Fischer?" predicts that the heretofore unpredictable 29-year-old champion will buy an expensive car and a house in California with his new-found wealth, and will begin "a social life that includes women."

"Now that I'm champion I'm going to see more girls," Life quotes Fischer as confiding to its reporter. The article says that Fischer "has never been quite so complete a stranger to sex as people supposed" but that he has always put chess before everything.

The "big new fac" in Fischer's life, according to the magazine, is money. Offers from commercial sources for other chess sets, records, and a chess special on television could generate more than $10-million for Fischer, who, in his pre-champion days earned about $20,000 a year. But Fischer has not yet signed a contract.

"I want to make money," he is quoted by Life as having said, "but I hate to see the creeps gathering around."

His primary goal is to win respect for chess, Life says.

"Chess masters should play under superb conditions and be paid as well as top athletes, Fischer told Life. "Whatever Muhammed Ali gets, next time I want more."

The author of the article, Brad Darrach, a Life staff member, accompanied Fischer to Iceland, where Fischer won the championship.

Bird In The Hand

The bird, which somehow became separated from both its nest and mother, was found about four weeks ago by the shop's proprietor, Tom Robinson.

The tiny robin couldn't even fly then. It can now, but it doesn't seem to want to leave the shop or the Robinson home.

Why should it? The bird has it made. Robinson hand feeds it with tidbits-or hamburg steak chased with milk.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by SYDNEY OMARR

Cancer persons hang on, are persistent, eventually get what they seek and are capable of accumulating large sums of money. Cancer makes money with Leo, falls in love with Scorpio, builds for security with Libra and should exercise caution in dealing with Aries. Natives of Cancer hide things, dig holes and find secret places for keeping valuables.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Lie low. Your judgment, intuition may be slightly off target. Emphasis is on marriage, partnership, legal agreements. Let others take initiative. You gain by quietly observing and planning. Keep strategy private.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Study Taurus message. Don't be in too much of a hurry. Build slowly. Ensure security in areas of work and health. Avoid extremes. Deal with Pisces. Secret could be revealed. Be discreet. You can learn and earn.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Good lunar aspect now coincides with success through creative endeavors. Capricorn could play prominent role. Drive ahead with your own style. Emphasize individuality. Romance is much in picture.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Completion now is key. You finish project. Plans are outlined. Blueprint is brought into focus. Practical efforts dominate. One who opposed you in past now could offer to cooperate. Accept.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Short trip is featured. Visiting relative also is in picture. Be independent, original. Don't follow crowd. Stress humor, versatility. Try various procedures. Be flexible, willing to laugh at own foibles.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Debts can be paid, collected. Intuition works overtime. You can spot genuine bargain. Don't jump at first offer. Aquarian can be of aid. Choose course which is unorthodox. Get accounting and count your change.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Take initiative. Be a self-starter. Stress originality. Highlight personality. Trust your own judgment. Expand horizons. Refuse to be pigeonholed. Accent expansion. Your own style "catches on."

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Places of confinement are much in picture. Some restrictions are necessary. You can gain through organization, institution. Check details. Learn rules before attempting to break them.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Emphasis is on pleasure, relief from tensions. Love and desire are spotlighted. Relationships are intensified. Nothing now is apt to occur halfway. It is all or nothing, especially where opposite sex are concerned.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Efforts are rewarded. You have feeling of satisfaction. Family member expresses love. Be receptive reciprocate. One born under Taurus helps you to fulfill basic goal. You're going places!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Good lunar aspect now coincides with chance for added knowledge, travel. You are able to separate truth from fiction. Your natural abilities surge to forefront. You become your own person. You are happier.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have fine sense of humor, are versatile, expressive and artistic. You have natural talent in writing area, can put across ideas and are a natural critic. Your standards are high. In October you make change which leads to recognition and opportunity for creative activity and travel.

"Chaotic" Olympics End

AP Special Correspondent

MUNICH (AP) — The president of the U.S. Olympic Committee promised Monday a full review of America's distressing performance at Munich the nation's most dismal showing in the history of the Games.

"I am disappointed, but not critical," said Clifford H. Buck of Denver, prior to the dowsing of the Olympic flame, symbol of the Games.

"Medals aren't everything but I must confess that I thought we would do better. I thought we would be at least even with the Russians in winning golds."

The powerful Soviet Union, flying the Red Banner of the hammer and sickle, replaced the United States as the champion of the Games by winning 50 gold medals to 33 for the United States and a total of 99 to America's 93.

Four yars ago at Mexico City the Americans, traditionally the strongest of all teams, led the medal count with 107 to Russia's 91 and produced almost twice as many golds, symbols of championships, 45 to 29.

"Of course, we have been warning everyone that the rest of the world is catching up with us," the tall, grey-haired executive added, "Especially East Germany, which was very strong here.

The clarion call of the modern games is "altius, citius, fortius," meaning "higher, faster, stronger."

For the first time, the Russians were more altius, more citius and more fortius than anybody else. And the proud Yanks-accustomed to painting the various arenas red, white and blue and filling the air with the strains of The Star Spangled Banner-had to settle for second place.

The United States in the 1972 games was synonymous with chaos and confusion. It is Buck's job-and the job of his aides-to find exactly where the fault lies.

The Soviet Union produced the fastest man in the world, Valery Borzov. It had the highest jumper, Juri Tarmak. It had the best all-around athlete, the decathlon champion, Nikolai Avilov. It had the world's strongest man, Vassili Alexeyev, the super heavyweight weight-lifter who lifts by the half-tons, not by pounds. The Soviet Union had the most exciting female personality-18-year-old Olga Korbut, winner of two gold medals and a silver in women's gymnastics.

The Russians handed the United States its first defeat in history in basketball, a sport invented by a New England professor named Dr. Naismith and played in every back yard in the land. It was the bitterest pill to swallow.

The United States produced the outstanding male star of the games, swimmer Mark Spitz, winner of an unprecedented seven gold medals. But the water exploits of the 22-year-old Indiana University student from Carmichael, Calif., were swallowed up in more dramatic succeeding developments.

Spitz had hardly returned to the Olympic Village with his seventh gold medal when a group of Arab terrorists moved into the Israeli quarters. Before this tense situation, involving heads of states, was resolved, 11 Israelis, five Arab commandos and a Munich policeman were dead.

I HAVE MY DOUBTS THAT OUR PROTEST IS GOING TO HOLD UP.

Incidents proceeded to erupt like exploding Chinese firecrackers in the ensuing days. Rick Demont, a 16-year-old California schoolboy with asthma, was stripped of his gold medal in the 400-meter freestyle swimming race because of a forbidden drug ephredine.

The U.S. 400-meter gold medalist, Vince Matthews of Brooklyn, N.Y. and silver medalist Wayne Collett of Los Angeles, were banned from all future Olympics by the International Olympic Committee executive board for what was called a "disgusting and disrespectful" display on the victory stand.

Then Jim Ryun, the world record-holder, stumbled and fell in the 1,500-meter heats, robbing America of a possible medal in the metric mile.

. Buck acknowledged that he had received critical telegrams from home, decrying the U.S. protest to the IOC on the ouster of Matthews and Collett.

"Our letter to the IOC was misunderstood by most press people," Buck said. "We in no way meant to convey that we did not think Matthews and Collett were deserving of disciplinary action."

"Our complaint was that the IOC usurped our prerogative in dealing with the issue. We were prepared to take our own steps-perhaps even more severe than those of the IOC-when the IOC made its announcement. We thought the principals deserved a hearing first."

Tribe Trips Sox, 6-5 To Tighten Race

By BOB ESTELLE

The Boston Red Sox lost some ground to the rest of the pack last night as they dropped an exciting game to the Cleveland Indians by a score of 6-5.

The game started off as a wild 'n wooly affair as the Red Sox scored two in the first on Carl Yastrzemski's 7th home run of the season. Starter Dick Tidrow was then bailed out of a tough situation as Rico Petrocelli grounded into an inning-ending double play after a walk to Reggie Smith.

But the Indians retaliated with three in their half of the first. With one out, second baseman John Brohamer homered off of starter Sonny Siebert. After Chris Chambliss flew out to Luis Aparicio at short, Graig Nettles, who has been a thorn in the side of the Sox during the series, singled to left and scored on Tommy McCraw's triple off the right field wall. Rookie Buddy Bell, twenty-year-old son of former major leaguer Gus Bell, singled to left to score McCraw.

Home runs by Smith and Carleton Fisk in the fourth off of Tidrow, and a leadoff home run by Sox reliever Bill Lee in the fifth off Ray Lamb tied the score at five each but the Indians broke the tie on a very controversial play in the sixth. Bell started it off with his third hit of the game, a single to left field. Shortstop Jack Heidemann was then hit by a pitched ball. Catcher Gerry Moses sacrificed them over to second and third with a perfect bunt to Petrocelli at third. Kurt Bevacqua pinched hit for pitcher Ray Lamb and was intentionally passed. Roy Foster then hit for outfielder Del Unser and hit a fly ball to left which leftfielder Ben Oglivie dropped. Bell scored from third but Oglivie saved himself an error when he forced Heidemann at third. Then Foster, for no apparent reason, was called out. Confusion then reigned for a few minutes as the Red Sox infielders were throwing the ball around tagging everybody out as the two managers were trying to figure out what happened. Did Oglivie hold onto the fly ball long enough for Foster to be out and then pick off a runner attempting to advance or what? Did the run count?

Well, the ruling by umpire Larry Napp was that Oglivie did indeed drop the ball and that Heidemann was indeed forced at third by Oglivie's throw. Foster was called out for passing Bevacqua between first and second base. Since that action occurred after Bell had scored, the run did indeed count.

O's Keep Winning

BALTIMORE (AP) — Boog Powell's three-run homer in the fourth inning-his first one since Aug. 21-powered the Baltimore Orioles to a 3-2 victory over Milwaukee Monday night for a sweep of the four-game American League baseball series.

Powell rapped his 18th homer, on a 3-2 pitch from Jim Colborn, 7-6, after Bobby Grich and Tommy Davis singled to open the fourth.

Mike Cuellar, 16-10, allowed three of Milwaukee's hits in the seventh inning as the Brewers snapped a 31-inning scoreless streak against Baltimore pitching.

Cuellar, who has won four straight and is 12-4 since June 28, stranded three runners on second base before the Brewers averted a sixth shutout at the hands of the Orioles this season.

Patience is a virtue

Someone has a long journey.

Someone has a long memory.

An anonymous sports fan snuck into the Collegian office, evidently under cover of darkness, and left a sickeningly polite note addressed to me with a message that in effect said: "Do justice to the Sox."

So, in this bittersweet of all moments, a moment that comes to all who stick their neck out in print, I must eat crow.

The "Beantown Bombers", despite their rather shameful (for a first place team) record, have done better than they had any right to. Even though I am still dubious of their first place chances, I can't help but root for this crew, who were demoralized, unhappy, and incompetent as recently as the Fourth of July.

Not impossible, as in 1967, for then the talent, the will, the "destiny" if you want, was all there, waiting only to be catalyzed. And in Jim Lonborg, Dick Williams, and Carl Yastrzemski, the catalysts were there.

This season there was nothing.

Talent? They traded away their bullpen, their rookie pitching phenom didn't throw a pitch in the majors all year, their catching duo had probably 100 big league at bats between them, their first baseman played like a walking Sominex commercial, and their big sticker didn't hit a home run until people were starting to lose their suntans. That's talent?

Will? The first four months of the season saw more "viruses" hit the Sox than you find in a rain forest.

Catalysts? An unhappy Reggie Smith, an unhappy Carl Yastrzemski, an unhappy Juan Beniquez. Those are catalysts? Does Eddie Kasko strike you as a catalyst?

What happened then?

Disregarding the fact that Detroit and Baltimore played, and are still playing, a brand of baseball just slightly better than high school JV, Luis Tiant happened. And Carlton Fisk happened. And Carl Yastrzemski began to rise from the dead.

But probably most of all what happened is that the Eddie Kasko patient, boring, and above all deadly dull school of managing began, for the first time, in three years, to succeed.

I wouldn't have let Marty Pattin near my pitcher's mound after he ran his record to 2-8. Look at him now.

I wouldn't have let Luis Tiant across the Florida state line in March after his 1-7 record the year before. He's now the best pitcher in baseball.

I probably would have panicked and taken Lynn McGlothen and John Curtis up north for opening game rather than send them down for a couple of months of valuable seasoning. Remember Billy Rohr? It'll never happen to Curtis or McGlothen.

The Red Sox have somehow, incredibly, become a good ball club. They're fortunate to be in the AL East, but fortune is the tenth player on any championship team.

Because of the strike, I pledged to not go again this year into Yawkey's Acres. I won't. But I do hope the Sox go all the way.

Luis Tiant deserves it.

Nance Gets Axe

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Veteran fullbacks Tom Woodeshick and Jim Nance were among four players cut Monday as the Philadelphia Eagles got down to the National Football League's 40-man limit.

The Eagles, who open next Sunday in Dallas against the defending Super Bowl Champion Cowboys, also released veteran defensive end Don Brumm and rookie middlelinebacker Will Foster, a seventh-round selection from Eastern Michigan.

Celebration Speakers Bypassed; Students Eat Instead

By BOB CALLAHAN

The goal of a "responsive, meaningful and viable intellectual community" was set forth yesterday by Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery in his first Opening Convocation Celebration address as Chancellor, before a very small turnout of faculty, staff and students.

A chicken barbecue along with entertainment by several local musical groups followed the ceremonies and was attended by 13,000 students, most of whom bypassed the official ceremonies.

Other featured speakers included UMass President Robert Wood and Student Senate President Larry Ladd. The names of six distinguished Teacher Award winners were also announced.

Three Faculty members, Assistant Professor George Burak of General Business and Finance, Associate Professor of Food Science and Technology Fergus Clydesdale, and Assistant Professor Mash Rudman of Education were the recipients of a $1,000 stipend provided by the Standard Oil Foundation.

For the first time, three outstanding graduate student teaching assistants were honored. They were Jane Perlmutter of psychology, Ernest Seglie of Physics and William Tremblay of English.

In his speech Bromery said that "the truly great university must meet the needs of a wider society." He made reference to the Carnegie Commission Report which suggests that we are now entering a phase of universal attendance of higher education. "This does not mean universal attendance, but it does point to a dramatic opening of higher education to more elements of society than ever before," he said.

Bromery called the task of the 1970's to be one of "greater accomodation of education to the needs of an increasingly more diversified student body." He said that this will require new and improved methods of teaching, a more diversified faculty, different institutional structures, and innovative ways of making available our educational resources to an increasingly broader spectrum of people.

The UMass Chancellor also called for a "clear set of priorities for the University which respond to the critical educational, and social needs of our society and which at the same time recognizes the very real and growing financial constraints under which we are now operating and which will undoubtedly continue to operate under in the forseeable future."

In closing. Bromery stressed the importance of the University's obligation toward public service. He said, "there are compelling reasons for the University, through public service and other means, to respond to the demands of increasing numbers of students and faculty for greater involvement in the immediate and serious social problems of the day."

UMass President Robert Wood, in a short address, acknowledged the leadership of Dr. Bromery and said that the beginning of the new academic year brings with it a sense of renewal and possibility of change. He called this "a time for all to strengthen and defend the institution of the University.

Course Description Head Sought

By STEPHEN FISHER

Nick Apostola, Chairman of the Academic Affairs Committee of the Student Senate, announced yesterday the forthcoming publication of a new Course Description Guide. He also reported that the position of editor of the guide is open for applicants.

This is a paid position, although the salary has not yet been determined, and should preferably be filled by a freshman or sophomore. The responsibilities of the job include hiring and coordinating typists, completing various clerical tasks, and gathering course descriptions from the academic departments. This last task demands patience and persistance, in view of the fact that only a 60% response was received from all University professors during the last printing of the guide.

Applicants for the position of editor should be somewhat experienced in management and must be willing to learn a small amount of printing techniques. The job will require about 1-1/2 months of intensive work. Prospective applicants should contact Nick Apostola in the Student Senate office for further information.

Vice-Chancellor Still Sought

By HUGH OWEN

Since Oswald Tippo's resignation as Chancellor at UMass-Amherst last fall, the Vice Chancellorship for Student Affairs, (which was vacated by Dr. Randolph Bromery in order that he fill the vacated Chancellor's post), has been temporarily filled by Dr. Robert Gage.

In order that a permanent Vice-Chancellor be found the Search Committee for the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs was formed during the latter weeks of the spring semester. The delay in forming the committee was brought about first by the School of Ed strike, then the student strike, and also by disorders in the Faculty Senate.

Once formed, the first action the committee took was to circulate letters throughout colleges in the country, requesting applications from the communities. Letters were also sent to agencies which in turn solicited applications from various other sources.

The next step was to review the vitas of the applicants as they came in to the committee and rank them correspondingly. The candidates were then narrowed down to a group small enough to be interviewed by the committee. These interviews took place during August.

As of now the field is narrowed down to a very small group of applicants, and the Search Committee feels that now is the time for more student input into the process of finding a Vice-Chancellor.

However, SGA President Larry Ladd has said that Gage will probably be chosen.

The committee would like to arrange some type of format in which students could interview the applicants. Whether or not this would actually be feasible is being discussed and the committee welcomes any suggestions from students as to how these interviews might be accomplished.

The Search Committee was originally composed of seventeen members: nine undergraduate students, two graduate students, two faculty members, and three Chancellor appointments. However, there are now only seven undergraduates, one having graduated and one recently dropped out of school.

Although hampered in their work by the closing of school and the subsequent scattering of the student members of the committee, Marjorie Lenn, chairwoman of the committee, said she was pleased that most of the committee members were very regular about showing up at meetings. Some of the applicants were surprised to learn their interviews were being held on a Sunday so the students who worked during the week could attend the interview.

The Search committee for the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs will meet this Wednesday, Sept. 13, at 7:00 P.M. in B-15 Baker House in the Central Area. Attendance is vital.

Nixon Accelerates Campaign

WASHINGTON (AP) - Prsident Nixon and his top personal and political advisers charted re-election campaign strategy Tuesday, including an accelerated effort to embrace disenchanted Democrats.

As Nixon and his 39 high-level breakfast guests sipped coffee and talked politics in the State Dining Room, state Republican chairmen and directors of state campaign committees were meeting elsewhere in the capital.

The state GOP leaders moved on to a private White House reception after a day of pep talks and briefings from key campaign officials including the Republican national chairman, Robert Dole, and campaign director Clark MacGregor.

The flurry of Republican campaign meetings came precisely eight weeks prior to the Nov. 7 general election and focused on Nixon's efforts to seek a new majority of Republicans, Democrats and independents.

MacGregor told the three-hour White House breakfast meeting of plans for a major, nationwide effort Saturday to canvass local precincts, registering voters and enlisting campaign volunteers.

A special target appears to be Democrats unhappy with the presidential nomination of Sen. George McGovern. A related target is the election of more congressmen favorable to the Nixon administration's major proposals.

White House press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler confirmed that Nixon will make a political foray into vote-rich Texas on Sept. 22. He will visit the ranch of former Treasury Secretary John B. Connally, head of the Democrats for Nixon organization who has become a target of McGovern attacks.

Ziegler said Nixon and Vice President Spiro T. Agnew made brief comments at the breakfast meeting, along with MacGregor and other unspecified campaign officials.

He would not disclose the specifics of Nixon's talk, but said in answer to question that the alleged bugging of Democratic National headquarters and the controversy over Republican campaign funds were not discussed.

He said also the campaign finance chairman, former Commerce Secretary Maurice H. Stans, was not at the meeting.

Other speakers at the breakfast session included Senate Minority Leader Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania and House GOP leader Gerald Ford of Michigan. Ziegler said they discussed pending legislative matters.

Nixon has said the record of the Democratic-controlled Congress "will be a real issue in this campaign."

Ex-Humphrey Backer Helps Nixon Campaign

WASHINGTON (AP) - The largest contributor to Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey's unsuccessful presidential bid has donated $48,000 in recent weeks to President Nixon's re-election campaign.

Duncan gave $300,000 to Humphrey's primary campaign this year, $200,000 of it the day before the Minnesota senator was defeated by Sen. George McGovern in the decisive California primary June 6.

Ray A. Kroc, chairman of the McDonald's hamburger chain, gave $52,000 divided among nine committees in a practice Republicans recently criticized Democratic nominee McGovern for using.

The largest McGovern contributor was Alejandro Zaffaroni of Atherton, Calif., who donated $58,850 to 22 committees set up specifically to receive his contributions. All but one of the committees listed no other donor.

WMPIRG To Challenge Electric Rate Hike

By JERRY ALTMAN

For the second time in 18 months Western Massachusetts Electric Co. has asked the Department of Public Utilities to approve a rate increase, but because the proceedings of the Sept. 21 D.P.U. hearing in Springfield on the requested rate hike will apparently take place without adequate representation of the consumers, Western Massachusetts Public Interest Group (WMPIRG) will file suit in the state supreme judicial court to block the increase.

Ronald Bogard, appointed director of WMPIRG in August, said that the student funded group, along with an ad-hoc committee called CONSUM—IRATE, will attempt to stop the hearing because of the Attorney General's office and the state Consumer Council's failure to intervene on behalf of Western Massachusetts consumers. CONSUM-IRATE was formed by labor, business, and public officials.

The rate increase automatically becomes effective Dec. 1 if no objection is made at the Springfield hearing.

"Any rate increase granted under those circumstances would force consumers to pay higher rates without having had a voice in the proceedings and would result in an unconstitutional taking of their property," a WMPIRG statement said.

Contacted at his office in the former Carraige Motor Inn in Amherst, Bogard added that the procedure would violate the 14th amendment which guarantees that property cannot be taken without due process of law. "Paying more money for electricity means in effect the taking of property and becomes unconstituional when the consumer pays that increase without first enjoying due process," he said.

The electric company is seeking a $5.7 million, or 9%, rate hike, a request which was originally made on Jan. 17, nine months after the D.P.U. approved a rate increase of $5,375,000. The company does an annual $75 million worth of business in the four western Mass. counties.

While the state Attorney General's office concurs with WMPIRG's position on the unconstitutionality of the case, it has not moved to intervene against WMECO. There are at present four public utility rate increase requests filed in the Boston area. The Attorney General has chosen to intervene in two of those cases, against Boston Gas and New England Telephone.

The state Consumer Council, on top of lacking adequate funds and staff, has its budget tied in with the Attorney General's and would not be able to move without the Attorney General as its counsel. As it stands now, the Attorney General has his hands full.

The issue, also raises the prospect of western Mass. consumers being denied equal protection under the law, owing to the fact that their eastern counterparts will be represented in the gas and telephone cases.

"By focusing attention on the unconstitutionality of the whole scheme, the legislature would be forced to enact more healthy measures that represent all the people," Bogard said. "Most people, including the legislature, are asleep on the issue. The public utility lobby is too strong, with the result that increasing rates meet little or no opposition. There is no real mechanism for carrying out this type of legislation. Get the courts to decide and shift the burden to the legislature."

The ramafications of this case are state wide, and could conceivably have a bearing on the $122 million telephone case. As far as is known, this action is the first of its kind and as it is a state wide issue, the outcome could have precedent setting value for other states.

Prospects of an electricity rate increase should prove particularly disquieting to UMASS students, to whom it would be passed on. An increase in dorm fees could almost certainly be expected as a consequence, should the request be granted.

Bogard talked about alternatives to public utility monopolies. Holyoke and Chicopee, for instance, do not use WMECO power, but are supplied with electricity from their own municipal power plants, resulting in lower electricity costs for the consumers of those two communities. Berkeley, Calif. is similarly moving in that direction. Decentralized power stations, he said, are a real and economical alternative. Pubpic utilities monopolies, he added, are more interested in perpetuating and expanding themselves, rather than streamlining service.

"Where do you find consumer groups with muscle?" he said, alluding to the ineffectual state consumer council. Bogard would like to see a state regulatory agency here in Massachusetts modelled after California's Public

Volunteer to Support JOE

J.O.E., the Juvenile Opportunities Extension, has scheduled a recruitment meeting for tomorrow (Wednesday) Sept. 13, 1972 at 7:30 P.M. in room 162 of the Campus Center for interested student volunteers. The hope is to put together a volunteer program for this academic year that will deal with about 20 or more youth who are on parole.

In the past J.O.E. has dealt with delinquent youth who were residing at the Westfield Detention Center. Efforts were directed at having volunteers work on the center floor dealing directly with the youth. Experiences in this type of work has proven that the most effective work was done by volunteers who had taken youth outside the building for a specific activity.

With this direction in mind J.O.E. has taken on the responsibility of covering the city of Holyoke and the immediate area as part of the Department of Youth Services move to take care of troubled youth in their own community. This move has come under a lot of fire publicly by those individuals who favor keeping youth locked up in what amounts warehouses for the Commonwealth's poor children.

The youth that J.O.E. volunteers will be working with will be referred to the organization by the Regional Office for the Department of Youth Services located in Springfield. Volunteers will then make contact with each youth on a one to one basis. The plan is to continue this contact so that the youth can develop a valid sense of trust with the volunteer. When this is accomplished the volunteer will then work with the youth to work out a possible goal for and with the youth for his positive growth-keeping him out of trouble and out of any institutional setting.

This program will of course have its problems so students who are sincerely interested with strong personalities to withstand the challenge are requested. The youth will be mostly teenagers who have found the need to establish strong personalities in order to survive. The problem is that the actions of the kids are not accepted by a society which essentially generated and caused such actions.

Generally the efforts of the program will be aimed at making youth understand the implications of their actions so that they can control their actions especially those which will cause a run in with the authorities. Beyond this general approach all other aspects

Revenue Sharing Passes Senate

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Tuesday passed a $33.6-billion measure to share federal revenues with states, cities and counties for the first time on a no-strings basis.

The vote was 63 to 20.

The legislation, one of President Nixon's priority items, was sent to conference with the House which passed a considerably different version June 22.

If the conferees reach agreement promptly, sponsors of the bill said, the first payments to the 39,000 eligible states, cities, counties and townships would go out in October, before the Nov. 7 election.

The most important difference between the two versions is in the formula for distribution of the funds.

The Senate bill, as compared with the House version, allocates more money to the less-populous states but, within the states, the central cities fare much better than the suburbs.

Sen. Russell B. Long, D-La., floor manager for the bill, succeeded in fig ting off all attempts to change the formula to help the big states.

The Senate and HHouse bills each provide $29.6 billion in straight revenue-sharing funds over five years.

The program would be retroactive to Jan. 1 this year and would end Dec. 31, 1976. It would have to be reconsidered by that time.

In addition, the Senate bill contains an extra $1 billion annually for four years in place of the present program of social services for welfare recipients and potential recipients.

This actually is a sharp cutback in the present levels of spending for the services; it was put into the bill in an effort to stop what some members of Congress feel is a runaway program.

The revenue-sharing money starts at $5.3 billion the first year and goes up in $300-million annual increments until it reaches $6.5 billion in the fifth year.

In each version, the states get one-third of the money, the cities and other units two-thirds. The payments will come to all recipients directly from the U.S. Treasury.

The final vote was delayed mainly by a dispute between senators from heavily populated states and those from smaller states.

Leaders dropped plans for an early afternoon final vote as debate on amendments took longer than they had estimated.

The sharpest dispute erupted over an extraneous issue injected into the bill by the Senate Finance Committee.

This involved a tight ceiling on the program of social services for welfare recipients and potential recipients which many in Congress and the administration feel has gotten out of hand.

In the key vote, the Senate decided 60 to 28 to put an even tougher limit on the services than Finance had imposed.

The committee had voted for a $1 billion ceiling on all services but two-day care for children and family planning.

This would provide for a $1.7 billion annual program, less than the $2.1 billion needed to meet approved requests from the states in the current year and far less than the $4 billion to $5 billion which the administration has said may be the final cost.

The biggest losers under the ceiling would be the populous urban states which have moved more rapidly than most small states to set up the services.

Restriction on Soviet Jews

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union has launched a new press campaign aimed at discouraging Jews from emigrating to Israel.

The campaign began a few days ago and follows the imposition of so-called "diploma taxes" on educated persons who want to leave. Under the new law, emigrants have to pay the state sometimes as much as $25,000 as reimbursement for education.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House announced today President Nixon has selected U.S. Attorney Joseph H. Tauro to be a U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE FOR Massachusetts.

Fight For Quang Tri Continues

SAIGON (AP) - Government marines stormed into the Quang Tri Citadel through a bomb breach in the wall Tuesday and battled the enemy in what likely will be one of the longest and bloodiest battles of the Vietnam war.

A saturation barrage of bombs and shells failed to silence the guns of about 400 North Vietnamese troops, who kept up their stubborn resistance from deep bunkers inside the 19th century fortress.

Officers said other South Vietnamese forces were slowly throttling the North Vietnamese routes of supply and reinforcements.

For weeks, Soviet-built long-range 130mm guns pinned them down in the rubble outside the walls.

"We are encoutering tough resistance and the Citadel is still contested," a senior officer said.

In the air war, U.S. fighter-bombers made more than 300 tactical air strikes against targets in North Vietnam Monday, flying to within 30 miles of China and cutting two vital rail lines linking Hanoi with the border, the U.S. Command announced. Two Navy F4Phantoms were shot down during the raids, both crashing in the Gulf of Tonkin.

School Busing in Las Vegas

Douglas ruled the so-called Broomfield Amendment does not apply to the desegregation ordered by a federal judge for some 30,000 elementary pupils in 52 of the city's schools.

The decision blunts Congress' attempt to halt court-ordered busing in school desegregation cases. Earlier this month Justice Lewis F. Powell, Jr., also held that the amendment, enacted last June, did not apply in an Augusta, Ga., case.

Whether Douglas' ruling will send the children to their classrooms or not was not clear immediately. Although other public schools opened on schedule in Las Vegas Sept. 7, the children affected by the desegregation orders of U.S. Judge Bruce R. Thompson have remained at home while the school board fought in courts to overrule him.

In Reno, meanwhile, Thompson ordered a state court to overturn an order blocking the Clark County busing plan.

In their brief to Douglas for a stay the board officials had the support of the Justice Department which suggested Powell had erred in refusing a similar request from Augusta officials.

The Broomfield Amendment states that desegregation orders for the purpose of achieving a racial balance among students shall not take effect while any appeal is pending.

Douglas said he had denied the motion for a stay "it not being shown that the conditions of the Broomfield Amendment of the Education Act have been met."

Israel Warns Arab Terrorists

Israeli troops relax after returning from a raid into southern Lebanon, during which no major fighting was reported. The eight-hour raid took place near the village of Yaround. (AP)

(AP) — Israel warned Tuesday it will strike against Arab terrorists with all its force and skill, but said the Olympic killings would not halt the search for peace in the Middle East.

The policy statement follows the massacre of Israeli athletes in Munich, air raids against guerrilla bases in Lebanon and Syria, the attempted murder of an Israeli Embassy official in Brussels, and reports in a Yugoslavian paper of more possible terrorist activities.

In a special debate on the massacre, which killed 11 Israelis, five terrorists and a West German policeman, Premier Golda Meir told the Knesset, Israel's parliament, that "the terrorists cannot weaken our desire for peace."

And while praising Germany's decision to shoot it out with the terrorists, she disclosed that before and during the Olympics, Israeli security experts suggested increased safety measures to Olympic and German officials. She did not say what response was received.

In an almost unanimous vote, the Knesset supported "the government's right to defend its emissaries and citizens wherever they may be."

A Yugoslav newspaper, Borba, reported that the Black September terrorist organization, which claimed responsibility for the Munich massacre, allegedly has 11 other actions planned.

The paper's Beirut correspondent quoted a member of the Palestinian Liberation organization who has "an excellent insight" into the Black September dealings.

The guerrilla spokesman said the new actions "will be performed, without hesitation, when the convenient time and opportunity arise," the newspaper said.

At a news conference in New York, U.N. Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim said the United Nations cannot be a mute spectator to terrorism and called on the General Assembly, which begins deliberations next Tuesday, to take action against it.

Elsewhere in the Middle East, Egyptian anger continued over a West German demand that Arab countries condemn Palestinian terrorism. On Monday, Cairo accused Bonn of interfering "in the affairs of Arab governments."

On Tuesday, West German Chancellor Willy Brandt expressed continued interest in having good relations with Arab countries, but said Arab governments must appreciate West Germany's need to protect itself against terrorist activity.

There has been growing uncertainty in Bonn over Arab-West German relations just when they seemed ready to blossom after a seven-year freeze over West German recognition of Israel.

Meanwhile, the Egyptian Cabinet was to consider relations with Bonn at a Wednesday meeting.

A spokesman for West Germany's Foreign Ministry could not confirm a Cairo report that West German officers will confer with Egyptian representatives in Bonn.

Kissinger Talks Extended

MOSCOW (AP) - Henry A Kissinger canceled a scheduled sightseeing trip to Leningrad last night and extended his secret meetings with the Kremlin leadership through today.

Kissinger, who was due to fly to the former czarist capital today will remain in Moscow to continue talks with party leader Leonid I. Brezhnev and Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko before flying to London and Paris.

A U.S. Embassy spokesman said only that the Leningrad trip "is off" and that President Nixon's national security adviser will continue discussions here until his departure tomorrow morning for London.

No reason for the change in plans was disclosed. The announcement came amid growing speculation that Kissinger would meet Friday with Le Duc Tho, Hanoi's chief adviser to the Vietnam peace talks in Paris.

With a tight news blackout on the Kissinger mission in Moscow, it was not immediately known whether the cancellation of his Leningrad visit resulted from last-minute obstacles, a breakthrough or just a change of humor.

Soviet and U.S. officials have refused comment on any stage of the Kremlin discussions, which included the Vietnam war, nuclear arms limits and trade.

U.S. sources in Moscow reported Kissinger had a working lunch yesterday with Gromyko. He was to meet Brezhnev, they added, as he did last April during a five-day visit to prepare for Nixon's May summit meeting.

It was apparent Kissinger already had conferred with the Soviet party boss during his two days of talks here, but official confirmation was unavailable.

The Vietnam situation was believed to have been the main topic of discussion between Kissinger and the Russians.

There was speculation in Paris that Kissinger would hold his 17th private meeting there with Le Duc Tho, North Vietnam's peace delegation adviser.

Kennedy and McGovern Rally With Mayor Daley

CHICAGO (AP) - George McGovern and Edward M. Kennedy brought the Democratic presidential campaign to the Windy City today for a strong show of party unity with Mayor Richard J. Daley and a rousing street raly.

In rally speeches the two Democratic senators stressed the importance of Daley and his Cook County party organization to McGovern's chances for a victory over President Nixon in November.

Kennedy, of Massachusetts, has joined McGovern's campaign for three days of rallies and other appearances across the populous upper Midwest-Northeast belt.

Kennedy commended Daley and the Cook County Central Committee for its past production for Democratic tickets, including its all out effort to help elect his brother, the late John F. Kennedy, to the White House 12 years ago.

"This was true in 1960," Kennedy said, "and I believe it will be true in 1972.

"The question is," Kennedy asked, "will you do the work, will you knock on the doors, will you address those envelopes, will you go out and do the hard and dreary work necessary for McGovern to win in Cook County, Illinois and the nation."

The Daley-produced rally was clearly the strongest show of support for McGovern by Daley and his organization since the South Dakota senator won his party's presidential nomination in July.

McGovern expressed the "deep appreciation I feel to the members of this committee and the great mayor of a great city, Richard Daley."

Kennedy joined McGovern's campaign entourage Monday night for an appearance before approximately 11,000 in Minneapolis. It was the first of several such rallies for the two men this week.

McGovern Campaign Remains in Debt

WASHINGTON (AP) — Forty-two labor unions and wealthy individuals have loaned more than $2 million to Sen. George McGovern. But the South Dakotan's presidentail campaign is in the red and his fund raisers are far behind those of President Nixon.

Heading a list of five labor unions which have loaned or contributed more than half a million among them is the United Auto Workers.

Financial reports filed with the general Accounting Office under a new elections law, showed on Tuesday the UAW loaned McGovern $200,000 through two political action committees and contributed outright $75,000 more through a third.

The Communications workers and the Machinists each have made loans of $100,000 while the Oil and Chemical Workers have contributed $25,000 and the Meat Cutters $12,500. All contributions or loans have been made through special committees since unions and businesses are barred by law from giving directly to a candidate.

The balance of $1.5 million collected in McGovern's loan program has come from wealthy individuals including Alabama civil rights lawyer Morris Dees, a McGovern finance man who has loaned $190,000 and six others who have made loans of $100,000 or more.

The total of $2.06 million in loans is more than one-third of the $5. million McGovern has collected between June 28 and Aug. 31, the end of the reporting period.

Latest reports from all candidates and political committees expecting to spend more than $1,000 this year were due Sept. 10. But the GAO is expected to take the rest of the week or more processing the avalanche of paper.

The GAO has finished the key committees on both sides, however, so subsequent release of new reports is not expected to change the overall picture much.

The four top Nixon committees reported cash on hand Aug. 31 of $4.1 million. Twenty-three affiliated committees-about half of those expected to report-show combined cash on hand of another $2.5 million.

Largest Nixon contributor in the new reports is Walter T. Duncan, a Bryan, Texas, rancher and land developer who has contributed a $126,000 total to 21 separate committees.

Nixon Charts Campaign

Nixon made brief comments to his 39 breakfast guests in the State Dining Room. So did Vice President Spiro Agnew and re-election campaign director Clark MacGregor.

White House press secretary Ronald Ziegler would not disclose what Nixon told the group, but said MacGregor and others "outlined efforts planned for the coming months."

MacGregor referred specifically, Ziegler said. to the GOP's effort to recruit one million volunteers for grassroots canvassing and registering of voters. That local effort is to be launched Saturday.

Ziegler, responding to questions, said the alleged bugging of Democratic national headquarters was not discussed at the breakfast meeting. Nor was the issue of campaign contributions, he said.

Ziegler said Nixon planned to fly later today to his Camp David retreat in the Maryland mountains, where he plans to spend Wednesday conferring with aides.

At the breakfast meeting, the spokesman said Senate Republican Leader Hugh Scott and House GOP Leader Gerald Ford talked of pending legislative matters.

He left unsaid what Nixon has been saying frequently--that too many of the administration's proposals have been pending before Congress too long and that this would be an issue just as it was in Harry Truman's re-election campaign more than two decades ago.

USCC (University and State Communications Council) is a student group dedicated to the proposition that students are equal citizens. Students can be an effective and influential force on state government.

In the past USCC has:

- filed legislation for greater student representation on the Board of Trustees — and it was passed.
- established a Legislative Library open to all students.
- formed the Legislative Research Council whereby students can work with legislators on topics of their own interest, file legislation — and receive academic credit.
- led the annual fight against tuition increases.
- brought legislators to campus to discuss student issues - with students.

WMPIRG To File Suit

Utilities Commission, a rigidly structured agency segmented into three distinct branches: judicial, regulatory, and consumer representative, all of whose budgets do not overlap.

Maryland also has a seperate, independent agency for consumer affairs, whose activity is funded by assessments made on those companies who request rate increases.

Mr. Bogard also discussed WMPIRG's future plans of action in other consumer-concerned areas. WMPIRG students will get a chance to do something about prescription drug prices. Massachusetts has tried vainly for the past two years to pass a law requiring that drug stores post a list of their 100 most prescribed drugs, along with their prices. The result has been a lack of any real competition because people have no way of knowing whose prices are lower without going to the trouble of checking out a number of different stores.

Another prospective plan is to make a comparative food price survey in the five college area. In addition, WMPIRG will run a series of articles in the Collegian explaining the function of small claims court so that students can become aware of this avenue of recourse.

WMPIRG was founded in January after Ralph Nader visited UMASS to drum up support for a consumer protection group modelled after PIRGs in Minnesota and Oregon where the groups proved themselves to be effective social forces. The WMECO case will be its first consumer fight. WMPIRG derives its support from funds contributed by students from UMASS, Mt. Holyoke College, Springfield College, Williams, and Hampshire Colleges. Smith and Amherst are currently in the process of organizing funds.

WMPIRG hopes to raise $4,000 in the 55 communities served by the electric company to cover the litigation costs, which consist of transcripts, filing fees, and clerical expenses.

With roughly 90% of the figures turned in, according to Steve Rider, a WMPIRG spokesman, 55% of UMass undergrads, equal to the number who signed WMPIRG petitions last year, contributed the $2.00 voluntary WMPIRG fee, bringing in about $16,500.

Attorneys for the legal task force, who include UMass legal studies professors Peter Derico and Ethan Katsh, will work for free.

Speaking about the budget, Wood briefly mentioned that "Umass may be in the greatest fight for support since 1962." Last month, the University submitted a request for 98 million dollars to operate it's Amherst, Boston and Worcester campuses.

Lashing out against the present University system of education, Student Senate President Larry Ladd said "it is the students who are the victims of this system that has been left to us by the faculty of another generation." He said that as long as students refuse to act, and as long as they are denied the power in academic affairs that they now deserve, the system will be perpetuated.

Ladd said that while parietal hours have been abolished and some glamour projects have been established, the core of the University has not changed.

"The Faculty, through the Faculty Senate, has total control over your educational life...and the only real long-run solution is to end the faculty's control over our lives," the Student Senate President said.

Ladd listed several steps recommended by the Student Senate which could help the students end the "faculty's total control over our lives," and asked for student's help in bringing the change about.

He asked students to "refuse to merely go around the roadblocks that are stopping your education." "Get those roadblocks out of the way," he said.

Preliminary Munich Autopsies Released

The statement stressed that autopsy reports were preliminary, but gave these details on how 11 Israelis, five Arab terrorists and one West German policeman died.

One of the Israelis who died in the original Arab terrorist attack on Israeli team headquarters in the Olympic Village was killed by two shots; the second Israeli by several shots.

Three of four Israeli hostages in a helicopter that was burned out at a Lufwaffe airbase were shot to death. The fourth Israeli in that helicopter was wounded twice but died of smoke inhalation.

The five Israelis in a second helicopter were killed by what were described as horizontal shots that stayed in their bodies.

The statement said tests indicated the shots were fired from short range. A Bavarian government spokesman said Sunday the initial autopsy findings ruled out any possibility that some of the Israelis might have been killed by German police bullets.

The helicopters flew the hostages and terrorists to the air base.

Four of the five Arabs killed in a shootout with Munich police were killed by gunfire. The fifth was apparently killed by a grenade explosion.

The policeman was killed by a shot in the head.

It was reliably learned that the three Arabs captured by police have apparently discussed the events of that day but have refused to give any details on circumstances leading to the Sept. 5 attack.

Meanwhile, the bodies of the five Palestinian commandos killed in the shootout were buried Tuesday in Tripoli, Libya, the Middle East News Agency reported.

W. Europe United By Arab Terrorism

FRASCATI, ITALY (AP) - Ten West European governments acted on Tuesday to put down political terrorism and to step up a European monetary fund. Both actions were steps toward unity of the new Common Market.

The guns and grenades of the Arab terrorists at the Munich Olympic Games brought the issue of terrorism to the fore. Ministers of finance and foreign affairs of the 10 governments decided unanimously to take a joint stand in the United Nations against terrorists, and tighten cooperation among their own security forces.

The new monetary fund will start operations next year as the forerunner of an integrated central bank for the 10 countries with a common currency to challenge the dominance of the U.S. dollar on world markets.

Foreign Minister Maurice Schumann and Finance Minister Valery Giscard d'Estaing of France both spoke in the final session of the two-day meeting at the 400-year-old Aldobrandini villa outside Rome. They were reported to have said they saw sufficient progress to hold a scheduled summit meeting of the 10 countries in Paris on Oct. 19.

President Georges Pompidou of France is due to make the final decision on the summit at a Cabinet meeting on Friday. The ministers also decided to hold another meeting Oct. 20-31 to take joint action against inflation.

Both Giscard d'Estaing and West German Finance Minister Helmut Schmidt proposed joint action to curb recent spectacular price rises in Western Europe. Giscard d'Estaing suggested percentage limits be set for price increases. Schmidt says he wants to limit the expansion of credits. But he added that special considerations would be given to countries with an unemployment problem, meaning Britain and Italy.

Most governments feel that when they have heavy unemployment they must expand credits to get business moving faster.

In the beginning the new monetary fund will serve more as an assertion of European independence than as a possible weapon against monetary crises. Its major job is to hold the relative values of European currencies within narrow limits, permitting a fluctuation of no more than 2-1/4 per cent.

Majority Age Bill Filed

State Representative John W. Olver, a candidate for State Senate in the Franklin-Hampshire district, announced today he will refile this week, a package of legislation that will lower the legal age of adulthood to 18.

Rep. Olver was Chairman of the Special Commission on Lowering the Age of Majority, which during the last session of the Legislature released a lengthy report, advocating legislation to change the age of legal age of adulthood in the state from 21 to 18.

That legislation had passed the House, but died in the State Senate.

The proposed package of bills, which Rep. Olver is re-introducing would extend many rights to 18-year-olds, in addition to ones already granted, including the right of vote and marry.

Thus such rights as sitting on juries, to contract and own property, the right to medical treatment without parental consent, would all be extended to 18-year-olds. Similarily, the legislation lowers the statuatory age limits from 21 to 18 for professions, such as correction officers and firefighters.

Also changed by Olver's legislation would be distinctions in driving licenses, uniform crime punishments, and lowering to 18 all age stipulations in areas such as civil service, group insurance, public welfare, youth services, mental health and support of parents.

Rep. Olver stated, upon refiling the set of measures, "I was frankly disappointed that these changes in law did not gain enactment during the past session of the legislature. "These changes in the age of adulthood are long overdue. The commission received overwhelming evidence in favor of the age changes. Over 30 states are already moving in this direction. Massachusetts must move now and recognize the proven and accepted fact that 18-year-olds are mature, responsible and worthy of full adult rights."

"It was particularly frustrating," Olver went on "to see the Senator from this area be among those failing to bring the bill to the Senate floor. This is just another example of the present senator's lack of understanding of the issue of rights for young adults."

"He has voted against the 18-year-old vote, against lowering the age of allowing marriage, was the only senator to vote against student advisory boards to school committees. And when the issue of lowering the age of majority came up, he again chose the course of indecision and obstruction."

Olver added, "This lack of regard for youth and its potential for responsibility is one of the reasons I am challenging the incumbent in the Franklin-Hampshire District." Rep. Olver visited many high schools, prep schools and colleges last year explaining his legislation's significance. He was also aided by voluntary help to his commission from many students and faculty members of this area.

Concert Committee

As you may know last year's Spring Concert with Fleetwood Mac resulted in a complete success not only from the students' point of view but as well from the skeptical administrators'. This year's plans will begin early for the late or next Spring's performance. To this point the committee has $10,000 to work with and the question of whether to hold a concert with or without admission fees is at hand. Long range plans for prospective groups to play may be discussed also at tomorrow nite's meeting in Rm. 174 of the Campus Center. All are welcome to come and voice their opinions Thursday, September 14th at 8:00 P.M.

Why The Oath?

This April, the U.S. Supreme Court ended the three-year suspension of a law which requires all state employees to sign a loyalty oath under pain of losing their jobs.

As a result of this ruling it is now the law of the State of Massachusetts that all employees sign the oath, which requires the signer to swear that he/she will oppose the overthrow of the Federal or State governments by force or unconstitutional methods.

The results of this have already been felt at UMass, where a teaching assistant has given up his job rather than sign the oath.

It seems to us unnecessary that such an oath be administered. We feel that an oath signed by a person whose job depends on it is hardly proof of loyalty. Furthermore, such actions can get out of hand. For instance, the University of California requires all students to sign loyalty oaths not only to the Federal and State governments, but one in which the student promises not to defame the University. Students have been ejected because of this.

The Collegian urges the state to stop the practice of the mandatory oath. We feel that loyalty should be a personal thing, not something dangled over one's head when a job is at stake.

Dustin vs. Bogey

The retrospective movement and the nostalgia craze, both of which are major social phenomena of the last few years, are both vastly different and deceptively similar. They differ in that nostalgia is seen through the misted eye, frequently by those who are too young to remember the era being glorified, while retrospectives are seen by the naked if previously uninformed eye. The Class of 1975 contains a rather large and fiercely loyal following of Little Latin Larry, although at the end of the 2950's, today's sophomores were six years old, and had probably never seen the inside of a malt shop. By contrast, The Maltese Falcon, a film generally included in a Bogart retrospective, is preserved on film, and does not require white socks or greased hair to be savored. Larry is a zeitgeist; Bogart is a regular ghost.

What they have in common is that both are revivals, coming from a time other than the present or immediate past. This is why I'm having difficulty dealing with the Dustin Hoffman Festival which is going on this week. Think about it. When was the last time anybody asked you: "Who remembers the '70's?"

An incredible number of people remember Dustin Hoffman. The line outside the Student Union Sunday night for Midnight Cowboy was incredible. If you parked in the Campus Center garage, you almost didn't need to get out of your car to get in line. Dustin Hoffman, who hasn't had a film released since way back in 1971, has been rediscovered.

It so happens that Dustin Hoffman should be feted, even it is a bit premature. He is one of the two or three finest actors of our era. I include in this category Brando and Burton as well as Hoffman. Unhappily, he shares with both Burton and Brando the problem of finding suitable material.

Lost in the Godfather blitz is the fact that Brando had not had a decent part in years, performing in such atrocities as Burn! and Countess From Hong Kong. Burton has had the same problem, although in his case he has been motivated by his expensive habit of buying large diamonds and small continents for his wife. Where Eagles Dare, Staircase, and Bluebeard are mingled with Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf and Becket. Not even Spencer Tracy can transform the Brooklyn Yellow Pages into a work of art.

This week's bill of fare in the Hoffman festival is a case in point. The hordes outside the Union Sunday night were of sound mind to be there. Midnight Cowboy is probably Hoffman's finest film. His own performance is beyond the scope of any adjectives I normally use, and the film itself is superb. If I were to recommend ten films from all of film history, I would include Midnight Cowboy. Such a list would not include Little Big Man, or Who Is Harry Kellerman, (And Why Is He Saying Those Terrible Things About Me)?

Both of these films are worth seeing, however. In Harry, which plays Thursday night, Hoffman does as best he can with an uneven script. With the exception of Barbara Harris, the supporting cast is lackluster. I sat through Harry Kellerman twice in one day in 1971, but I'll look at anything Hoffman does. Harry Kellerman should be seen, but don't hope for miracles.

Little Big Man is also an uneven film, although I seem to be the only person I know who was disappointed by it. Dustin Hoffman plays Jack Crabb at age fourteen, and at age one hundred seven, and at several ages in between. His performance is overwhelmingly versatile, but not overwhelmingly magnificent. (I'm into magnificence myself.) Little Big Man should really be seen in 1965, when Arthur Penn wanted to make it, but he couldn't get the money until after Bonnie and Clyde, and as a result, the consciousness of the film is somewhat embarrassing. In 2965, Indians were still victims of an unquestioned stereotype. Penn's treatment of the Indians would have been a breakthrough in 1956, when most Americans gave no thought to the slgughter of the Indians. Coming as it did after the revolution in the perception of the American Indians, Penn's treatment of the subject is an embarrassment, unless it is true that all whites are bad and all Indians are good. Martin Balsam, chief Dan George, and of course Hoffman make the film well worth seeing, though, whatever its flaws.

Dustin Hoffman is not through as an actor. He has made only six films. Not all six are gems. If you wish to see Humphrey Bogart in Knock On Any Door, you'll have to watch it on television. Bogart made too many good films for the Bogart packagers to include his mediocre work in a Bogart festival. It is unfair to Hoffman that his work be festivalized this soon. I will match Ratzo Rizzo against Monsieur Rick any day of the week, but Harry Kellerman is not Sam Spade, or my name isn't Fred C. Dobbs. Hoa binh.

'ARE YOU TRYING TO MAKE ME LOOK SHABBY?'

Make A Buck

By RICHARD NELSON

If there is one word in the whole world that produces good vibes from everyone who hears it, then that word is CO-OP. It's magic. It combines images of stalwart hippies, banded together for brotherhood, beating the capitalistic system and to save a buck. Everyone likes to save a buck. CO-OP is a happy word. On Monday you read in these columns that S.U.G. Board FUCKED OVER the CO-OP. It ain't true. There never was a CO-OP to fuck over, there was a store proposed by some individuals and these individuals insisted on calling this store a CO-OP but there the similarities ended.

This thing we will call a CO-OP was originally a plan calling for the Student Senate to sell stereos. The Student Senate hadn't agreed to start selling stereos and the idea didn't sound TOO revolutionary but it didn't really seem all that bad of an Idea.

The CO-OP's mother, Robert Chiller, came to the S.U.G. Board Executive Committee and asked for some place to put his stereo store if he could get the Senate to go along with the idea. The Executive Committee asked Chiller to come to the full S.U.G. Board when he had some sort of definite proposal. In the meantime, Chiller and the friends of the CO-OP found out they couldn't sell stereos and what they really wanted to do was open up a little food store, like a Munchy's. They also wanted to make their CO-OP a very special kind. They wanted to have a CO-OP where nobody would save any money. You may wonder why anyone would want to open that kind of a CO-OP. I guess they thought selling food at the same prices as all the other little ripoffs in the neighborhood was some kind of big favor to students. I didn't quite catch the logic. Anyway Chiller came to S.U.G. Board and asked for space. He didn't know how much space he would need, where he wanted it and he had no idea at all if the Senate would go along with the idea. The Board asked him to find out a little about what he wanted to do before it started spending money remodeling space for him. Chiller can't have been too interested because he left the room while his CO-OP of sorts was being discussed.

Things weren't really that simple because various personalities kept flaring up to obscure things. The greatest clash came between Chiller and M. Guy Ross, a meat slicer and Chairman of our Services Committee. These two gentlemen possess a couple of the strongest personalities I have ever seen and their conflict was at least entertaining if a bit unprofitable. The idea of this CO-OP paying "rent" grew out of this conflict. The idea is not insane and certainly reflects the philosophy of a number of members of the Board. The S.U.G. Board has not decided to charge anyone "rent" and I'm sure I speak for at least the officers of the Board when I say it is doubtful if we would hamper a real CO-OP in its formitive stagewith some kind of "rent". The question has not yet been asked of the Board.

Letters To The Editor

Inflation

To the Editor:

Prices for food have gone up, not only in the Campus Center but at almost every restaurant and every grocery store in the country.

In August of 1971 the president's price freeze restrained a 6.6% across the board price increase which was approved for the Campus Center Food Service by the S.U.G. Board and the Board of Trustees. In January we raised the price of soft drinks 6%. In July we had raised the price of ice cream slightly. These were the only two price rises of 1971-72 in the Hatch, Coffee Shop and Cafeteria and were not equal to a 6.6% across the board price increase and did not accommodate and approximate 6.6% rise in the cost of labor and a 7% to 8% rise in the cost of food during that year.

Some examples of the rising cost of food are that between February of 1971 and August of 1972 our price of hamburger (put out on a monthly basis to a competitive bid) has risen over 16.8%. The price of tuna fish has risen from $28.42 a case in July of 1971 to approximately $37.00 a case currently and we have had predictions from vendors that the price will rise to as much as $60.00 a case. (This is due to adverse weather conditions in Japanese fishing waters.)

In the last fiscal year the Campus Center Food Service was budgeted by S.U.G. Board to earn approximately $100,000. - over and above its expenses. This "profit" was budgeted to cover operating expenses of non-revenue producing areas of the Campus Center. I believe our operating results of 1971-72 will only show an approximate $10,000. - "profit". This for reasons stated above.

In the budgeting process for fiscal year 72-73 the S.U.G. Board again approved a Food Service "profit" goal of approximately $100,000. - with an expected fiscal year 72-73 6% rise in the cost of food and labor. The budget again called for a 6% across the board price increase. This is the price increase which is reflected in the prices that you are paying at this time. Some prices have gone up more, some prices have not been raised. It is our intention that the price increases average a 6% across the board price increase thereby meeting our fiscal mandate in the face of rising costs.

It is our firm intention to bring the students value for their money. Moreover, we hope to bring the students very good service in all of the operations. I have requested today that our tuna fish salad sandwich be prepared according to a different formula in order to correct the "sawdust" criticism voiced by Miss Emmons.

Furthermore, the S.U.G. Board, the Food Service committee thereof, every Food Service manager and I are open to suggestions on which we will act immediately if we can improve the products we are bringing to you.

I apologize for the length of this letter but wish to voice one last concept. The S.U.G. Board and the management of the Food Service have been operating on the principle that the Food Service should not be subsidized to whatever extent that is possible by an increased student fee to all students whether or not they use the Campus Center Food Service. In order to do this we have to set food and beverage prices in relationship to the current costs.

Michael Egan
Director of Food Service

Try To Understand

To the Editor:

After listening and reading all the broadcasts concerning the unfortunate Incident in Munich, I found little difference in the conclusion - that is, everyone has jumped on the bandwagon calling the episode "barbaric" - without understanding the real situation.

One should try to understand why these Palestinian Commandos were driven to such drastic measures. These commandos, having been literally driven out of their homeland by the Zionists and seeing many of their brethren undergo continuous tortures in Israeli prisons: did have a legitimate "grip" with Israel. In order to free some of the Palestinians being held in Israeli prisons, these young University graduates held the Israeli Olympians (who were also soldiers) as hostages for a trade-off.

It is not for us to say what is right or wrong, but there are certainly no laws to govern a state of war. If Israel really cared about the Olympians being held in Munich, they would have freed the two hundred prisoners and I am certain (having had much contact with Arabs) the hostages would have been released, unharmed, without any further incident.

However, seeing that Israel sent two advisors to direct the Germans in an ambush against these Palestinian youths, they are directly responsible for the deaths of the Olympians and the Palestinians.

Again, Israel has achieved one of her important goals and that is to exploit situations in her favor so that to sway international public opinion to her side.

Caveat Emptor

Freshman Orientation this summer should have been entitled "UMASS Through Rose-Colored Glasses". It was little more than a rigid indoctrination program telling freshmen of the virtues of all our petty rules and regulations. The freshmen this year are not prepared in any way for the real UMASS they will face this September.

Indians Humiliated?

To the Editor:

I read the editorial comment on the nickname "Redmen" being dropped by UMASS because it supposedly humiliates a person of Indian origin. Not being an Indian myself, I have to ask why? If there is anyone on this campus of Indian origin who feels that he or she can explain this current trend of nickname-changing to me, I will be more than happy to talk with this person about it.

While talking with a person who has been associated with UMASS athletics for the past few decades, I was told that the reason for choosing "Redmen" in the first place was to have UMASS athletes identify with the fighting spirit of the Indian that we all have read about in history books. I can not understand why today's Indian would be humiliated by this.

I realize that the editorial comment mentioned above was made as a joke. And it is! Next thing you know, the Lions of America will be demanding that Columbia University, the Detroit Lions and the Lions Club change their names because they humiliate the king of beasts.

It is a real shame that a small minority of students could force such a big change within the University while the student body, the faculty and the Athletic Council had very little say, if any. But I guess that we are living in a society where the minorities have more say than the majority. That, too, is a real shame.

Let us all hope that this trend stops as it only hurts. The Indians have a heritage that they should be proud of like any other ethnic group. I just don't understand why this trend is happening today. I wish that someone would explain this to me.

I hope that the nickname "Redmen" can be restored and, if it's too late, a suitable replacement can be found.

Yahoo is the school's satirical magazine and has gone through many a change to remain in circulation the past few years. Whereas it was chic to be against 'wasting money' last year, said magazine was almost completely cut off fundwise. With luck, recognizing good satirical material will be 'hip' this semester.

To the Editor:

For this semster only, Samuel Bowles is teaching a joint under-and graduate student course entitled "Economic Bases for Social Change in the U.S." Professor Bowles is currently on leave from Harvard University and is a member of a group of Political Economists who I believe are making original and substantial contributions to an understanding of the basic forces at work in the U.S. socio-political-economic system. Besides being an important contributor to this literature, Bowles is an extremely provacative and exciting discussion leader.

Unfortunately because of a delayed decision in the hiring of Bowles, information about this opportunity was not available via traditional sources. The enrollment is limited, but presently there are many openings. Information can be obtained from the Labor Relations and Research Center in Draper Hall. I could not recommend any course more highly.

A Scenario

To the Editor:

(Ed walks into a dorm room)

ED: Hey, you guys going to Belchertown tonight?

TRUMPET: Nah, we're getting fucked up and then going to Quicksilver.

ED: Oh come on: I think we're going to be short tonight. You know if we don't get fifteen we can't even run the program. Remember when the cop tried to shut us down because he claimed we didn't have enough supervision.

RENEE: Ya, I remember; that was a pretty good night.

TRUMPET: James Montgomery's playing at Quicksilver tonight; we haven't seen him in a while. Come on, take the night off. There are a lot of good looking chicks there too.

ED: We've been working on this program for a year now. You know how the residents look forward to it week after week. We can party anytime; what else do they really have? They're subject to our benevolence, and you're going to let them down?

TRUMPET: Ya, week after week after week. I'm sick of the same old shit; crummy juke box with stale pastery and the residents leeching butts left and right.

RENEE: (passing Ed the joint) Come on, take a night off and listen to some good music for a change.

ED: O.K., I'll call Val and tell her to come over and pick up the keys.

America's Blessing

To the Editor:

There was a bit of political propaganda (Terrorist Is Diplomat?) in your September 11 edition in which, "...Newsweek magazine says the head of the Black September Arab terrorist organization in Western Europe and a prime suspect in the Olympic slaughter...is now serving in Switzerland as an accredited diplomat..."

There's nothing like a few malicious statements, some slander, defamation or a little libel to evoke sympathy for a cause, or to put unnecessary strain on the brains of some unfortunately unpatriotic unhuman beings. But, what right does Newsweek have to put the finger on the Swiss?

The article goes on, "...Describing what it calls 'evidence of growing complicity' and cooperation among revolutionaries around the world. Newsweek said Sunday that young radicals of many nations have been trained by...terrorists in guerrilla skills..."

No mention was made, however, pertaining to counter-revolutionary and right-wing conspiracies, such as the John Birch Society, Young Americans For Nixon, Nixon's cabinet, the House, the Senate, state and local governments, and, oh yes, that great Democratic organization that so much is heard about, none other than America's own C.I.A.

But, this is understandable, see? What would American, or citizens of the world, for that matter, think of the United States if it were revealed that the Central Intelligance Agency was the organizing and controlling factor behind last week's incident in Munich?

(Not to mention the C.I.A. as originators of the sky-jack. Credit ought be given wherever due, see, but credit as sky-jack originators would be a bit much for the C.I.A.

Originators? Improbable, although the C.I.A. ought receive an award for plagiarism. But anyhow...)

Excuse the digression, if you will. The Collegian quoted Newsweek in stating that, "...foreign embassies serve as the main conduits for underground activities through their diplomats and pseudodiplomats..."

Newsweek's source of information was undisclosed, see, but an international magazine with the esteem of Newsweek would never think of printing materials from an unrelyable source, would it now?

Alright. We all know that a cardinal rule in the game of How To Become An American Patriot is to always practice what is preached. Now, excluding C.I.A. agents, who are the most internationally capable of honorably and humanely exhibiting and exemplifying this great trait of American irrational? Who are best qualified to bestow America's blessing (in other words, ram down the throat), upon all those, oh, so underpriviledged nations of the world?

(And which country has more foreign embassies than the United States?)

Revolutionaries Of The World, Unite.

Author-Surgeon To Speak Here

DR. WILLIAM A. NOLEN

A distinguished surgeon and best-selling author of "The Making of a Surgeon", Dr. William A. Nolen, is scheduled to speak here on Wednesday, Sept. 13 at 8 p.m. in the Campus Center auditorium under the auspices of the Distinguished Visitors Program on the subject "The Making of a Surgeon."

A Fellow of the American College of Surgeons and Chief of Surgery at Meeker County Hospital in Minnesota, Dr. Nolen is also attending surgeon at the Hennepin General Hospital in Minneapolis, a teaching hospital associated with the University of Minnesota.

Dr. Nolen has been writing for some time and has been published in medical and general circulation magazines, such as McCALL'S (for which he is now writing a monthly column), VOGUE and many others. His book "The Making of a Surgeon" deals with his training at New York's Bellevue Hospital and appeared in condensed version in READER'S DIGEST. In 1972 his "Spare Parts for the Human Body" was published.

Born in Holyoke, Massachusetts, Dr. Nolen was graduated from the College of Holy Cross and Tufts Medical School. He spent five years in training at Bellevue Hospital, interrupted for two years of general practice with the Army Medical Corps. It was during his two years with the Army Medical Corps that Dr. Nolen decided that he wanted to be a surgeon rather than continuing in general practice which he had been doing in the Army. He returned to Bellevue to complete his training.

Dr. Nolen makes his home with his wife Joan and their six children, ranging in age from seven to fifteen and consisting of three boys and three girls, in Litchfield, Minnesota, some 75 miles from Minneapolis. He is associated with the Litchfield Clinic.

If you pick up a copy of McCall's and flip to his column, you won't want to miss hearing him in person.

American Motors Cries For Price Hikes

WASHINGTON (AP) - American Motors Corp. criticized the Price Commission today for delaying a decision on its request to raise the prices of 1973 models to recover cost increases.

In addition, the company said that if its request is denied, the result would be "very serious consequences" for all industries, since it would mean that the government was refusing to allow businesses to recover allowable costs.

Lain M. Anderson, American's vice president for finance, said at a public hearing that the company feels ample time has been given for review of its price request.

He said the company is frankly distressed that the government has suspended the price increase request pending completion of the public hearing.

An official of the Transportation Department estimated the cost of installing new safety equipment on 1973 automobiles at $50 to $70 per car.

But he said the department has received only sketchy cost information from the car industry.

American Motors is asking to raise prices by $75.90 per car on the average to cover the cost of new equipment installed because of federal standards.

Vermont Elects Woman Chamber of Com. Head

MT. SNOW, Vt. (AP) - Another traditional bastion of male dominance crumbled with the election as president of the Greater Vermont Association, of Mrs. Madelyn Davidson, believed to be the first woman in the nation to head a statewide chamber of commerce.

Mrs. Davidson, a former Vermont state treasurer, steadfastly denied that the lack of women chamber officers across the nation is evidence of wide-spread sex discrimination.

"I think it's the activity you put into the chamber," she said Tuesday, "not the sex."

Mrs. Davidson, who rose through GVA ranks as treasurer and vice president, was also the first woman in the country to hold statewide chamber office, GVA officials said.

Appointed by Democratic former Gov. Philip Hoff in 1968, she was the first woman state treasurer, the first woman president of the Montpelier Chamber of Commerce, the first woman to serve on the National Advisory Council of the Small Business Administration under the late President John F. Kennedy, and the first woman president of the Northern Vermont chapter of the American Institute of Banking.

GVA officials said it will be a long time before another woman is elected president of a state chamber of commerce, because there are no women officers in the country.

"I'm sure it's not discrimination," Mrs. Davidson said. "Many women are active in chambers on the local level. Maybe if I were running a small business like so many women, I wouldn't have time to devote to the GVA."

Mass. Disaster Area

BOSTON (AP—) - Massachusetts has been declared an agricultural disaster area because of the wet, cold growing season, and federal aid is now available through the Farmers Home Administration FHA.

Myron Maiewski, assistant state commissioner of agriculture, said today that U.S. Agriculture Secretary Earl Butz notified the FHA of the designation Monday.

FHA loans at one per cent interest, with the first $5,000 free as a "forgiveness factor," are available to farmers suffering 20 per cent crop loss or worse," Maiewski said.

FHA offices are handling applications, which will be checked by the U.S. Agriculture Department to make certain farmers really lost what they say they lost, Maiewski said.

Dairy, vegetable and tobacco farms in the four western counties were among the hardest hit by the heavy rains, much of it attached to Tropical Storm Agnes which caused even worse damage in New York and Pennsylvania.

Connecticut has already been declared a disaster area.

The 1960 census showed 5,703 farms in Massachusetts, of which 576 were poultry farms, not eligible for the federal aid.

'Liberation' Party Campaigning

BOSTON (AP) - "Our political platform is that government should get out and stay out of most of the things it is now in," said the Libertarian party presidential candidate, John Hospers.

"We've been ignored by the national media. They think we're a bunch of crackpots. They don't know what we stand for," added Hospers, who is chairman of the philosophy department at the University of Southern California.

He said, in an interview here Monday, that his administration would limit itself to preserving domestic order and civil rights and maintaining national defense.

"It's staggering to think of a governmental official making decisions affecting thousands of people he doesn't even know," Hospers said.

"We want to return decisions to individuals, to the state of individual rights that was approximated in the early days of our republic.

"Keep out of the economy and we'll solve most of the economic problems. The standard of living would be unimaginably higher in this country if government didn't hold it down."

The party platform calls for the "eventual repeal of all taxation," substituting a "system of voluntary fees for services rendered."

The party held its first national convention last June in Denver. "Having candidates at all was an afterthought," Hospers said. His running mate is Tonie Nathan of Eugene, Ore.

Asked what would happen to those receiving welfare if the Libertarians were elected Hospers replied:

"It would be a gradual process. We wouldn't say tomorrow morning you'd be on your own. But most of these people are where they are because of government tampering."

Auto Safety Devices To $50

WASHINGTON (AP) - A Transportation Department official today estimated the cost of installing new safety equipment on 1973 automobiles at $50 to $70 per car, but said the department has received only sketchy cost information from the auto industry.

James M. Beggs, the department's undersecretary, told a public hearing launched by the Price Commission that the auto makers could have met the safety requirements more cheaply by designing safety features in the cars rather than adding them on.

In most cases, he said, the auto makers added the required safety features without using a more comprehensive systems approach. He said in most cases there was time to design the new features.

The commission has rejected a $59 per car increase by Ford Motor Co. and a $54 per model increase by General Motors to cover the costs of new safety and pollution control requirements. In each case, the commission said both companies might violate restraints on profit margins. After the hearings, the two firms plan to resubmit their requests.

Chrysler Corp. and American Motors Co. are seeking larger increases than the two largest car manufacturers, but their requests have been suspended pending the public hearings.

Chrysler is seeking a $91.32 increase, American $81.30 as well as a $68.38 for other costs.

The hearings were called after consumer advocate Ralph Nader filed suit in federal court against the Price Commission to try to force the agency to act. It did, and the suit was dropped.

The hearings are expected to last three days, with Nader scheduled as the final witness.

New Brain Cancer Therapy

BOSTON (AP) - Researchers say they are perfecting a method of fighting a so-far incurable form of brain cancer with nuclear "bullets" that destroy individual malignant cells.

The researchers from Massachusetts General Hospital and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology plan to use a method called neutron capture therapy, a type of therapy tried unsuccessfully at MIT and other institutions 10 years ago.

The MIT—MGH team says it is now the only group in this country planning a therapy trial of the method.

The research team says most of the difficulties in the therapy have been worked out and the method looks "promising" in treating brain tumors called glioblastoma.

The bulk of such a tumor can be removed surgically, but it has many fine extensions which dig into normal brain tissue and cannot be cut away because so much healthy tissue would be damaged and the tumor quickly regrows.

The researchers, Dr. Gordon Brownell, professor of nuclear engineering at MIT and head of physics research at MGH, are working with the head of the MGH neurosurgical service, Dr. William Sweet, to bring neutron capture therapy to patients.

Brownell says the team has had "encouraging results" with the method in rat and tissue culture studies. He says the next series of tests with dogs will be to set radiation limits for tissues other than the tumors and to see if there are any side effects from the radiation.

Report Criticizes Mental Health Dept.

BOSTON (AP) — The state Department of Mental Health is criticized for "virtually ignoring children" by a privately funded study due for release Thursday, a published report said Tuesday.

"Suffer Little Children-The Politics of Mental Health in Massachusetts" is the name of the study, which says the department frustrates parents of emotionally disturbed children and sometimes ignored legal requirements to provide programs.

In disclosing the contents of the study, the Boston Globe said it would carry two forwards-one by Mental Health Commissioner Dr. Milton Greenblatt charging inaccuracy and rebuttal by the study's principal author, Larry Brown.

Brown says Greenblatt tried to intimidate those preparing the study.

The study is quoted by the Globe as saying, "The department, one of the largest bureaucracies in the state, has failed to demonstrate any significant concern for the needs of children.

"The energies of the department go toward defending the present lack of services, protecting officials to whom the public looks for leadership and help."

Financing the report were the Blanchard Foundation, the Cabot Foundation, the Committee of the Permanent Charity Fund and the Godfrey Hyams Trust.

Defense Loans

Those students affected are urged to stop in the National Defense Loan Office (in Bursar's Office, Room 214) in Whitmore between the hours of 8:30 to 4:30 to sign these new forms in order that your loan can be processed for the Fall.

Air Pollution Linked to Lung Cancer Deaths

WASHINGTON (AP) - The National Research Council says the death rate from lung cancer might be reduced if air pollution was curbed.

The council reported to the Environmental Protection Agency Monday that the high rates of lung cancer found in the nation's urban areas may be partly due to pollution from the burning of coal, wood and petroleum products.

The report said the possible link between pollution and cancer is still uncertain, but "a number of different types of studies do lead to fairly consistent estimates of a substantial effect of air pollution on lung cancer death rate...

The 361-page report concentrated on a group of pollutants called "polycyclic organic matter," or "POM," including complex chamicals formed in the burning of fossil fuels.

The council, a research agency affiliated with the government, said the main sources of POM pollution were coal-burning home furnaces, burning coal waste piles which are common in mining regions, coke production for the iron and steel industry, and rich carburetor mixtures in auto engines.

In addition, it said, cigarette smokers give themselves extra doses of POM in the smoke they inhale, increasing their chances of a cancer-causing reaction.

The report said pollution from the POM chemicals is heaviest in the area from the Appalachian Mountains to the Mississippi River and northward to the Great Lakes.

The report said studies comparing cancer rates between high-POM and low-POM areas are needed before controls can be prescribed.

But it said homeowners with coal furnaces may have to switch to other heating units; coal mines may have to dispose of wastes in ways that prevent their burning; and the iron and steel industry may have to develop new production methods.

Expert Advice From Sixth Graders

The advice included do's and don't's on such classic items as pencils, pen and paper-approved; spitballs, chewing gum and paper airplanes-not approved; and what to do if you get in trouble-try not to.

The Mt. Everett school, with a student body of 828, houses grades 5 through 12. It draws its students from the surrounding area and for many of the children the switch from a small, sometimes one-room, school is confusing.

To make things easier, all incoming figewz ugh-ts got a mineographed booklet bearing the laboriously hand-printed title: "How We Made It Through the Fifth Grade. By the Sixth Grade." In the preface, the sixth graders explained: "Last year at this time we were very troubled about going to Mt. Everett." They said that their predecessors had written a book to help them and now they wanted to pass on the favor.

The booklet contains about 50 pages and has student-drawn illustrations. There's a section on "things to bring and not to bring." The approved items include a pencil, a pen and a notebook. Among the no-no's are yo-yos, water guns, chewing gum, straws and spitballs, jack knives, paper airplanes and thumb tacks.

The booklet also discusses school buses, hall passes, class schedules and the girls' room. It says "don't let the older kids tell you where to sit" on the buses and "don't write on the walls."

Then it discusses gym classes, advises that "the girl's locker room is where only girls can go," and makes this pitch for an after-gym shower: "When you're hot and greasy, you'll want a shower. It's refreshing."

Then there's this section: "Late for class? Don't get upset. You are allowed a whole month to get lost and in finding your classes."

These new fifth graders will be required to keep journals.

"In a journal you write things that have happened to you," the booklet notes. "You have to have two journals a week. Don't worry about not having your journals. Our darling teachers won't yell. Just write four journals for the next week..."

It also advises: "Don't write anything too personal in your journal because they may be read."

Obviously, no booklet of this nature would be complete without a discussion of what happens when you get into trouble with the establishment.

"When you get into trouble," the new fifth graders are told, "you get sent to the office and the principal talks to you and some times makes you call your mother and then you stay after."

It adds: "P.S. Don't let it happen to you!"

Experiment Subjects Denied VD Cure

WASHINGTON (AP) - After only four years of a 40-year federal syphilis experiment in Alabama, doctors had gained the specific knowledge they initially sought, a study of U.S. Public Health Service reports show.

But instead of ending the experiment and treating the participants, the doctors continued it with the knowledge that some of the human subjects would suffer potentially fatal diseases, the reports show.

The experiment, called the Tuskegee Study, began in 1932 and eventually involved more than 430 syphilitic black men from the Tuskegee, Ala., area who were given no treatment for their disease. Also included in the early years of the study were 275 syphilitics who did receive treatment and 201 non-syphilitics.

The experiment was run by the U.S. Public Health Service which still has over-all control. During the course of the experiment, at least 28 men died as a direct result of untreated syphilis.

Dozens of others suffered such potentially fatal side effects as heart and central nervous system deterioration. Others had glandular and vision damage.

"Morbidity physical degeneration in male Negroes with untreated syphilis far exceeds that in a comparable presumably nonsyphilitic group," PHS doctors said in a 1936 report on the Tuskegee Study, the first report on the then-four-year-old experiment.

The same report said the study was undertaken to determine the effectiveness of available syphilis treatment which then consisted of injections of metals and arsenic. The doctors said they wanted to find out if the syphilitics given treatment fared better than those not receiving it.

But the same 1936 report that posed that question also answered it.

"Among 68 individuals who were adequately treated during the first two years of their infection, not a single one returned with any of the manifestations of late syphilis."

The reason doctors were able to observe men in their 25th year of syphilis although the Tuskgee Study was only four years old was because the experiment subjects had suffered from the disease for varying lengths of time-some apparently for as long as 11 years-when the Tuskegee Study began.

Not only were the doctors able to demonstrate in 1936 that full, adequate heavy-metals treatment was effective against syphilis, they found also that men who received only partial or inadequate treatment also were helped.

"Nine years after the onset of the syphilitic infection, the inadequately treated cases had 6.9 por cent cardiovascular involvement and 13.8 per cent central nervous system involvement as contrasted with 41.9 per cent and 29 per cent respectively among the untreated syphilitic Negro males," the report said.

"Cardiovascular and central nervous system involvements were from two to three times as common in the untreated syphilis group as in a comparable group receiving even inadequate treatment," it said.

Mass. Insurance Companies Profit

BOSTON (AP) - Automobile insurance companies made a profit last year under Massachusetts new no-fault insurance law, but not enough to offset the $59 million lost over the previous 20 years, counsel for the industry said today.

"These tremendous, all-time losses must be kept in mind when we are talking about any so-called 'unfair profit' that may have been earned in 1971," Herbert P. Wilkins told Insurance Commissioner John G. Ryan

Wilkins spoke at a hearing to determine how much money the insurance companies should rebate to consumers because of alleged unfair profits made on compulsory auto insurance in 1971.

The insurance companies, according to state officials, made profits of $36.3 million or 27 per cent. Insurance company profits have traditionally been limited to 1 per cent.

Sanford Kowall, an attorney for the Massachusetts Consumers' Council-a state agency, said, "We hope that the eventual settlement will be in these dimensions," referring to the $36.3 million.

"We contend," he said, "that the 1 per cent profit margin is adequate," and added that insurance companies should pay interest on the rebate.

"We don't feel the 10 years of losses under the old type of insurance should be the consumers' problem today," Kowall said.

Debate was expected on how much money should be rebated, how it would be paid and who would get it.

The legality of the rebate has been upheld by the state Supreme Judicial Court.

Wilkins said, "The results of any one year do not measure the profitability of an industry, and to look at the question of unfairness on the basis of 1971 alone is in our view improper.

"No legislation was passed to correct for the unfair losses which the companies sustained" during the past 10 years, he said in reference to the "rebate" statute passed last year, authorizing today's hearings.

Wilkins said "unfair profit" or "excess profit" in the rebate law "means an amount above a fair profit."

He told Ryan, "It is not all amounts earned in excess of the one per cent allowance for profit which you include in the rates. We are dealing here with a range of legally and constitutionally permissible rates.

"And it is our position that, if there is to be any refund at all, it should only relate to amounts which are above the high point within that permissible range of profits.

"In any event, there will be testimony here today that an allowance of one per cent for profit is not sufficient to attract capital and that such an allowance is and would be confiscatory."

The Steal Of The Century

By MARK VOGLER

Hank Iba and the American Basketball team should have quit while they were ahead. They should have stormed off the court last Saturday evening, never permitting that lowdown scandal to take place.

It becomes more apparent every day now, that the U.S. got the business from somebody or somebodies enroute to their initial Olympic basketball defeat–first ever in 64 contests, to be exact.

The Americans had their 8th gold medal beneath their belt for the sport, but had it "stolen" from them moments later. And I can't blame them one bit for declining to accept the Silver as a token of substitution.

This act of injustice ought to go down in the books as one of the great shames in international sports competition. It certainly will be remembered as such in the coming years.

One can only review the final moments of that controversial game to get the true one-sidedness that favored the Soviets.

I don't think it would be out of line to say that the Russians got the calls coming their way during most of the contest. But this was overshadowed by America's inability to put the ball in the hoop.

Yes, the Soviets did dominate much of the game. They played a solid defense and worked the ball around slowly, but deliberately.

However, the Yanks put on a gallant display at the end. Trailing by as much as 12 points, they got within striking distance with just seconds to go.

Then it happened. Doug Collins went driving down the lane for what appeared to be an easy bucket, but he was pulverized by a Russian defender. Those who witnessed this incredible game must have been shocked. It took the officials long enough to call the foul. Poor Collins was nearly knocked cold.

Collins shook it off and sank the free throws. And it looked like the Americans were on their way to another crown.

But wait a minute--yes, ONE MINUTE. The clock said three seconds, but the Soviets used up more like one minute in pulling out their 51-50 victory. They had three chances to score via the aid of some bush league officiating.

It appeared all over when the Russian pass was deflected at mid court. But the officials claimed there was still a second to go with Russia still in possession of the ball--naturally.

After the court was cleared of the frantic fans, Russia got Chance No. 2 to score, and they muffed it. The U.S. delegation then launched a celebration and the U.S. players were headed for a victory ride, or so it seemed.

"But don't worry, Aleksander Belov. We'll give you one more chance." It was at that point that the jubilant Americans were kindly informed that there were three seconds left to be played--that's a joke (I felt like putting my foot through the TV screen as I viewed this horror show in disgust!)

Tom McMillan was asked by an official to give the inbounds passer some breathing room. Belov, the Russian superstar, was waiting under the bucket for the feed. But he was closely guarded by two Americans.

Now here's where I get picky. It looked like Belov made contact with one of the Americans when he went up for the ball--that's my observation. But it's quite clear to most sports enthusiasts who watched the game, that three seconds most certainly had elapsed before Belov made the move for his effortless layup.

And now there are claims made by reporters who were thre that the referee neglected to call two violations which would have erased the winning Soviet basket. Incredible.

One report has it that a Soviet player stepped on the base line in making the inbounds pass. The other ruled that Belov was guilty of the three-second violation. For cripe sakes! They only had three seconds to score. The man running the clock must have went cuckoo.

So take it or leave it, sports fans. American basketballers, barely averaging 20 years in age and having trained together for three months--if that, really did beat the Russian squad (seven years training together)--even if the books deny this fact.

After all, you can't always trust the books, especially if they've been fixed. Yes, the American defeat in Olympic basketball couldn't have been planned better.

Celebrating a post-loss win are the members of the Soviet Basketball Team moments after having dealt the U.S. its first defeat ever in Olympic Hoop history. They are indeed the gold medalists, but not without the benefit of some "fixing" by certain individuals to dethrone the American Five. Russia had three chances to score its winning basket last Saturday night. (AP Wirephoto)

Varsity M

The Newman Center is the scene this afternoon at 12:05 for the first Varsity "M" Club luncheon of the year.

The "stars" of this afternoon's show will be head football coach Dick MacPherson, with a preview of Saturday's scrimmage with Cornell, and Cross-Country Coach Ken O'Brien who will preview the upcoming season for the UMass harriers.

Varsity "M" also features its regular star, which is great food. That's the Newman Center at 12:05 p.m.

Revellers

Due to the recent deletion of the UMass nickname for the athletic teams, the Cheerleaders have agreed to work together with the Revellers in order to institute the new cheers as rapidly as possible. Many times in the past, these groups, though they were both concerned with the promotion of school spirit, seemed to be working against each other. Cheering out of harmony and with different cheers at the same time were a mark of the past.

Instituting this new policy for the Revellers will be the responsibility of the following newly elected officers: President, Don Gorski; Vice-President, Cathy Ryan; Treasurer, Neal Milden; Secretary, Anne Lynch; and Publicity Chairman, Betsy Caren.

"Youth" To Get Chance

By EARLE BARROLL

They're a coaches dream.

It always happens. They're big, they're strong, their minds are technically prepared for the intricasies of their trade. Where senior experience has left off, their youthful enthusiasm must come in.

Practice after practice they slug it out with the veterans. The coach is impressed, his dreams are nc longer restless experiences.

But then...the day of reckoning. Their baptism under fire. No longer teammate against teammate. The opposition is foreign. The pats on the behinds, the helpful hand are few and far between.

For head football coach Dick MacPherson his time has come. After a maiden voyage with seasoned veterans, gaps have been left via graduation, but he has inherited a 5-1 freshman team...And on Saturday at Alumni Stadium the moment of truth comes in the presence of Cornell in a pre-season scrimmage.

How does he view it?

"We need a scrimmage with Cornell," he said with the emphasis on "need". "We're a young team and we need to clear up the fog a bit."

Mac has found that his patience has been short with the younger players. The transition from the pros, to senior and sophomores is quite a jump for the head coach.

"I have to develop patience with the young players," he said. "I don't have it yet, but it's probably due to the inconsistencies of youth. The great thing about it though is that they're talented youth, which is extremely pleasing."

Who are these players? Nameless for now. As MacPherson said, "I'll give them the opportunity on Saturday to make their own names known."

But for the time being, "We're encouraged," he said. "However, the younger people will have to improve...They have to."

His dreams are waiting in the balance.

Erving Gets Okay To Play For Atlanta

ATLANTA (AP) — A court ruling Tuesday made Julius Erving, a star rookie in the American Basketball Association last season, a member of the Atlanta Hawks of the rival national Basketball Association and General Manager Richie Guerin said, "We're very glad to get him."

Superior Court Judge Ernest Tidwell ruled that Erving's contract with the Virginia Squires of the ABA is "voidable, terminated, and of no further force for effect."

The 6-foot-6 forward had filed suit saying that he had signed with the Squires out of the University of Massachusetts last year without the knowledge that his agent also was an agent of the ABA.

Erving signed with the Hawks of the NBA on April 10. He was also drafted number one by the Milwaukee Bucks in the 1972 NBA draft. For their signing of Erving, Atlanta may have to give up a later draft choice and cash to the Bucks.

Erving was the leading offensive rebounder in the ABA his rookie season and averaged 29 points a game.

Squires owner Earl Foreman said at his home in Silver Spring, Md., that he had no advance knowledge Erving had entered the suit.

Lyle Stops Sox For 33rd Save

NEW YORK (AP) - Relief ace Sparky Lyle earned his 33rd save of the American League baseball season Tuesday night as the New York Yankees nipped the Boston Red Sox 3-2, ending Luis Tiant's string of seven consecutive complete game victories.

Winner Fritz Peterson, 15-14, took a 3-0 lead into the seventh but was keyoed when Cal Yastrzemski singled, Ben Oglivie homered and Rico Petrocelli walked.

That brought on Lyle, who shut off the Red Sox the rest of the way.

New York had nicked Tiant for a run in the first inning on consecutive two-out doubles by Bobby Murcer and Ron Blomberg, giving Peterson a quick lead.

In the fifth, Gene Michael walked, was sacrificed to second by Peterson and scored on Roy White's ground rule double for a 2-0 Yankee edge.

Baltimore Loses

DETROIT (AP) - Light-hitting Ed Brinkman clouted a two-run homer to send Detroit to a 3-2 victory over Baltimore Tuesday night, snapping a four-game Oriole winning streak and a three-game Tiger losing string.

The triumph moved the fourth-place Tigers within one game of American League East leader Boston, which lost to New York. The Yankees and Orioles are tied for second, a half-game behind, in baseball's tightest race.

Woodie Fryman, purchased by Detroit from Philadelphia Aug. 2, upped his record to 6-2 with the triumph. It was the veteran southpaw's sixth complete game in nine starts since joining the Tigers.

Brinkman scored Detroit's winning run in the seventh off Roric Harrison on Dick McAuliffe's double after having walked and taken second on a single by Fryman.

Russians Say "We Won"

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet news media Tuesday claimed victory in the Olympic Games for both Russian athletes and the "Socialist" system and chided the American basketball and track teams.

Izvestia, the government newspaper, said the fact that the Soviets won more gold medals than anyone else-50 to 33 for the United States-was proof that the "Socialist" system is better.

"The Victory is Complete," read a banner headline in the newspaper Soviet Sport. Pravda, the Communist Party organ, headlined "Our Trimphant Finish".

And Tass, the Soviet news agency, said, "By any system of point scoring, the Soviet Olympic team has won first place."

The American basketball team, which refused to accept the silver medal after a controlversial last-second loss to Russia, was suffering "wounded pride," Tass said. The news agency added that the U.S. sprinters who lost the 200 meters to Valery Borzov "went to their dressing rooms like ashamed children."

Havlicek Unsigned

BUZZARDS BAY, Mass. (AP) — Veteran forwards Hank Finkel and Steve Kuberski signed one-year contracts with the Boston Celtics Tuesday, leaving captain John Havlicek the team's only player outside the fold for the 1972-73 National Basketball Association.

Havlicek failed to appear for the Celtics' annual pre-season picture session and a luncheon sponsored by the Cape Cod Chamber of Commerce.

The Celtics, including President and General Manager Red Auerbach, were surprised by his absence, and there was speculation among some observers Havlicek may become a holdout. However, Auerbach was not too concerned.

"He's on the Cape, I think fishing," Auerbach said. "John was here Monday for the physicals, so there's no reason to fret. He can't be classified a holdout until Wednesday morning, anyway. That's when the training camp opens officially."

Havlicek, who has been given tempting offers by the American Basketball Association, reportedly is seeking another three-year contract with a hefty pay increase from the Celtics. He completed a contract calling for a reported $140,000 a year last spring.

Senate Guarantees 3rd World Seats

By ROBERT L. SCHEIER

The UMass student senate reapportioned itself last night in a move designed to encourage Third World Participation in the body. The meeting was the first of the new year. Immediately following the move, Senator Matt Tackeff resigned in protest.

The vote guarantees 15 senate seats to members of the university Third World Community (Blacks, Chicanos, and Spanish-speaking students), and sets the size of the body at about 107, in what may be the first written apportionment of the senate.

Tackeff later said he was considering a challenge to the ruling, which he claims may have violated the equal protection clause of the United States constitution.

In other major business, the senate heard a proposal which, according to its sponsors, would make the Student Union-Campus Center Governing Board more accountable to students.

Under the adopted apportionment plan, a dormitory with under 250 residents will be allocated one senator, and dormitories with 250 to 500 residentswill receive two. According to John Hogan, senate speaker and sponsor of the plan, this would result in about 60 dormitory senators, 25 commuter senators, four Greek senators, the 15 Third World senators, and three senate officers.

Senator Tackeff resigned as the plan which must be reviewed next year was passed. He shouted, "I will have no part of this unrepresentative body". He had argued against the plan, claiming anyone interested in running for the senate has an equal opportunity to do so.

Supporters of the measure had claimed the few blacks elected to the senate had withdrawn after several weeks because they felt powerless in the largely white senate.

Furthermore, they said, Third World students were scattered around campus, so that when they were elected, they had no constituency, but were representing white students.

Under the plan, which will go into effect with the 72-73 senate elections now scheduled for September 28, the New Africa House, a black cultural center on campus, will be classified as a residential area.

After the plan for the 15 Third World senators was passed, the senate debated between the so-called apportionment plans "A" and "B". Plan "B" would have included a senate of 138 members.

Under plan, "B" which was rejected, dorms with up to 210 residents would have one voter, and those with 211 and above would have two, and those with up to 490 residents would have three.

Senator Elliot Sherman, sponsor of the defeated plan, claimed a greater number of senators would result in better representation, while opponents said a larger senate would be too unwieldly.

In its final action, the senate voted to give Senator David Booker, chairman of the governmental affairs committee, a free hand in determining which housing figures to use in printing ballots.

The senate had debated when to ask the UMass housing office for dormitory occupance figures in determining how many senators each house is entitled to.

During the debate on the Third World seats, Tackeff, a senator from Fields House, said all groups on campus had an equal opportunity to become a part of the senate.

He said the senate should encourage blacks to run instead of guaranteeing the 15 seats.

Larry Ladd, arguing for the measure, cited what he called "institutional racism" that kept Third World persons from taking a large part in senate affairs.

Mass. Mental Health Called Inept, Misguided

By MDC Staff

BOSTON - The Massachusetts Department of Mental Health is characterized by "ineptitude, misfeasance and misguided priorities," according to a privately funded two-year study of the state's treatment of mentally ill and emotionally disturbed children.

The report prepared by the Task Force on Children out of School and released yesterday said the DMH has failed to demonstrate any significant concern for the needs of children.

"The energies of the department go toward defending the present lack of services, by protecting officials to whom the public looks for leadership and help," stated the report.

The report assails Mental Health Commissioner Milton Greenblatt, 58, who has headed the department for more than five years.

"Our observation and knowledge of the Department of Mental Health has led us to conclude that its top officials either misunderstand the needs of children or they tend to mistreat and ignore them," stated the report.

According to the report, Greenblatt's proclamation of "The Year of the Child" two-years ago, an attempt by the commissioner to increase public awareness and support for mentally ill children, is a sham that "does not exist" except as a slogan.

The department is the largest single agency in state government, with 18,000 employes and a budget this fiscal year of $168 million. It maintains 26 institutions, oversees 534 community programs, and is advised by 39 area boards made up of 900 citizens who are supposed to advise on mental health and retardation needs.

The report contends the department either ignores or frustrates the advisory boards that were supposed to give parents the feeling they were involved in the decisions affecting their children.

The report adds that the concepts and priorities of the department are focused on an old view of mental health which is "inappropriate to meet the needs of our children today."

"There are 68,000 emotionally disturbed and mentally ill children in the state who receive no help at all. In all likelihood, they will become emotionally disturbed and mentally ill adults. There are 60,000 retarded children, 24,000 of whom are in institutions. Half of them receive no training and no educational opportunity."

The report added that despite the fact that DMH has reduced the adult population in institutions, 90 per cent of its budget is still spent on institutions.

It says that only 10 per cent of children requiring psychiatric services in the state are actually getting help.

"There has been no substantial change in resources provided for children to comply with the stated policy of the department," the report continued. "Children receive only 15.7 per cent of the total staff resources of the department."

Chairman of the 22-member task force is Hubert E. Jones former director of the Roxbury Multi-Service Center. Jones, who has a background in social work, is a Democratic candidate for the 9th Congressional District in the primary next week.

Jones wrote in a foreword to the report that it "developed out of outrage and frustration," and said "...the needs of most mentally ill children in the Commonwealth--thousands of them--are totally ignored by the Department of Mental Health."

The report was compiled by Larry Brown, a PhD., with a staff of nine plus six persons listed as legal consultants.

It was financed by the Blanchard Foundation, the Cabot Foundation, the Committee of the Permanet Charity Fund, and the Godfrey Hyams Trust.

Department Criticized In '71

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

The report released yesterday by the Task Force on Children out of School is the second such critical report to be issued in recent years on the Department of Mental Health.

A joint legislative commission studying the Belchertown State School stated in their March, 1971 report: "We are totally dissatisfied with the manner in which Belchertown is being administered. We are deeply impressed by the Department's (Mental Health) indifference to change."

Last February a group of parents of Belchertown residents filed a class action suit in federal court in Boston charging that the Department of Mental Health has been negligent in the care of residents of the school.

The leading organizer of the suit charged yesterday in an interview that Mental Health Commissioner Milton Greenblatt is "99 per cent responsible for the problems" in the department.

UMass Professor Benjamin Ricci said yesterday's report backs up what he has been saying for the past year.

"All the commissioner has ever done is respond to crises," he continued. "Greenblatt doesn't have an innovative idea in his head."

Greenblatt was not available for comment last night.

The principal author of the report, Larry Brown, said institutions under the supervision of DMH are "worse than our zoos."

He said in a interview that Greenblatt, Deputy Commissioner William Bloomberg of Mental Health and top administrators in the Central Office should be held responsible for not implementing laws that have been enacted by the legislature to improve mental health facilities.

Brown said Greenblatt hired "the so-called father of public relations, Edward L. Bernays, to prepare a series of press releases with the hope of diffusing our report."

According to Brown, the public relations buildup was "a tremendous waste of money that should have been used for mental health facilities."

Brown added that children receive only 15 per cent of the total staff resources of the department even though children comprise 40 per cent of the population under the supervision of DMH.

Brown in a letter to Greenblatt charged that the commissioner "repeatedly intervened in the internal matters of our organization."

"Your apparent purpose," Brown wrote to Greenblatt "was to influence the contents of the study."

Brown charged that Greenblatt had approached the four charitable foundations which funded the study, "questioning their support of our work. Without having read the report, you labeled it a political document."

Brown added: "Your actions no longer constitute an endeavor merely to alter or stop publication of our study. They represent an overt effort to threaten the existence of the task force itself. The attempted use of public office to intimidate a private organization can be seen as nothing less than disgraceful."

Brown said: "You have substantiated some of our deepest concerns about the administration of the Department of Mental Health."

Search Committee Looking For CC Head

By MARILOU BARSAM

During the course of last semester, the Campus Center SUG board was given the authority, (through administrative consent) to hire and fire all Campus Center and Student Union employees.

In an effort to institute a fair procedure for the hiring of Campus Center employees, SUG board reinstituted the search committee procedure.

This procedure enables a number of representatives from the college community to meet, discuss, and eventually choose what they consider to be the best candidate for the open position.

Presently underway is the search for a permanent director for the Campus Center. Mr. Gerald Scanlon is the Acting Director. The position requires managerial experience and business administration expertise.

The present search committee is composed of representatives from the UMass administration, UMass faculty, Student Senate, Alumni, SUG Board and the Business Staff of UMass Chancellor Bromery also has a representative on the committee.

The committee has nationally advertised for the opening and has met once over the summer. The members expect to have to consider approximately 100 applications. All applicants will be considered for their specific qualifications and past experience. The committee has been budgeted enough money to enable them to fly in applicants for personal interviews.

The committee plans to meet once a week and hopes to come to a final decision by the end of November. At that time they will present Chancellor Bromery with the chosen applicant's resume. The Chancellor will then make study of the resume and give final approval.

Barry Cohen, SUG Board chairperson and search committee member commented, "The position is high paying and demands high business functioning and co-ordinating knowledge, especially in a building as complex as the Campus Center. The search committee should succeed in choosing the most competent man."

Ladd, who is also president of the Student Government Association (SGA), said the measure was only an interim move until minority members develop a "power base" in the senate.

Speaker Hogan said a spokesman for the Third World Alliance indicated his support for the plan, and said they would meet tonight to discuss it.

Tackeff said the legal challenge he was considering would contend the senate ruling may violate the equal protection clause of the United States constitution.

He said the apportionment of 15 seats to what he called an artificially established racial definition (Third World) denied enfranchisement to those who did not fit the category, as defined by the senate.

Tackeff said several other members of the senate had expressed an interest in the challenge, which he said would probably begin in the university judiciary system.

Patty Asack, a member of the senate's executive committee, presented the amendment to the Student Union-Campus Center Governing Board, which would also change the board's name.

The changes include provisions for review of the board's actions by the undergraduate and graduate student senates. Currently, the board passes its decisions on directly to the chancellor.

It was tabled for one week, under senate by-laws.

China Getting U.S. Grain

WASHINGTON (AP) - The first American grain sale to China in more than 20 years has been completed, government sources said Wednesday.

The Agriculture Department declined to comment on reports from unidentified sources that at least one U.S. export company was involved.

Secretary of Agriculture Earl Butz said in Vernon Center, Minn., where he had spoken at "Farmfest, U.S.A.," he was unaware if a deal was pending or already concluded.

He said, however, "Down the road sometime is a substantial trade agreement with China. I don't know how close it will be. The President opened the door a little bit with his China trip."

The secretary also said a deal could have been made by a private company and the government might have knowledge of it, especially if the company had a European subsidiary.

In Washington, official sources said an American grain firm has an order from China for the delivery of 20 million bushels of grain. The payment probably would be in dollars, as was the case in the purchase of ten 707 jetliners from Boeing for $150 million.

Sources said the Agriculture Department has received applications for export subsidies on wheat to be shipped to China.

An Export and Marketing Services spokesman said he could neither confirm nor deny the reports, but added that something might be announced soon.

The unoffical report on the sales comes on the eve of a congressional hearing Thursday on the question of earlier, larger wheat sales to the Soviet Union.

Those sales, amounting to 400 million bushels, helped push wheat prices up sharply this summer.

Nolan Shares Lighter Side of Medicine

Surgeon Nolen commented last night that there "weren't enough people to surge on in Chicago." Read the story. (MDC Photo by Gib Fullerton)

By MARK VOGLER

Many of the 400 who attended the lecture of Dr. William A. Nolen held in the Student Union Ballroom last night, probably expected the distinguished author--surgeon to engage in a talk on medicine.

But as it turned out, the best-selling author decided to provide a few laughs by giving the audience a taste of the lighter, and perhaps more comical view of hospital life. He did so by elaborating on the more humorous excerpts of his novel "The Making of a Surgeon".

Nolen best related to his storybook patient Mr. Polanski, to whom he had to perform his very first appendix operation on.

According to Nolen, "The motto at Bellevue Hospital, the place where I served my internship, was 'watch one, do one, and teach one!'"

Despite the comedy which was the crux of his talk, Nolen did place an important emphasis on the need for students (particularly medical students) to get a well-rounded education while in college.

"My advice to students today is to be diversified in your academic endeavors. I urge you med students while in college to take all the things that you can that aren't related to medicine. You might as well, because later on you'll have your heads glued to the medical books.

"That's the big problem with doctors today. They're not humanists. They are tremendous bores. Just go to a party. The only thing that you hear talk about is yesterday's case. They don't even go to the movies."

Dr. Nolen said he's a little embarrassed every time that he's introduced as the Chief of Surgery at Meeker County Hospital in Minnesota.

"Chief of Surgeon? Why I'm the only surgeon around there, except maybe for Charley the Veteranarian. But most people prefer a human type doctor."

Nolen said that there were three major influences behind his becoming a surgeon. He said that his father, who was a lawyer told him, "If you're smart, you'll be a doctor, because those big bastards got it made money-wise."

His mother and the glamorized versions he read in novels of his boyhood days were the other persuaders that led him to the field of medicine. If he had to do it over again, he would.

Nolen's sarcastic distinction between general practitioners and medical specialists is that "Practitioners learn more and more until they know nothing about everything. Specialists learn less and less until they know everything about nothing."

During the question and answer period that followed, Nolen discussed the issue of unnecessary surgery in the United States.

"I don't think that the surgeons are operating for fun," he said. "I think they're operating for the money--those that are doing unnecessary surgery, that is. I wouldn't think that they'd operate for kicks. In Chicago it's just a case of not having enough people to surge on."

In regard to his thoughts on the American Medical Association, Dr. Nolen said he doesn't even think about them. "If they want me out, they got to throw me out. I have mixed emotions about them. They've done some decent things, but at the same time, they're responsible for having done a lot of indecent things."

"A man who wrote a book entitled "Your Money or Your Life" once called the AMA 'the American Murder Association'. But it just isn't true.

"There are a lot of problems with the system as it stands. There have got to be a lot of changes. We've got to be more responsible to the people."

Center For Social Change Continues To Grow

By JIM DEMPSEY

Too often throughout the 60's groups were formed to protest one action or another and were disbanded as quickly as they wer formed. There was always a tremendous initial reflex action to the latest major crisis. But the follow-up to this reaction was not always there.

During the spring of last year such a group was formed in reaction to yet another escalation of the war. Unlike many other groups, the Center For Social Change has continued and grown. Like many other groups, it began as a reaction to oppression somewhere else. But in the process they came to a clearer understanding--that you must begin to fight oppression where you live.

Along this line there is one definite plan now being developed for the fall. The Center will provide a clearinghouse for complaints of discrimination against women in the UMass community. Any woman discriminated against--student, staff member, faculty member--can refer her problem to the Center and they will investigate it, publicize it and act on it.

There are also plans for a woman's information bureau at the Center. This will list the various activities in the Five College area of special interest to women and help them find the resources to meet their needs.

The Center is not only for women to use. It is open for everyone to use, to contribute to and to be part of. During the summer months the Center collected a good deal of literature to be used concerning veteran's issues, defense contracts and defense spending, woman's issues, racial issues and other topics of major social concern.

Jennifer Franklin, a member of the Center, explained that "the Center wants people who are going to fight racism, sexism, and militarism--people who want to fight oppression and work for change here at the University."

Another active member of the Center, Annette Townley, added, "We want to make the University responsible for changing itself--we want to make it accountable for the oppression in its own structure."

It should be noted here that the Center is not a strictly students-only organization. It is open to anyone who wants to use it.

The Center is anxious to work with other groups on campus and in town, such as the Student Senate, the Southwest Woman's Center, and the people living in Amherst.

One problem they're hoping to confront is that of excessive rent rates, both in town and in the dorms. They want to find out why they are so high and what they can do about it.

Another plan the Center has for the fall is a drug-counseling service for Veterans on campus who need it. This will be run by the Vietnam Veterans Against the War.

They are also looking into ways people can receive credit for different individual projects. Such projects must lead to some form of public action. This is being set up with the assistance of various professors, the Provost's Office, and the Radical Studies group.

The Center is hoping to conduct workshops and discussion sessions throughout the year, and invite speakers here as they did during the spring and summer months.

Feminist Robin Morgan, has been invited to speak on October 6 to open a minimarathon at the School of Education. One question to be discussed at that time will be, "Is there a need for a Woman's Caucus on campus?"

Later this month, a weekend conference will be held for all those involved with the Center in the past and anyone who would like to become involved with the Center this year. The conference will provide a fresh start for the Center and establish what goals it might have for this year.

For more information about the Center for Social Change you can call 253-7691 or 253-7873.

Nixon Committee Files Suit

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon's campaign committee filed a $2.5 million suit against Democrat Lawrence F. O'Brien Wednesday, the latest court move growing out of the Democratic headquarters break-in affair.

The civil suit charged the O'Brien, former Democratic national chairman and now chairman of Sen. George S. McGovern's presidential campaign, has maliciously abused federal court processes.

O'Brien had earlier filed a $1 million suite against the five men arrested for breaking into Democratic headquarters.

A spokesman for O'Brien said the GOP suit " is obviously frivolous and an attempt to intimidate us from pursuing our own suit against the Republicans. We will not be intimidated by such desperate tactics."

Clark MacGregor, Nixon's campaign director, said: "O'Brien and his associates have taken willful advantage of the honorable procedures of the United States court that are intended for the protection of individual rights and perverted them into an instrument for creating political headlines.

In The Nation And The World

South Vietnam Reinforcements Halted

SAIGON (AP) — A heavy artillery pounding and stiff ground resistance Wednesday prevented South Vietnamese reinforcements from reaching the Quang Tri Citadel but the government commander claimed he already had enough men in the fortress never to be driven out.

South Vietnamese marines, who stormed the stubbornly defended Citadel through a bomb hole in its southern wall Tuesday, reportedly were locked in close-quarter fighting.

Radio Hanoi reported more heavy U.S. air raids on North Vietnam Wednesday and claimed six U.S. aircraft were shot down around Hanoi and Haiphong. The broadcast said nothing of the fate of the crewmen.

The U.S. Command makes no announcement of plane losses until search and rescue operations are complete and had no immediate comment on the Hanoi claims. Earlier in the day the command announced that three North Vietnamese MIGs and a U.S. F4 Phantom were shot down in two days of air battles north of Hanoi. The loss of the Phantom brought the number of American airmen listed as missing since resumption of the bombing campaign to 100.

The Phantom was downed by a MIG 48 miles northeast of the North Vietnamese capital Monday, the U.S. 7th Air Force announced.

The three MIGs were destroyed in dogfights as U.S. planes kept up their blitz on the Hanoi-Haiphong heartland for the third straight day.

The U.S. 7th Fleet reported that a task force of the guided missile destroyer Lawrence and the destroyers Wiltsie and Eversole heavily bombarded supply storage area north of Dong Hoi in North Vietnam. It is in this area where Chinese freighters anchored off the coast of North Vietnam have been unloading war materials into barges and other craft which try to slip into the beach with them in efforts to circumvent the U.S. mine blockade.

The 7th Fleet said the task force triggered more than 10 secondary explosions and a half dozen sustained fires north and south of the Song Ron River mouth at points 32 miles north and 30 miles northwest of Dong Hoi.

The battle for the recapture of Quang Tri, which fell to North Vietnamese invaders May 1, has developed into one of the longest and bloodiest of the Indochina war.

For President Nguyen Van Thieu, the northern provincial capital has become a political prestige symbol and he is determined it should return to his government's control.

Officers in the field told Associated Press correspondent Holger Jensen the marines in Quang Tri are now killing more than 100 enemy a day. About their own casualties they were silent.

In neighboring Cambodia, Brig. Gen. Srey Meas reported enemy forces have employed a new trick to scare his troops. They brought up 30 mock tanks made of wood and paper and each carried by four men, he announced. A tape recorder makes the necessary noise of tank engines, said the general.

Soviet-US Trade Pact Near

MOSCOW (AP) -A leading Soviet news correspondent, reporting on Henry A. Kissinger's talks here, said Wednesday the United States and the Soviet Union are on the verge of signing a giant new trade pact. It may include a location of an American trade center in Moscow, complete with hotels.

Kissinger, President Nixon's special adviser, wound up three days of talks with Kremlin leaders and prepared to leave Thursday for Britain and talks with Prime Minister Edward Heath.

But Victor Louis, a Soviet citizen who writes for the London Evening News Standard from Moscow, said in a dispatch to the newspaper Wednesday that one of the outcomes of the talks would be a trade agreement that would be worth $4.90 billion a year by 1977.

Louis has often reported accurately on what has transpired inside the Kremlin. He was first to report the ouster of Nikita S. Khrushchev in 1964 and predicted the Soviet-led invasion of Czechoslovakia in 1968.

He wrote that Kissinger's decision to extend his stay in Moscow by one day "seemed to underline" that the trade negotiations "had gone beyond the stage of consultation."

"The pact would lead to trade and Export-Import Bank credits on a scale that only the superpowers could afford," he added.

"The Americans are already planning a trade center in Moscow complete with American firms and hotels-and the American way of doing business."

He added Russia would probably be granted "most-favored nation status similar to that already enjoyed by Poland and Yugoslavia."

U.S. officials in Moscow said they had no information on the report.

Bilateral trade was believed to have been on the agenda for Kissinger's talks with Communist party chief Leonid I. Brezhnev, Premier Alexei N. Kosygin and Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko.

Other topics were said to include the Vietnam war, European security and the limitation of strategic arms.

After briefing Heath on the Moscow talks, Kissinger will move on to Paris for a Friday meeting with President Georges Pompidou.

Rev. Sloane Calls POW Release 'A Gesture'

NEW HAVEN (AP)-The Rev. William Sloane Coffin Jr. chaplain of Yale University, called the pending release of three American prisoners of war "a gesture" by Hanoi which calls for "some reciprocation" such as a halt in the bombing.

Coffin is one of a group, led by anti-war activist David Dellinger and Cora Weiss, who plans to travel to Hanoi to escort the prisoners home.

They were to leave tonight. "The release of these three men is a gesture," Coffine told a news conference. "A gesture calls for some reciprocation.. and appropriate reciprocal gesture might be a halt in the bombing."

Coffin said he didn't know for sure what Hanoi's motive is, and he said use of the word "gesture" was "my assessment of what this is."

But, he added, "To release them before the war is over on a national anniversary is some sort of gesture."

He said he thingks the North Vietnamese are trying to tell the American people they "have a hard time believing that Americans can doubt that prisoners would be released if the war were to end."

Coffin also said he doesn't see objections to traveling inside Hanoi and perhaps speaking on Hanoi radio while in North Vietnam. He didn't say, however, whether he intends to make public statements there. "If I comment on Hanoi radio," he said, "it will be for two reasons: not out of love for Hanoi, but out of love for my own country."

He said the reasons would be "to tell them there are a lot of Americans who don't support the bombing" and because "a man should be free to say in his own country or anywhere else" those things which he feels are true.

Mid-East Newspapers Issue Call To Arms

(AP) - Israel denied losing a plane to Syria in an air battle Wednesday while newspapers for both countries issued calls to arms. A small, radical Arab guerrilla organization threatened violence against West Germany.

Both Syria and Lebanon braced for more Israeli attacks in retaliation for the Arab terrorist attack in Munich at the Olympics. The seige ended with the deaths of 11 Israelis, five terrorists and one West German policeman. The Lebanese army has been ordered to fight back.

"There was no incursion, no encounter, nothing happened today," an Israeli military spokesman said after Damascus radio announced that Syrian forces shot down an Israeli jet over the occupied Golan Heights.

Residents of the Biblical cities of Tyre and Sidon in Lebanon reported four Israeli planes swooped over at dawn Wednesday. There was no gunfire.

A Tel Aviv newspaper said Wednesday that Premier Golda Meir's warning that Israel will fight terrorism with all its power amounted to an "official...declaration of war on Arab terrorism."

Davar, Mrs. Meir's Labor party paper, was commenting on a Knesset-parliament-resolution Tuesday holding Arab states that harbor guerrillas as being responsible for guerrilla acts of terrorisms.

The Syrian government newspaper Al Thawra called on other Arab countries to unite their strength in the battle through military and economic aid.

A similar call was first made at a session of the Arab League Council last week.

The shadow of future violence also reached to Germany. In Hamburg, a spokesman for Al Saika, a small, radical Palestinian guerrilla organization headquartered in Syria, threatened violent action against West Germany to force officials to free the three imprisoned Arab terrorists.

The spokesman, quoted by the Hamburg illustrated magazine Stern, said one of the jailed terrorists is a member of his group.

Military analysts in Tel Aviv say Jerusalem may respond to future Arab terrorism in surprising ways.

"Israel is expected to meet the terrorists on their own terms," the military correspondent of the Jerusalem Post Wednesday quoted informed circles as saying.

The analysts appeared to be following the lead of Mrs. Meir, who told parliament Tuesday that "it is clearly possible to adopt measures which have not yet been taken" against terrorists.

Some experts interpreted her remark to mean that Israel will take the initiative abroad, especially against Palestinian groups in Europe.

Knowledgeable Israelis say the guerrilla organizations in Europe have hundreds of active supporters with a small, hard core of trained terrorists.

British Kill Wage, Price Freeze

LONDON (AP) - British leaders have ruled out an American-style wage and price freeze to check what seems to be a wild rush toward a new economic crisis.

They made this known Wednesday through senior authorities after announcing the nation's world trade account last month nosedived to a near-record $464 million deficit.

The Department of Trade and Industry blamed a three-week strike of longshoremen for the August slump in exports. These sagged nearly $500 million to about $1.2 billion - compared with imports worth about $1.86 billion.

The developments came on the eve of a crucial day-long parley between Prime Minister Edward Heath and his colleagues and chiefs of industry and the labor unions.

Last weekend the Bank of England warned that Britain's major problem now is runaway inflation which, unless swiftly checked, could lead to even more serious economic troubles including record unemployment.

The warning was reinforced by Heath's former deputy, Reginald Maulding, who told his former colleagues things simply cannot go on as they are.

The senior informants, speaking on behalf of the government, insisted:

—The Health Cabinet considers a wage-price freeze will not remove the causes of inflation but might touch off even graver industrial unrest.

—Health and Chancellor of the Exchequer Anthony Barber are setting their hopes on a three-day voluntary agreement to restrain price and income increases.

—Britain is joining the other nine present and prospective members of the European Common Market in moves designed to produce a concerted onslaught against the inflation sweeping most of Western Europe.

Parakeets Up For Grabs

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) - A smart, friendly, swift-flying parakeet from Argentina has North American bird lovers at odds over whether it should be killed to protect crops.

"It ought to be eradicated," says Stanley Quickmire, executive director of the Connecticut Audubon Society.

"That's being an alarmist," says Roger Tory Peterson, an internationally known naturalist who just returned to his Old Lyme home from an arctic expedition.

"It's just a bird that comes to people's feeding stations."

The dispute is over what - if anything - should be done about the monk parakeet, which has established itself in the New York metropolitan area and is spreading to the Connecticut and Massachusetts shorelines.

The gray bird, which builds huge, apartment house-type nests, also has been reported in North Dakota, Michigan and Virginia.

"If this species should become abundant, serious damage to agricultural and orchard crops can be expected," the U.S. Department of the Interior warned in a pamphlet published last year.

The monk parakeet reportedly has caused extensive damage to grain and fruit crops in northern Argentina, where there is a bounty on its feathered head.

"Many ornithologists I've talked with feel the bird should be stamped out now before it's too late," says Peter Alden of the Massachusetts Audubon Society.

But Peterson said, "I've seen it in Argentina, and it's not all that bad. I doubt that it will ever become abundant here. It's not a native species."

The Audubon Society, however, points to the example of the starling and the English sparrow, two imported birds which proliferated to the point of being nuisances.

The monk parakeet appears to be highly adaptable. One flock which escaped from its cage at Kennedy International Airport in 1969 soon became acclimated to the north temperature zone after naively laying its first batch of eggs in November - a spring month in Argentina - and seeing its young freeze to death.

After a year of adjustment, the first generation of native New York wild monk parakeets appeared in the spring of 1971.

Intelligent birds, they can be taught to mimic human launguage. That's why tens of thousands have been imported from South America for sale in the United States.

Soviet Economy Goes Downhill

MOSCOW (AP) - The sector of Soviet officialdom concerned with promises to consumers of more and better goods was jolted Wednesday by some bad news: Not only does the consumer economy continue to lag but the food production outlook is less than rosy.

Ekonomicheskaya Gazeta - Economic Gazette - published a review of economic performance for the first eight months of the year which reported shortfalls in clothes, knitted goods, shoes, television sets, textiles and washing machines.

There wasn't much to satisfy rising hopes of consumers, since these were the very items that Leonid I. Brezhnev, the Communist party general secretary had singled out for "appreciable" increases in production when he reported the outlines of the 1971-75 economic plan last year.

In this ninth five-year plan nearing the end of its second year, the planners promised to "saturate" the market with consumer goods. Premier Alexei N. Kosygin said this would depend on a 36-40 per cent increase in labor productivity by the end of the plan period.

And Ekonomicheskaya Gazeta complained specifically in its Wednesday report about a lag in the growth of labor productivity.

The party had called the 1971-1975 plan the one that would promote "a substantial rise of the living standard as the main task."

It was hailed, unofficially, as the plan marking a turning point in Soviet economic priorities from defense-oriented heavy industry to consumer-oriented light industry.

Other shortages disclosed by the economic journal included harvesters, a revealing piece of information in light of the bad grain crop, which has already forced the Kremlin to commit more than a billion dollars in hard currency to foreign grain purchases.

Scorching sum..ner weather cut sharply into the harvest of the breadbasket of European Russia, prompting Soviet officials to transfer their hopes to the later-ripening grain of Siberia.

But there was bad news for them Wednesday in a report in the newspaper Sovietskaya Hossiya - Soviet Russia - about the harvest in the immense Altai area, across the Urals.

McGovern Mobbed In Philadelphia

PHILADELPHIA (AP) - Sen. George McGovern, mobbed by cheering thousands in downtown Philadelphia, pledged Wednesday night to reduce welfare rolls by at least 30 per cent by 1975 if he is elected president.

He also accused the Nixon administration of "political perversion" of plans for the nation's 1976 bicentennial celebration.

Campaigning in Pittsburgh and Philadelphia with Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, McGovern was surrounded by cheering, shoving crowds as he walked to the scene of the same kind of enthusiastic downtown rallies which have marked this week's swing through the traditionally Democratic city strongholds of the Midwest and East.

In Philadelphia, the crowds of shouting, hand-waving supporters seeking to touch McGovern forced Secret Service men to form a ring around the Democratic nominee to prevent him from being bowled over.

Through it all, McGovern remained calm reaching out both arms and clasping backers' hands.

As McGovern spoke to the crowd estimated by supporters at 50,000 and by the police at 5,000, others looked out on the scene from office building windows high above the packed street.

Kennedy, introducing McGovern as he has all week, said the tour has demonstrated that "the people are fed up" with the war, inflation and government corruption, as well as with President Nixon."

"A spark has been ignited and the flame is spreading," Kennedy said. "It's going to sweep across the country and bring McGovern victory on November 7th."

McGovern's vow to cut the welfare rolls, contained originally in his economic policy speech in New York late last month, had gone unmentioned on the political trail the last ten days.

His criticism of the Nixon administration's preparation for the bicentennial were contained in a statement issued in connection with the Philadelphia visit, but he made only brief mention of it in his speech.

A pressing crowd of more than 10,000 gave the Democratic presidential candidate one of the most demonstrative receptions of his campaign at a midday rally in Pittsburgh's Market Square.

McGovern and Kennedy, his temporary campaign partner, spent about 15 minutes wading the two blocks through the downtown crowd from the stage to their cars following the rally.

It was one of the most exciting moments in the four-day string of rallies in big, heavily Democratic cities of the Midwest and Northeast which McGovern and Kennedy began in Minneapolis Tuesday night.

In a speech prepared for the Philadelphia rally, the Democratic presidential nominee said the bicentennial planners have been "working hand in glove with Nixon re-election campaign." He added the celebration "is geared not to the 'spirit of '76' but to political gamesmanship- perhaps the 'Spiro of '76.'"

The reference to Vice President Spiro T. Agnew was one of the few McGovern has made to the vice president, once a favorite Democratic target.

Nixon Gathers High Command

THURMONT, Md (AP)- President Nixon gathered his campaign high command at nearby Camp David Wednesday night for dinner and serious talk about the electioneering ahead.

Invited by Nixon to his rustic home were campaign chairman Clark MacGregor, former campaign manager John N. Mitchell, White House chief of staff H.R. Haldeman and former Secretary of the Treasury John B. Connally, head of Democrats for Nixon.

Press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said the aim was to lay plans for the final eight weeks of the presidential campaign-a matter that has been claiming increasing amounts of Nixon's time recently.

The President will return to the White House for a Thursday morning session with wife Pat and Secretary of the Interior Rogers C.B. Morton. They're going to talk about the celebration of the 100th anniversary of the National Park System and, presumably, announce plans for Mrs. Nixon to visiting the pioneering park, Yellowstone in Wyoming, on Sept. 20.

In Washington, Ziegler made a variety of announcements Wednesday on Nixon's behalf, all ostensibly nonpolitical but still freighted with campaign overtones.

For one thing, the President,who has been laying campaign stress on a quest for young votes, sent all departments and agencies a memo plugging for good jobs for older people.

He called on each agency head to review his own programs "to make sure that the skillls and experience of our older citizens are being effectively utilized."

Nixon issued also an annual proclamation, close to the hearts of many Polish-American voters, designating Oct. 11 as a memorial day honoring Gen. Casimir Pulaski, a Polish volunteer who died during the American Revolution.

Finally, Nixon sent Congress a bulky packet of reports on federal highway safety efforts and, in a statement, noted that traffic deaths per 100 million vehicle miles have declined. from 5.5 in 1967 to 4.7 in 1971.

Martha Denounces Republican Slander

WASHINGTON (AP)-Martha Mitchell, saying there's nothing wrong with her mind, has denounced Republicans who are contending her husband's resignation from President Nixon's re-election campaign came because she suffered a nervous breakdown.

"I think it is rotten after all I have done for the Republican party for them to cast aspersions on me," the outspoken wife of former Atty Gen. John N. Mitchell said in an interview published by the Evening Star and News today.

"I want to be sure my side is revealed and that people know I'm not sitting here a mental case or an alcoholic," she told the Star-News.

The newspaper said Mrs. Mitchell talked freely about her much-publicized ultimatum to her husband last June that he get out of politics or she would leave him but refused to discuss the alleged bugging of Democratic National Committee headquarters.

Some highly placed Republicans have contended, the newspaper said, that Mitchell left his post as head of the Committee for the Re-Election of the President because Martha suffered a nervous breakdown.

Democrats, however, have sported "Free Martha" buttons and claimed she was silenced because she knows too much.

The Star-News said Mrs. Mitchell elaborated on her account of what occurred in a hotel room in Newport Beach, Calif., last June when her telephone conversation with a reporter was cut off just as she was about to answer a question on the alleged bugging incident.

She said in an article published Tuesday that Steve King a former bodyguard who is now head of security for the Committee for the Re-Election of the President, ripped the telephone from the wall to keep her from answering the question.

And she contended King, who took over as head of security when his boss, James W. McCord Jr., was arrested in connection with the alleged Democratic bugging, threw her to the floor, kicked her and held her down when she resisted the efforts of a doctor to give her an unwanted injection.

The Star-News said Mrs. Mitchell was thinner and paler than in her last public appearances in June. "I ought to be pale," she said, "I can't even go on my balcony."

The newspaper said the interview was conducted in the Mitchell's Watergate apartment in the plush Watergate Hotel. It said Mrs. Mitchell planned to leave Washington and move to New York this week.

Army May Revamp ROTC

FT. MONROE, Va. (AP) — The Army is contemplating "dynamic" changes in the structure of its Reserve Officer Training Corps in an effort to reverse steadily declining ROTC enrollment on college campuses, a spokesman for the Department of the Army said Wednesday.

Col. R.C. Yerks told the 10th annual ROTC Conference here that innovations in the ROTC program in the last few years have begun to reverse the trend toward dwindling enrollment.

Besides making changes in the program, Yerks said, the Army is also considering a plan that would lead to a "major revolution" that in effect would upgrade ROTC's stature in the military.

Yerks said the plan would call for separating ROTC funding from the reserve program and would establish a regional command system across the country with a general officer in charge of each region.

"You may be experiencing a rather dynamic change in the near future," Yerks told officers and ROTC cadets attending the two-day conference at headquarters of the Continental Army Command.

Yerks said there appears to be more acceptance of the ROTC program on college campuses this year, reversing a decline in interest that began during widespread antiwar demonstrations in the 1960s.

Among innovations in the ROTC program cited by Yerks were the admission of women into training and active recruitment among minority groups.

Women have been admitted to ROTC on 10 campuses this fall on an experimental basis, Yerks said, but response has been so great that "we fully expect to expand the program beyond the 10 schools."

The Army now is dealing with a number of minority group colleges to see if they can support ROTC programs, he said, and plans are being made to work with such groups as the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in seeking qualified cadets.

Earlier Wednesday, Brig. Gen. Milton E. Key had told the ROTC leaders to avoid taking a defensive attitude on their campuses and to begin shedding the "low profile" stance assumed during the anti-ROTC demonstrations in the late 1960s.

From 1966 to 1972, enrollment in ROTC programs dropped from 177,422 to 56,234, he said, but part of the reason lay in low-profile recruiting.

Key also noted that in 1966, a total of 106 schools required ROTC training, while now only 14 not already associated with the military make the training mandatory.

Northampton Volunteers Program Seeks Help

Northampton State Hospital Volunteer Program is about to start up its 1972-1973 season. The volunteer program was set up to help college students find out that people in state hospitals are real people. This year we are looking forward to our largest recruitment ever. This can happen only if we get people who really care. If you're the type of person who fits this description, then how about joining us this year? Old members have their first meeting Thursday, September 14. New members will have a special orientation on Thursday, September 28. The bus leaves from in front of the main entrance of Hasbrook Laboratory at 6:30 P.M.; and from the Sunset Avenue side of Patterson House at 6:35 P.M. If you have any questions, please feel free to cal Mel at 6-6627, Brian 6-6373, or Roger at 6-5272. We hope to see as many volunteers as possible this year!

Folklore Centre Reopens

The Amherst Folklore Centre reopens for the fall season on Friday, September fifteenth. Once again it plans to provide the community with the most progressive of national and local talent in weekly concerts and jam sessions.

The Folklore Centre hopes to present a wide variety of musical expression including Eastern and Western classical music, traditional folk and bluegrass blues, ragtime boogie, jazz, and rock and roll. The Centre considers Music is a beautiful, unifying experience "By participating in the music of our own community and other distant ones we have the potential of drawing this planet together into a more harmonious existence."

This year there will be concerts every Friday and Satruday night in addition to concerts and jam sessions taking place frequently on weeknights. They will bring back the popular performers from last year such as Michael Cooney, David Bromberg, Spider John Koerner, Jim Kweskin, Happy and Artie Traum, Don Stover, and many others you may have seen here previously.

There will be newcomers playing at the Folklore Centre this year. Sandy Bull, a Vanguard recording artist, who plays an amazing variety of Eastern and Western stringed instruments will open the fall schedule on Friday and Saturday, September fifteenth and sixteenth. Suchil Mukherjee, who plays bamboo flute, accompanied by tabla, harmonium, and other Indian instruments, will appear on October the fourteenth.

Besides the concerts there will be some open hoot nights for anyone who has the urge to perform on stage. These will also serve as audition nights. Performers from local bands will play in jam sessions occasionally throughout the year. They hope to have more varied and exciting music and are open to the suggestions and desires of the community in this area.

Once again there will be weekly movie series on Tuesday nights in cooperation with the Amherst Film Co-operative. More information on the films available from the Film Co-op. Plays, craft shows and yoga lessons are possibilities other for joyous events throughout the year.

Also, the Centre kitchen will still serve delectable refreshments made from natural ingredients. The Folklore Centre is located at 16 Spring Street across from the Lord Jeffery Inn. Most nights admission is charged but profits are used to further the Centre's horizons.

Natural Grass

Of all the heavy and important issues that surround us and vie for our time and attention perhaps we should take some time out and talk about a subject steeped in irrelevancy. The grass around our new library.

On first thought you may react with a so?, or, "they are really cracked" or "I was waiting for this." No matter, read on.

As it stands now, there are squares at the edge of the concrete plaza that surround the base of the library. These squares contain no concrete, and in fact do contain earth, or as it is more commonly referred to, dirt. In addition, in this dirt are, at this time, many and varied types of wild grasses, flowers and weeds. It is an area unlike most in the University proper.

No doubt, the folks in the physical plant have on a list somewhere the future destruction of these plants. In their place they will probably place bushes, shrubs, or the common "house grass". This newspaper implores the University to do otherwise.

The wild plants are needed in the present location. Without them, the library would be a sterile, brick and concrete structure, designed and measured from top to bottom, indeed to the earth at our feet.

Wild plants make it natural, the way it was intended. They blow in the wind, are different and varied (no two squares look the same), give us hayfever in the spring and fall. In other words, they are real. This University is sorely in need of reality. Why don't we start with the plants?

"Redmen": An Explanation

This is addressed to the poor befuddled fellow who stated in yesterday's Collegian that he couldn't understand why 'Redmen' was an insult to Native Americans. After reading his comments I cannot only sympathize but wholeheartedly agree. It's getting so you can't belch sideways without some minority getting offended. What do those people want anyway?

Any member of so-called 'minority groups' can quote from the above paragraph almost word for word because like the saying goes, "I've heard it before." However anyone who considers a blatant racist insult a nickname definitely is in need of a few answers.

Firstly understand that you answered your own question, unknowingly but with fantastic precision in your admission of not being an Indian. As it is now you can only relate to the whole incident as the rash act of a overly liberal university giving in to some over-sensitive minority. But try to be a Native American just for a moment. Do you ever remember asking for a nickname? And even on the outside chance that you did, would you accept one from a community that can't deal with your presence except on the basis of skin-color or out of race consciousness?

The fighting spirit of the Indians that we all have read about in history books? A person who's been at UMass for the past few decades couldn't have possibly told anyone that because it's been only recently that the truth about Native Americans has been widely published. Little or nothing was written of his fighting spirit yet the images of the 'untamed savage' or the ' uncle tom-tom' (who couldn't really be trusted) cannot easily be removed from our minds.

So maybe now it's clearer and easier for you to understand. In final retrospect, just change the word 'Redmen' to 'Whitemen' and see if any great surge of racial pride swells up in your being.

Jimmy Olsen On The Prowl

Looking for a story yesterday, Jimmy Olsen wandered through the Hatch. He was searching for old Hatch Rats, people who had been sitting in the back of the Hatch for the last four years. Jimmy, growing tired of being a cub reporter, wanted to get into some cultural anthropology. The people in the back of the Hatch weren't there. The booths were taken out three years ago, the people in the last year. Jimmy figured he might find them in the Blue Wall, which after all was not around when the Hatch was in its heyday.

Flashing his Believe It Or Not I Am An Adult card, Jimmy walked into the Blue Wall. There were only a few people there, none of whom looked burnt out enough to have spent four years in the back of the Hatch. Geewillikers, thought Jimmy, how am I ever going to get a promotion if I can't find a story?

Eventually, Jimmy decided to look around the Campus Center, thinking that perhaps he might find a story. For Pete's sake, he thought, I'm a pretty sharp guy. All I need is an angle. Suddenly his ears were filled with the sound of music that was popular before the Hatch was a gleam in Jean Paul Mather's eye. Butterfield House was playing Benny Goodman to advertise its film series, "The Golden Age of American Cinema". My, my, thought Jimmy, don't they know the difference between a film retrospective and nostalgia. Then he saw the list of films that were to be included in the series. Fuck me, he thought (although he quickly remembered himself), if I tell everybody about those films, I may win a Pulitzer Prizer Prize. Then he ran to the telephone and asked Lucy Lane for a date for every Wednesday night for the rest of the semester.

One Pulitzer Prize wasn't enough though, so Jimmy sidled over to the next table where three people had a petition to allow John and Yoko Lennon to remain in the United States. The United States Government is trying to throw them out; these students are on the Concourse Level every day gathering signatures to keep them here. Jimmy asked sharp and incisive questions, and learned that both left and right wingers are hassling the petitioners. A member of the communist Party chided them for working for justice for such wealthy and decadent people as John and Yoko. The right-winger criticized them for questioning the United States Immigration Authority. Jimmy fired off a memo to Perry White which read: "Perry, this could be the perfect sequel to the story I wrote about the Beatles' 1964 Metropolis Concert."

Having exhausted the tables on the concourse, Olsen took a pinball break, losing three quick games of King Kool. Disheartened, he wandered into the Coffee Shop where he exchanged small talk with his next door neighbor, congratulating her on her splendid recovery from a black eye she had picked up at the Tri-County Fair the previous weekend. Then he excused himself, and wandered off, still not satisfied. satisfied.

Darn it, he thought, a cultural anthropologist can do better than this. I think I'll hang around the pool hall and watch the juvenile delinquents.

Once inside the pool hall, Jimmy was disappointed. He expected decadence. Instead he saw only college students, playing eight ball under a sign which forbade gambling, profanity, and masse shots. The pool hall called all its tables billiard tables, although only one of them was actually without pockets. Jimmy looked around as hard as he could, but he saw no one chewing tobacco, and no one had both his thumbs broken. The fattest guy there wasn't even fat, there wasn't a tuxedo in the place, and try as he might, Jimmy couldn't see or smell a drop of whiskey in the room. Hopefully, he perked up his ears. He heard no profanity whatsoever.

He looked up and saw Peter Lewicke, a Student Senator, coming into the pool hall. That does it, he thought, how respectable can a pool hall get? Chagrined at not finding a story, he nevertheless consented to play pool with the Senator. Jimmy Olsen, the kid who had to grow up fast, proceeded to lose three of four games to a guy holding the title of "The Honorable" before his name.

"Little Caesar is playing next Wednesday night," Olsen replied.

"Really?" asked White. "All right, Olsen, beat it."

"Lois," he said into the phone, "what are you doing on Wednesday nights this semester?"

Why Hoffa Couldn't Go

WASHINGTON--There has been criticism in government circles over the handling of Jimmy Hoffa's trip to Hanoi, which was canceled at the last moment.

For some reason the White House, the Justice Department and the State Department, as well as Hoffa's lawyers, all had different versions as to what actually happened.

By piecing together a bit here and a bit there, I think I can now reveal what took place.

When Jimmy Hoffa was serving time in prison, he decided to study the Vietnamese language, in hopes that someday when he got out he could organize the truck drivers along the Ho Chi Minh Trail in the Teamsters Union.

Somehow word got to the White House of Hoffa's proficiency in the language. (It was first believed that Hoffa's cell was bugged, but this was later denied.)

In any case a White House staffer at a meeting said: "Why don't we send Hoffa to Hanoi to unionize the North Vietnamese truck drivers? Then he could call a strike and cut off all the supplies to the south."

"What a great idea," President Nixon said. "How does it sound to you, Henry?"

Henry Kissinger replied, "It doesn't bother me, as long as I can keep going to Paris."

"But Hoffa is in prison," another White House staffer said.

"The President can parole him," someone suggested. "We'll leak the story that the President is paroling Hoffa so the Teamsters will support the Republicans during the election year. No one will know the real reason is so he can go to Hanoi."

A call was put in to the attorney general, who said it would be no problem to parole Hoffa, but he raised the question as to how Hoffa could get a passport to leave the country.

"We never thought of that," a White House assistant said. "We'll have to infrom Bill Rogers, the secretary of state, of our plans."

"Absolutely not," Kissinger said. "If we tell Rogers about this, we'll be setting a bad precedent. He'll want to know about other things we're planning to do in foreign affairs, which are none of his business."

"Henry's right," a White House staffer said. "If we clue in Rogers on this, he'll be coming around all the time wanting to know what we're cooking up. A little knowledge for a secretary of state is a dangerous thing."

The President asked, "Why can't Hoffa just go down to the passport office and apply for a passport without Bill knowing about it?"

"Good thinking, Mr. President," John Ehrlichman, his special assistant, said.

The machinery was put into motion. Justice got Hoffa his parole, Kissinger told the North Vietnamese Hoffa was coming and the White House press office prepared an announcement revealing the President's 1,987th secret plan to get us out of Vietnam.

But somebody goofed, and the announcement was made before Hoffa took off for his mission.

Because Scretary Rogers was not in on the plan he thought someone in the passport office had erred and, without checking with the White House, Rogers canceled Hoffa's passport and announced that the Teamster boss couldn't go.

The President was urged to overrule Rogers but decided against it when the secretary of state called angrily and said that if Hoffa went to Hanoi, he, Rogers, would organize a Republicans for McGovern committee. With on a 34% lead in the polls, Nixon couldn't afford this, so he reluctantly denied he knew anything about Hoffa's trip.

It was a great blow to Hoffa, not to mention the White House. But worst of all, President Nixon now has to come up with a new secret plan to get us out of Vietnam.

Letters To The Editor

Vermont Power Plant

To the Editor:

The latest notice by the Atomic Safety and Licensing Board which is holding hearings on the Vernon, Vermont, nuclear power station (about 30 miles north of the University on the Connecticut River) mentions opposition to immediate licensing by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

The Vermont Yankee Atomic Power Corp. is applying to the Atomic and Safety Licensing Board for a temporary full power license based on a recent law (P.L. 92-307) which weakened the National Environmental Policy Act. (N.E.P.A.) by permitting the Atomic Energy Commission (A.E.C.) to license nuclear power plants before a full investigation of all effects of the plant have been completed by the Licensing Board. The power company's contention, based on the exception allowed by PL 97-307, was that a power shortage exists and that the plant was needed to alleviate it.

The Commonwealth of Massachusetts is a party to the hearings which are being held in Brattleboro, Vermont to investigate all aspects and effects of the operation of the Vernon plant prior to issuing an operating license. Massachusetts is not the only party in the hearings; the states of New Hampshire, Vermont, and Kansas, and private groups like the Vermont Natural Resources Council, the New England Coalition on Nuclear Pollution, the National Wildlife Federation and others along with the A.E.C.'s own regulatory staff are represented in a hearing before a 3 officer Board which has the power to license the plant.

The position taken by Massachusetts as reported in the latest notice is that "The Commonwealth of Massachusetts opposes the granting of the motion (for temporary full power licensing) on the principal ground the Applicant had not proven, by not providing needed data, the need or extent of electric power requirements."

Due to the enormity of the consequences if an unwise decision and the substantial doubts raised in the last several years concerning the accuracy of projections dealing with the reliability of the developing nuclear technology, the power company's attempts at hurry-up licensing are imprudent. I wish to thank our Attorney General for intervening in the hearings in Brattleboro and for trying to protect the interests of Massachusetts citizens down river from the pressures of utility expediency.

Shoplifting

To the Editor:

Returning and arriving students are encountering a more emphatic campaign against shoplifting than has been seen in recent years. More than thirty cases that appear destined for court action have consulted with me to date.

Everyone should be aware that the penalties for shoplifting can be severe. The losses attributed to shoplifting annually are staggering and merchants are not pleasant about this crime. People should also be aware that within certain limits the shopkeeper can require you to wait or go to his office and that police can be called if you are suspected of shoplifting. If you pick up an item from a counter and do not replace it, you may be subject to a shoplifting charge if it is concealed among your belongings even though you have not checked out of the store.

I recommend that students who do not wish to run the risk of a court hassle both refrain from actually shoplifting as well as avoiding any appearances of shoplifting.

A Misunderstanding

To the Editor:

Yesterday's Collegian published what appeared to be a "Letter to the Editor" under my signature.

It was an unfortunate misunderstanding. The previous day I received a call from a member of the Collegian staff asking to publish an excerpt on the Freshman Orientation Program that appeared in my report to students regarding summer activities. I had understood that the section would be used in the context of an article on the freshman program.

To my surprise, one small paragraph of the report appeared on the editorial page as a letter to the editor. I regret that editorial decision, since it does not fully present my own opinion and has caused several upset students to accuse me of "shooting from the hip."

My opinion is based on (a) complaints I received from a number of counselors in the program, (b) discussions with freshmen who attended the student government workshop held throughout the orientation, and (c) the experience of two non-freshmen students who enrolled in the program to evaluate it from the inside.

I regarded that evidence as sufficient to report my own judgement. At the very least, the program deserves systematic study and re-evaluation before a similar program is instituted in 1973.

Middle East

To the Editor:

In viewing the Arab—Israeli situation as he does in his Letter To The Editor (M.D.C. Sept. 11) Joseph Martin, in not understanding himself what he describes, is creating a one-half picture of "the other side of the coin". The Jews, it is true, migrated in numbers to what was then Palestine and settled there but were not allowed to live beside the Arabs. They then requested, fought for and got a relatively small portion of land and it became the State of Israel. The Arab government, at that time, warned their people of the "invading Jews" and the butchering that would follow if the people did not flee. Many Arabs believed this and left. The refugees, rather than being helped by the oil rich Arab governments, are allowed, in many cases, to live in squalor and refugee camps so that they can be pointed to and have said of them "Look what the Jews have done". I too lived in Israel, though only for one month, and would add that living solely on a Kibbutz does not give one an accurate picture of Israeli life-I lived with Israeli families. I saw as many cases of Arabs harrassing tourists and Israelis as I did the opposite. What I also saw were Arab merchants and beggars prospering more now than they ever could have under Arab rule. CAN THE SAME BE SAID OF JEWS STILL LIVING IN EGYPT? Emphatically NO! And I know Jews who live in Egypt as well as those who left.

The fact is that the Jews understand the Arabs all too well-and it is the Arabs, propagating at a rate faster than the Jews, who must understand that the state of Israel shall survive.

Thank You

To the Editor:

I would like to thank whoever it was who helped me with my bundles yesterday. Rainy days are an annoyance, and seem to effect everyone's mood adversely. It was a pleasure to know that someone as considerate as you is alive. Thanks.

Editorial Points

We would like to apologize for our failure to cover this week's most important event. We understand, however, the ABC is the place to be, and that NBC has it all. CBS still has Walter Cronkite.

We feel bad for President Wood and Chancellor Bromery. It feels bad to make a speech when no one is there to listen. The University should know by now, though, that the plan was going to fail. Students haven't wanted to convoke for a long time now.

More On Middle East

To the Editor:

It strikes me as being quite odd that we, in this country, have such a visible double standard when it comes to reporting news on the Middle East issue.

Why was the news media closed to reporting the attack on the Egyptian school where 200 children were burned to death by napalm? These were innocent children who were killed for no apparent reason.

The unfortunate deaths of the Israeli Olympians in Munich, did have a reason however. Those Israelis were part of a population of usurpers who displaced the Palestinians of a home in order to make a country for themselves. These Zionists had no regard for the human rights of the Palestinians then or now.

The Witch In The Shrubbery

He strokes her, undresses her,
As a nonchalant breeze
Strokes the open window.
He does not suffer from an odd disease,
Nor is she limpid from an unknown spite.

How strange it all is,
When, left alone,
The bleak and desolate shadows
Merge into a desirous cone
Of warmth, and music, and laughter!

And yet, the peach-blond terror moon
Looks down, makes a light,
Hugs the darkness with glee,
Kills the mundane blight,
And serves all sleek pretention.

The robin's song is high above,
Not below, not with us.
Its orchestra forms
A pedigreed omnibus
Which floats, and floats, and floats.

The girl in bed
Does not know fate.
That is why, perhaps,
She lies there, love's degenerate,
A leaf in the sprawling clover.

It does not mean that fate does not exist;
It simply means that snow
Is ignorant of the wind,
That the rain's persistent blow
Skips the visceral, jelling dawn.

Who does not question will not receive.
The torpid moan of love will form a child,
Daring, who seeks to ask a name.
His force is private and unstyled.
It hides among the bushes.

Abrams Testifies On Lavelle Air Raids

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gen. Creighton Abrams went before a Senate committee Wednesday for an unusual round of questioning of high-level military conduct.

With such issues as civilian control of the military on some senators' minds, Abrams was to be asked about his version of the North Vietnam air raids ordered by Gen. John D. Lavelle.

Senate action on Abram's nomination as Army chief of staff has been held up by the Armed Services Committee's inquiry into Lavelle's conduct.

Committee Chairman Sen. John Stennis, D-Miss., said the senators want to know "what information Abrams had of the situation...what was his duty...and what he should have done" in his capacity as top U.S. commander in Vietnam.

Stennis after secretly questioning Lavelle, Abrams' subordinate as commander of the 7th Air Force in Vietnam, said the inquiry seems to be "more a question of disobedience of orders."

Once Abrams is finished, the Lavelle inquiry will continue, Stennis said, with other witnesses. Abrams' nomination then will be considered separately.

Bahai Members Will Observe Peace Day

On September 17 members of the Baha'i Faith in the United States will observe World Peace Day. The event, inaugurated in 1959, is sponsored annually by the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of the United States. Observances of the day are held to focus attention on the role that America can and must play in the establishment of world peace.

The public is invited to attend a meeting sponsored by the Amherst Baha'i community to be held at 2 p.m. at the Jones Library Courtyard. (In case of rain, the Amherst Woman's Club, 35 Triangle Street.)

The speaker will be Mrs. Marzieh Gail, well known as a writer and translator. She is the author of Persia and the Victorians, The Three Popes and Avignon in Flower. She has also translated many of the Baha'i writings from the original Persian and Arabic to English. Her father, Mirza 'Ali-Kuli-Khan was a distinguished diplomat and member of the Persian delegation to the Peace Conference in Versailles.

Scholarship Competition Opens

Rhodes and Marshall scholarship competitions for 1973-74 has officially opened, according to Mrs. Barbara B. Burn, Director of the Office of International Programs.

A Rhodes scholarship provides for two years of study at Oxford University, England, with a possible third year if the scholar's record and plan of study warrant it.

To be eligible a candidate must be male, unmarried and a US citizen with at least five year's domicile; be between 18 and 24 years old at the time of application; have at least junior standing at the time of application; and receive official endorsement of the university.

Selection is based not only upon the applicant's academic ability and achievements, but upon his moral character and physical vigor. "Quality of both character and intellect is the most important requirement for a Rhodes scholarship," the official program announcement states.

The Marshall scholarship program is designed to enable qualified men and women study for a degree at any university in the United Kingdom. Awards are made for two years, but may be extended for a third.

To be eligible a candidate must be a us citizen, under 26 years old on October 1, 1973, and a graduate of an accredited college or university.

Marshall scholarship selection committees look for distinction of intellect and character as evidence both by scholastic attainment and other activities and achievements.

Rhodes and Marshall Scholarship application forms are available at the Office of International Programs. Students interested in learning more about the scholarship should talk with Mrs. Burn. Completed applications must be received at the Office of International Programs, 239 Whitmore, by October 6. The applicants are then interviewed by a campus committee. Applications endorsed by this committee are transmitted to the state and regional Rhodes and Marshall Selection Committees for their review.

Reunions Delayed

SEOUL, Korea (AP) — North and South Korean Red Cross delegates made no apparent progress today in their second meeting to negotiate the reunion of families divided by the postwar division of the Korean peninsula.

They even failed to set the date for their third session. But they agreed on a North Korean proposal to fix it later over the new hotline telephone connection established during the summer between Seoul and Pyongyang.

Like the first meeting in Pyongyang last month, the two-hour session in the Chosun Hotel was largely speechmaking.

The South Koreans seemed to be trying to play down political differences. But the North Koreans took advantage of nationwide television time to praise the leadership of Premier Kim Il-sung and the Communist party.

The meeting also failed to produce a joint statement because the two sides could not agree on its content. A South Korean spokesman said working-level delegates bargained for more than six hours over the wording without success.

South Korean chief delegate Lee Bum-suk said in his speech substantive discussions would begin with the next meeting.

"For us today, to unify the fatherland is the greatest patriotic task," he added.

UMass Chorale To Perform With Boston Philharmonia

The University Chorale at Christ Church Cathedral of Oxford University, during the Chorale's 1970 European Concert Tour.

The University Chorale, a select a cappella choir of seventy voices, is beginning its seventh year under the direction of Dr. Richard du Bois. Under Dr. du Bois' leadership, the Chorale has become known as one of the finest choral ensembles in New England.

The Chorale has made numerous radio and television broadcasts, and each year undertakes a spring concert tour in addition to its on-campus concerts. These tours have taken the Chorale throughout the Commonwealth and twice, in 1968 and 1971, to the midwest. In 1970, the Chorale, accompanied by faculty soloists, made a three-week tour of Europe, singing a total of ten concerts in England, Holland, Switzerland, and Germany, concluding with a recording session in Paris.

Although primarily an a cappella ensemble, the Chorale often performs with instrumental ensembles, The University-Mt. Holyoke Orchestra, and faculty soloists, and has made several premiere performances of contemporary choral works.

The Chorale's plans for this year include, in addition to the annual tour, a performance of the rarely-heard Gloria Concertato of Monteverdi, and the motet Nun Danket Alle Gott of Pachelbel. In the spring, the Chorale is scheduled to perform with the Boston Philharmonia, both at the Philharmonia's visit here as part of the Fine Arts Concert Series, and in Boston, as part of the Philharmonia's regular season.

The Chorale invites all interested singers to audition for the group. Call the Music Office, 5-2227, to arrange for an audition.

Man Snoring Up Storm

Robinson, a 59-year-old retired Navy chief petty officer, has been a subject of controversy over the effects of his snoring on residents of the suburban Huntington Beach housing development into which he and his wife recently moved.

Mrs. Robinson admits her husband's snoring is like a storm.

"It is a long rolling sound like thunder in the distance," she says. "There is a second of silence and then it begins all over again."

But 15 years of marriage apparently has numbed Mrs. Robinson to the nightly sound. "I have three options," she said.

"I can try to fall asleep first. I can take my pillow and go to another room. Or I can get up and listen to an all-night talk show."

But the Robinson's next door neighbors apparently have not adapted to the rumbles.

An attorney representing Mr. and Mrs. Earl Hardenbrook contacted the Robinsons by mail and told of the hardship placed on the Hardenbrooks. Their bedroom is only 10 feet across from the Robinsons. On hot summer nights when bedroom windows normally are left open, they say the noise keeps them awake.

Robinson's snoring, the letter said, "constitutes a private nuisance affecting the quiet enjoyment of Mr. and Mrs. Hardenbrook's real property."

And he suggested the Robinsons "move your bedroom or close your windows" to make sleeping easier for the neighbors. He said he would seek a court injunction if the Robinsons didn't comply.

Robinson got in touch with his own attorney who, in turn, told Hardenbrooks' lawyer he could find no "authority to the effect that my client can be compelled by a court of equity to:

"A. Move his bedroom.

"C. Cease his snoring.

"If you can find appropriate authority for the last proposition, however, it will be welcome news indeed for housewives all over the world."

That's where the matter stands.

Boltwood-Belchertown Needs Volunteers

The Boltwood-Belchertown Project is a three year old student directed program designed to encourage college students to work with the mentally handicapped at the Belchertown State School. Last year, some 350 students from the five college area participated in the program. This year it is hoped to continue the program incorporating lessons learned from last year. Fourteen area students have been recruited to coordinate the activities of the student volunteers. The student coordinators provide guidance, experience and ideas.

Transportation to and from the state school is provided. Funds for the project's activities come from the five colleges.

Volunteers work one night a week, for three hours. Programs are run Monday-Thursday nights with a special Saturday night coffeehouse program. The volunteer is asked to make a definite commitment to come every week, as inconsistancy destroys any relationships that are developed with the residents.

Efforts are being made to have modular credit available to those volunteers who desire it.

Organizational meetings will be held the week of Sept. 17. Tentative times and places are: 9/18 7:30 P.M. Berkshire Dining Commons, Worcester Dining Commons, 9/19 7:30 P.M. Orchard Hill-Dickinson Recreation Room.

There will be an information table set up on the Campus Center concourse to help answer any questions. Watch the paper for further news.

Volunteer Program Organized

Northampton State Hospital provides psychiatric residential and out-patient treatment to the adult citizens of western Massachusetts (Region 1) under the supervision of the Massachusetts Department of Mental Health. At the present time, there are approximately 1200 residents requiring varying degrees of treatment.

In the past, in order to supplement the custodial programs, the community became marginally involved in activities via Volunteer Service. Originally, the programs were activity oriented with little theraputic value. Persons admitted to the hospital were often not expected to return to the community. Emphasis was on custodial care. Today, the trends are to return the patient to the community as quickly as possible lest they become "institutionalized". Experts agree, that whenever possible, this direction is preferable.

Needless to say, one aspect of treatment does not change without its effects producing changes in the ancillary programs. Therefore, Volunteer Service has moved in the direction of not only recruitment and placement of volunteer workers but in educating them in order that they become more valuable within the hospital and become knowledgeable members of the community.

This year Volunteer Service would like to offer a well structured program to college students. A monthly in-service training program involving lectures, films, and rap sessions will be offered. Students themselves will determine the content of these sessions to assure their relevancy. In order that this program will be successful, it is imperative that student leaders come forward early in the program. Committees must be formed to work with the Volunteer Director to plan the coming academic year.

There are many areas for student involvement at the Northampton State Hospital. Some are continued from previous years such as the Wednesday Night College Program, afternoons or mornings in O.T., informal visiting arrangements by special request. Some of the brand new programs envisioned are conducting special education classes on the wards, holding music appreciation hours, encouraging patient participation in art programs, bowling leagues (we have our own two-lane bowling alley), sports activities (we have a basketball court), and many other programs. Actually, our programs are limited only insofar as our imaginations, manpower, and willingness to work are limited.

Such a comprehensive program should gather interest from students in very major field. Any students interested in participating in the Northampton State Hospital College Student Volunteer Program shoul contact Volunteer Service. The phone number is 584-1644, ext. 342 for further information.

Draft Counseling Course Offered

A new course for draft counselors will be taught by Gil Salk, coordinator of Draft Counseling Services. The course is available either as a one-credit seminar or, possibly, as a full three-credit course.

The one-credit seminar will consist of four classes, meeting on Tuesday nights, beginning Sept. 19. Each class will start at 7 p.m., and run for three to four hours. Material to be covered will include SSS structure, lottery, deferments, C.O., appeals, resistance, counseling techniques, and other draft-related topics. The final class will consist of role-playing counseling situations.

The three-credit course will be the seminar plus at least three hours each week of doing supervised draft counseling after the seminar is completed.

Although the course is being sponsored by Project 10, it is open to anyone who is interested in becoming a draft counselor. It is offered on a pass/fail basis, and materials, including books, will total about $7.50.

To register, call the P-10 office, 545-0871, before the end of the "add course" period. The office is usually staffed in the afternoon. The course number is 390R.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

☆ by SYDNEY OMARR ☆

The Taurus baby is usually adorable, but seems constantly to be hungry and quite willing to set up a howl to prove it. This baby is on the way to being husky, rambunctious and a perfect charmer.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Tread lightly. Be discreet and selective. Take nothing for granted. See situations, individuals in light of reality. Avoid wishful thinking. Take cash and let credit go. Many now make empty promises.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You get chance to initiate own style, policy. Accept responsibility. Don't play games with emotions. Stakes are high and likely to be for keeps. Older individual offers benefit of experience. Accept!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Finish rather than begin. Strive for added appeal. Publish and advertise. Aid one who confides problem. Don't cast first stone. Check partnership, co-operative project. Joint effort needs serious review.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Stress independence, originality. Strive for new starts in new directions. Adhere to your own style, set your own pace. Leo person could play key role. Some associates are not sure of their course.

LEO (July 23-Aug.22): You are able to perceive pulse of public. You sense what is wanted. Key is to find a supply. One who taught you in past may make reappearance. Be wary of agreement which bases authenticity on unknown financial factor.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept.22): Highlight versatile approach. Don't complately depend on one method. Heed words of one who sees beyond the obvious. Long range program should be advocated. Avoid petty rumors, accusations. Social contact is meaningful.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Break free from restrictions. You are capable of rebuilding. Know it and act accordingly. One who serves you is apt to be misinformed. Double check. Be sure of basic information. Remember recent promises to yourself.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 2-): Change of scenery would be beneficial and is indicated. Relationship with member of opposite sex grabs spotlight. Avoid extravagances. Don't attempt to buy affection. Young person requires guidance.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be gracious to family member. Don't force issues. Taurus and Libra persons are involved. Aura of glamor exists. Maintain individuality. Don't reveal all you know. Accent personal magnetism. New opportunity is on horizon.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Look behind scenes for answer. Much now is apt to be undercover. One who usually does much talking may appear strangely silent. Pisces figures prominently. Places of confinement, hospitals are likely to be in picture.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Advancement is made through display of drive, power. Go all the way. Lukewarm methods now will not suffice. Don't mix money and friendship. If you do, you could lose both. Know it and respond accordingly.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Now you can successfully put finishing touches on project. One in authority may change policy in midstream. Be ready. Avoid premature actions. Restraint now works in your behalf. Take overall veiw.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you make adjustment at home. You can be happier if you forgive family member for slight, real or imagined. Don't hold grudge. You are alert, perceptive, a natural writer. November will be one of your most dignificant months of 1972.

T.V. Blackouts To Be Investigated

WASHINGTON (AP)—Television blackouts of major sports events will be investigated by a congressional subcommittee, Rep. Harley O. Staggers, D-W.Va., said Wednesday.

Staggers, chairman of the House Commerce Committee, said the probe being undertaken by his panel's special investigations subcommittee will "review both home-game blackouts and those imposed in connection with closed-circuit, or theater, television."

Sources close to the subcommittee said staff investigators would gather information, including data on professional football league activities.

"Underneath, it is an economic protection measure," one source said of the blackout. "Hearings will not be held until an adequate base of research has been completed," he added:

Staggers said: "Eleven years ago, the Congress passed legislation granting professional sports leagues certain exemptions from the anti-trust laws. This legislation provided for the imposition of television blackouts of major sports events in certain circumstances.

"This legislative action was taken at a time when the financial position of the major sports leagues, football in particular, was much more precarious than is the case today."

Over the years, Stagger said, "the blackout has become increasingly unpopular with the public. It is time to re-examine the entire question, with particular reference to the Communications Act of 1934 governing broadcasting."

Squires File Suit

NEW YORK (AP)-The Virginia Squires have filed suit in federal district court in Virginia seeking an injuction to prevent Julius Erving from playing for another basketball team, Robert Carlson, commissioner of the American Basketball Association, said Wednesday.

The ABA executive also said the report that a superior judge in Atlanta had ruled Ervings' contract with the Squires invalid was "erroneous." He said such a report was made to Judge Ernest Tidwell, but the judge refused to make such a finding.

Erving, who played last year with the Squires, has signed with the Atlanta Hawks of the National Basketball Association for a reported $1-million-plus contract.

The Milwaukee Bucks of the NBA drafted Erving last April and still claim him. The team has charged the Hawks with "wilful violations" of the NBA constitution and by-laws.

Representatives of both Milwaukee and Atlanta are scheduled to meet with NBA Commisioner Walter Kennedy Thursday and discuss the matter.

The results of the meeting will be put before the NBA Board of Governors at their next meeting.

Greater St. Louis Golf Classic Starts Today

ST. LOUIS (AP)-Lee Trevino, brash and brassy as ever but heading toward the end of his season's schedule, is the main attraction and the man to beat in the inaugural Greater St. Louis Golf Classic.

The $150,000 event, the first stop on a new, three-week swing around mid-America, gets underway Thursday on the 6,650 yard, par 70 Norwood Hills Country Club course with many of the game's leading lights among the missing.

Of the 12 players who have accumulated $100,000 in winnings this season, only five are on hand for the 72 holes. In addition to Trevino, there's Jim Jamieson, towering George Archer, little Chi Chi Rodriguez and Grier Jones.

Of the 28 players who have won major tour titles this year, only nine are in the 144 man field assembled for this event that will be followed on the new swing by $100,000 tournaments in Robinson, Ill., and Bettendorf, Iowa.

With the long tour now in its ninth month without a break-some 36 consecutive tournaments deep in the schedule-many of the game's tip stars are through for the season or are taking extended breaks.

South African Gary Player completed his American tour last week when he picked up the $50,000 first prized in the World Series of Golf. England's Tony Jacklin won't play in this country again this season.

Pirates Win

CHICAGO (AP)-Roberto Clemente's tir-breaking home run in the seventh inning powered the Pittsburgh Pirates to a 6-4 victory over the Chicago Cubs Wednesday.

The triumph, Pittsburgh's 14th in the last 16 baseball games, reduced to five the number of victories they need to clinch the National League East Division title.

Clemente's 10th homer off Ferguson Jenkins, 20-11, followed a single by winning starter Nelson Briles, 14-7, and broke a 3-3 tie.

Don Kessinger's single and Billy Williams' double for the Cubs in the eighth off reliever Bob Miller made it 5-4 but the Pirates added a run off Jack Aker in the ninth on Gene Alley's single, a sacrifice and Rennie Stennett's single.

Lee Evans Victorious at Zauli Mem. T&F Meet

ROME (AP)-Lee Evans, who failed to qualify for the United States Olympic team in the 400-meter dash, got a small measure of revenge Wednesday night when he beat Olympic gold medalist Vince Matthews at the Zauli Memorial Track and Field Meet.

Evans, winner of the gold medal at Mexico City in 1968 and holder of the world record in the 400, was clocked in 45 seconds flat, two-tenths of a second faster than countryman Matthews, who placed second.

The meet, which brought together a number of stars from the recently concluded Munich Olympics, saw another disappointment for America's 1,-500-meter star, Jim Ryun.

Ryun, who fell during a heat in the Olympics and failed to qualify for the final, ran third. South Africa's Emmy Van Zyil won in 3 minutes 39.7 seconds, ahead of Grant McLaren of Canada, 3:43.8, and Ryun, 3:44.3. Steve Savage of the United States was fourth in 3:45.6.

Pietro Mennea, who won a bronze medal for Italy at Munich, won the 200-meter dash in 20.5 seconds, beating two Americans, Larry Burton, 20.6, and Warren Edmonson, 21.3

The pole vault was won by Sweden's Hans Lagerquist, who vaulted 17-4 3-4. Bob Seagren of the United States, the world record holder and silver medalist at Munich, was third at 17-0 3-4.

In women's events, Barbara Ferrell of the United States won the 100-meter dash 11.4 seconds.

Fall Baseball Meets Today

By ROY LYONS

Fall baseball gets underway officially this afternoon with a meeting of all interested candidates at 5:15 P.M. in Boyden 249.

Returning varsity coach Dick Berquist explained the objectives of fall baseball on campus. Primarily, he believes it gives everyone a chance for a fair tryout. Waiting until the spring would necessitate final cuts being based on indoor performances at the cage. Trying to rate talent on this basis would be extremely difficult. Berquist also cited the importance of having the roster already established when spring arrives, and he thinks the additional experience will be equally advantageous.

The schedule includes six doubleheader dates beginning Saturday at home. The team will host a strong Eastern Connecticut squad that was named New England Small College Champions last season. Another interesting date includes a game against the alumni.

The pitching staff looks especially strong, featuring four hurlers drafted by major league clubs. Three of these are returning lettermen Tom White, Mike Flanagan, and Chip Baye. The fourth is Milford freshman Craig Allegrazza. White was named co-captain along with another senior, shortstop Eddie McMahon.

Several players on the team had excellent summers in the Cape Cod League, one which annually attracts many top-notch collegians. McMahon was an all-star shortstop. White, (8-4), and Flanagan, (8-1), had fine seasons on the mound. Also several UMass alumni had excellent seasons in the minors. Jim Saracino, a co-captain last spring, was signed by the San Francisco Giants and played for Great Falls, Montana. Tom King pitched well, earning a mid-season promotion to Double 'A' ball in the Texas League. First baseman Bob Hansen played Triple 'A' ball at Evansville and lead the American Association in home runs. Both King and Hansen are in the Milwaukee Organization.

Berquist has hopes for a productive fall season. The goal he's shooting for once again is the College World Series at Omaha, and on paper he seems to have the horses necessary to make it.

MacPherson and O'Brien Talk About Fall Seasons

By BILL BALLOU

It might have been Ken O'Brien.

It might have been Dick MacPherson.

It might have been the meatballs.

Whatever it was, it attracted a large, hungry throng to Fall, 1972's first edition of the Varsity "M" Club luncheons. (Also known occasionally as Mulcahy's Munch club).

Wednesday's clambake featured Chancellor Randolph Bromery and new Athletic Director Frank McInerney in the audience, and Cross-Country coach Ken O'Brien sharing the speaking honors with Head football coach Dick MacPherson.

O'Brien sounded an optimistic note for his men, and in fact, came right out and said that he was "fairly optimistic" in regard to the upcoming season. He seemed especially high on runners Randy Thomas and Bill Gillin, but noted that "I can't really single out any one outstanding runner."

O'Brien acknowledged that his team came up against "four good, tough opponents to start off the season" but he didn't seem overly worried.

"This team should handle it well," he predicted, "and they're eager to get at it. Anyway, runners are too flaky to be intimidated by anything. Not that they're naive or dumb, but I guess you could say that distance runners are unique personalities."

MacPherson was his usual self. He talked about his team, and how they shape up for the Cornell scrimmage at Alumni Field this Saturday. He introduced Clarence Brooks, who's this year's captain and as "Mac" put it: "There isn't a better guard in the conference. He also introduced Rich Cronin, who after a season as a fullback will return to his more natural spot of linebacker this season.

Bob Lord, who is the new line coach, taking over from Ken Conatser, provided the high point of the whole thing when he related the study of his coming to UMass.

"Mac called me up one night about 11 o'clock and said 'Bob, the job's yours. But whatever you do, you've got to keep the contract quiet. We can't have anyone finding out about this contract'. When he told me what it was I said 'Dick, don't worry about anyone finding out–I'm ashamed of it, too' ".

MacPherson had words of praise for his new aide, but also singled out the departed Conatser as "a tremendous guy. We don't ask Bob to replace Ken Conatser, because nobody can replace Ken Conatser. We just ask him to be Bob Lord."

With the help of Cronin, Brooks, Lord, MacPherson, and a host of UMass football players, there's a chance we might be calling Saturdays Cornell scrimmage "MacPherson's Crunch club".

Red Sox Hang On To First Place

NEW YORK (AP)-Boston broke Rob Gardner's no-hit spell with a four-run fifth as the Red Sox beat the New York Yankees 7-2 Wednesday night and maintained their lead in the tight American League East baseball pennant race.

The loss dropped the Yankees 1-1/2 games off the pace.

Gardner, 7-3, had a perfect game for four innings before issuing a leadoff walk to Rico Petrocelli. Carlton Fisk singled for the first hit off the Yankee lefthander and Andy Kosco then came through with an infield hit, loading the bases.

Ben Oglivie's forceout bouncer drove in the first run of the inning and Doug Griffin laid down a safe bunt for the second tally. Pitcher Lynn McGlothen, 7-5, then bunted for a base hit to load the bases again and chase Gardner.

Reliever Lindy McDaniel gave up the inning's final two runs, one on an infield error and another on Louis Aparicio's grounder.

The Yankees chased McGlothen on Felipe Alou's two-run double in the seventh. But Bob Veale came in to put down the rally, getting the last two outs with a man on second base.

Tigers Trip Orioles

DETROIT (AP)-Detroit rallied for five runs off Dave McNally in the fifth inning Wednesday night, three on a homer by Frank Howard and one on a balk by reliever Doyle Alexander, to overcome a four-run deficit and give the Tigers a 6-5 victory over the Baltimore Orioles.

The triumph kept the Tigers one game behind Boston but moved them from fourth to second in baseball's tight American League East race. The Red Sox beat New York, dropping both the Orioles and Yankees to third, 1-1/2 games back.

Detroit took a 1-0 lead in the first on a walk to Bill Freehan and a double by Howard, But Terry Crowley's solo homer in the second tied it and then Boog Powell blasted a grand slam homer in the third off winner Joe Coleman, 16-13, for a 5-1 Oriole lead.

Powell, who struck out with the bases loaded in the ninth inning of Tuesday's 3-2 loss to Detroit, belted his homer after singles by Don Buford and Merv Rettenmund, plus an error by Dick McAuliffe on a force play.

The Tigers' big rally began with a single by McAuliffe. Then Freehan walked with two out and Howard unloaded his first homer as a Tiger and 10th of the season.

Willie Horton singled and Mickey Stanley walked off loser McNally, 13-19, before Aurelio Rodriguez singled in a run. Then reliever Alexander balked as Stanley broke for the plate with Ed Brinkman batting, and scored the winning run.

If The Pennant Were Human . . .

"When did your state of depression begin?"

"When I realized that nobody seems to want me."

"What makes you think that?"

"It's pretty obvious. I mean look at all the opportunities there have been to claim me, but everybody seems reluctant to do it."

"Has this ever happened before?"

"Yeah, about five years ago the same thing happened, and it was hell. I thought for sure that it would never happen again. Especially since the past four years have been so wonderful–someone has claimed me early in each of these years and showed right along that they really want me."

"Then you must be doing something wrong this year."

"What the hell can I do wrong when all I can do is sit here waiting for someone to take me. Maybe I should sit a different way. Or maybe I should stand. Nah, it couldn't be that. I've just got to face facts: no one wants me."

"But it seems inevitable that someone is bound to take you sooner or later."

"Oh, wow. That makes me feel great. You think that's going to make me feel better? How would you like to be in my situation–knowing that the longer it takes for someone to claim me, the more unwanted I am. I'm normal, you know. I want security just like everyone else. I want someone to take me because they really want to, not because they feel they have to."

"Do you think there is anything at all that can be done about it?"

"Well I hate to say this, but I'm so bitter that I'm thinking about turning in my resignation. It's just not worth the humiliation."

"But you can't do that! This job has been in your family right from the beginning. It has become one of the grandest traditions in America. You can't quit; it would be sacrilege. Please think it over."

"What do you mean think it over? It's not my fault that I'm a member of this family. Besides, I happen to be very sensitive–I can't take being jilted twice in only five years. Some of my relatives can bear with a thing like that, but I just can't."

"I understand your situation, but can't you wait just a little while longer? Maybe someone will jump up and reach out for you. Then your troubles will be over. Please wait. I know you're really bitter, but what good is quitting going to do? True, you'll be getting revenge on those who have ignored you for so long, but is a vengeance that extreme really what you want? If you quit, then what they're doing now is worthless, totally worthless. Without you their existence becomes meaningless. Give them a chance to wake up to that fact."

"I suppose you're right. I'll try to be more understanding. But it sure is difficult. I wish I had it easy like my two brothers in Pittsburgh and Cincinnati. Or I wish I had the stamina my brother, who keeps going back and forth from Chicago to Oakland, has. And just think–a couple of nights ago I thought someone really wanted me. After so many miles of traveling from Boston to New York to Detroit to Baltimore, I thought I had found a permanent home. So I packed all my bags and went to Boston. But you know what happened?"

"What?"

"Kasko left Siebert in one game, and Houk brought Lyle in the next. Please leave me alone now. I have to start packing."

UMass Administrators Defend '74 Budget

Boston-Several top UMass administrators defended the proposed "catch-up" budget for fiscal 1974 at a press conference held yesterday at the office of University President Robert C. Wood.

The budget will be submitted to the state's budget office today for review by the executive branch before being submitted to the state legislature.

The $98 million budget was accepted by the Board of Trustees at their August meeting but was sharply criticized later by members of the executive branch of the state government.

At the conference attended by several of the University's top administrators, Wood explained that major reasons for the sharp increases are the occupation of the new Columbia Point campus for UMass-Boston, new faculty and buildings at the Worcester Medical Center, and increased financial aid. He also added that the $98 million figure represented a cut of 6.6 million dollars from the requests of the three campuses, but was about one third more the current year budget.

This is the same budget which drew criticism from Secretary of Educational Affairs, Joseph M. Cronin and from Governor Francis Sargent.

Both Cronin and Sargent have pointed to recommendations of the Carnegie Commission on Higher Education for use as guidelines in making the '74 budget. (See related story, page three)

In a letter of August 31 to UMass Board of Trustees Chairman Joseph P. Healy, Cronin expressed his "deep concern and disappointment" for the proposed budget which is nearly one-third greater than the appropriation for the current year.

Cronin stated in that letter that the budget was so out of line that "to subject it to conventional budget review would be inappropriate."

At yesterday's conference Wood stated "what we want is what we had" a few years ago, a general, conventional, budget review. Wood expressed several times during the meeting that the trustees and the education departments should not have to worry about the priorities of other departments.

The conventional method Wood seeks is that all budgets from the many state departments are submitted and reviewed by the executive branch, which revises them and sends them on to the legislature for approval.

In his letter to Healy, Cronin made several suggestions for cutting the budget:

–put off the law degree program at the Amherst campus,

–use less expensive space for the President's office than is now being planned for,

–look at the economies to be "derived" from the Commonwealth's planned "open university", –question the operating costs for the medical school considering the number of students to be served there.

Cronin concluded that since the University is the leader of public higher education, it "has a special obligation to set an example in seeking ways to curtail the costs of higher education even while developing excellent programs."

One University official stated at yesterday's conference that none of Cronin's suggestions were significant when compared to the total figure of $98,000,000.

Wood explained that the budget was trimmed to its present size by the following processes: the average salary for a professor was reduced from $1,000 which will result in the recruitment of younger faculty members, and contingency funds were cut from the Boston campus.

"We took every prudent step we could see without taking away the major thrust of each campus," he said. "If you go any further in tightening the budget, the rules of the game must be changed," added Wood.

Amherst Chancellor Randolph Bromery said that the Amherst campus justified its budget to the president's office. "We feel we have responsible, sound, hard, budget. Acting Boston Chancellor Roy Hamilton said of the Boston portion, "I'm satisfied we can live with it." He pointed out that half of it is tied in with moving into new space.

Medical School Dean Lamar Soutter explained that the Med. school allows for 41 new faculty there. "We have students, we have to have the positions," he said.

Vice President for Development Ed Lashman added that the Med. school faculty increase will probably be the hardest section of the budget for the state administration to accept.

Wood explained that even with few students at Worcester at present, all the faculty positions were needed for continued accreditation. Also, it was pointed out that at the Med. school the student to full-time faulty ratio must be 1-1/2 or 2 students to each faculty member.

Soutter pointed out that in 1974, they hope to "catch-up", so that by 1978, 400 students could be accommodated at the school and its teaching hospital.

Vice President of Financial Affairs Phillips termed 1974 a completion year, one where projects planned for the past few years come into the budget in '74.

Also, Bromery pointed out that $4,000,000 was requested in the budget for financial aid to students. This is another area where the budget takes a large jump, said Lashman.

Parking Spaces Few; Summons To Be Issued

By JEANNETTE MARTINEAU

"Our major problem is the additional number of staff and students," Dave Johnson of the Campus Security Office explaned. "We built new buildings on existing parking lots, and now we have an acute shortage of parking space."

There are about 11 thousand student cars registered and "several thousand" faculty and staff cars according to Johnson, who urged car owners to "cooperate and hold movement of cars to a minimum during the daytime...in particular to and from classes."

Johnson also announced the opening of a new 400-car parking lot northwest of the physical plant, and the installation next month of parking meters throughout the university, "strategically located for students, staff, and visitors who want to get into and out of Whitmore, the infirmary, etc."

Concerning overdue parking tickets, Johnson announced that summonses would be issued shortly for all unpaid parking tickets over the past two years. "If they do not respond to the summons, Johnson warned, "the Department of Motor Vehicles will remove their drivers license."

He further warned that the Police Department in the town of Amherst will be enforcing crosswalk violations, while the University would concentrate on tow zones. "In the past we've had only sporadic enforcement of tow-zones, but this year it will be continual because of the parking problem."

"The money from the parking fines", Johnson explained, "goes into a student scholarship fund. It goes back to the student in its entirety."

He further invited the University community to make use of the campus bus system, and concluded by urging that, in the case of an emergency, drivers use "peripheral roads...and avoid congested roads in the center of campus."

N. Viets Willing To Go Again With Kissinger

PARIS (AP) - The North Vietnamese said yesterday they are willing to have another meeting with Henry A. Kissinger, if he wants it.

"If Mr. Kissinger proposes a meeting with Le Duc Tho and Xuan Thuy, they will accept," said a spokesman for the Hanoi delegation to the peace talks here. Thuy is head of the delegation. Tho, a Politburo member, is Hanoi's special adviser on the talks.

Kissinger is due here today.

It would be the U.S. presidential adviser's 17th private parley with the North Vietnamese.

The 159th session yesterday of the deadlocked peace talks was marked by a clash over the Sept. 11 declaration by the Viet Cong's provisional revolutionary government on its plan to settle the war.

U.S. Ambassador William J. Porter branded the proposal for a tripartite Saigon government "an undisguised attempt to put the Viet Cong in power in South Vietnam without an election."

Porter denounced what he called the Viet Cong preconditions for a three-component provisional government. He said these conditions would give the Viet Cong a third of the government, "plus a very considerable influence on the so-called neutral element and the Saigon element, which under your plan would be deprived of its strength."

He said the North Vietnamese army would also be left to operate "at full force in South Vietnam."

Porter said he also understood that the Viet Cong expected to name half of the neutral component which would "raise your effective participation at least to the 50 per cent level."

Viet Cong spokesman Ly Van Sau said Porter's analysis was "studded with calumny and untrue allegations from beginning to end."

He said the three segments of the proposed government of national concord under the Viet Cong plan would have "equal position and privilege and not try to eliminate one another."

He said the Viet Cong would name one segment, the present Saigon government, without President Nguyen Van Thieu, would name another. These two would then, "by accord and democracy," select representatives for the third, neutral, segment.

He said once the United States accepts the principle of a tripartite government of national concord "no difficulty would be insurmountable."

Mrs. Nguyen Thi Binh, chief Viet Cong delegate, called the American reaction "absolutely negative and lacking a constructive spirit."

She said the provisional revolutionary government was ready to agree "that neither a Communist regime nor a U.S. stooge regime shall be imposed on South Vietnam."

Peace Action Planning For Fall

By GILBERT J. SALK

The Peace Action Task Force of the United Christian Foundation is planning its Fall program.

It will co-ordinate the UMass portion of "Westover Revisited?", a 5-College program to review last year's nonviolent civil disobedience at Westover Air Force Base in Chicopee, which lasted nearly six weeks and resulted in over 1200 arrests without a single incident. Films of the action will be shown, and there will be a discussion of the present legal situation of those who were arrested.

The major focus of "Westover Revisited?," however, will be to discuss and plan a renewal of nonviolent action at the base. Those interested in working on "Westover Revisited?" should contact UCF.

The UCF Peace Action Task Force also plans to start a Culturnatives Clearinghouse. This project will gather, store, and disseminate information which will be useful to people interested in alternative life styles. It will try to locate and bring together people interested in forming communes or co-ops (food, medical, housing, or whatever), those who have skills (crafts, trade, and others) and are willing to share them with those who want to learn, people who share similar dissatisfactions, and people who are interested in starting similar kinds of programs or reforms. It will not initiate activities, but it is hoped that many new and exciting ideas will grow from it.

Because the Peace Action Task Force has a double foci–it will work on both anti-death and pro-life activities–it will be responsive to a broad range of suggested programs. Its members are considering programs such as a Community Life Festivl and a Red Cross Blood Drive at the gates of Westover, where those planning civil disobedience can first give blood to demonstrate that their opposition to the Vietnam War is a result of their humanitarian concern. (Think about giving blood and then lying down on a cot in the middle of the road.) The task force is also considering campus anti-war programs and sending teams out to area churches to talk about the war.

To get a program such as this off the ground, the task force is asking for members. For general information, those interested can come to the UCF Coffee Hour in 319 Hampshire House on Monday, Sept. 18, between 2-4 p.m., or call 545-2789. The first meeting of the UCF Peace Action Task Force will be Thursday, Sept. 21, at 7 p.m., in 908 Campus Center.

IRA Captured Chieftain

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) - British troops captured a guerrilla chieftain Thursday and terrorists bombed a north Belfast hotel, killing at least one person and injuring 47 in a resurgence of violence in Northern Ireland.

The guerrillas' bomb severely damaged the Imperial Hotel, and the army said a man believed to be driving by in a car when the bomb exploded was killed in the blast.

A spokesman said the big bomb was planted in a car outside the hotel. The guerrillas gave no warning, but a passerby spotted smoke trickling from the auto in time to give a brief warning.

The death, the first from a guerrilla bomb in two weeks, raised Northern Ireland's three-year fatality toll to 557-344 this year alone.

The blast climaxed a day of shooting and bombing in which a t least three British soldiers were wounded. Troops fought a series of sharp gunfights with guerrillas in the city and there were at least eight bomb explosions.

Arab Guns Soviet Made

MUNICH, Germany (AP) - Arab terrorists who attacked Israeli athletes at the Olympics were armed with Soviet-made AK47 automatic weapons and Kalaschnikov cartridges, Munich justice officials said Thursday.

The origin of hand grenades carried by the eight guerrillas is still under investigation, reported Peter Metzger, spokesman of the Bavarian state court.

Two Israelis were slain by bursts from automatic weapons when the terrorists invaded their Olympic Village residence Sept. 5 and took nine other male hostages in a vain attempt to force the release of 200 Palestinian commandos jailed in Israel.

Ed. School Calmer; MarathonOn

By DON BISHOP

Controversies at the School of Education, which seemed so pronounced at the end of last semester, have apparently become less vocal, amidst a continuing process of change in the governing structure of the school.

This was the impression given at a faculty meeting held at the school yesterday afternoon. The major item coming out of the meeting was a decision to hold a marathon at the School this fall, beginning the week of November 13th. At the same time, the group of about 40 faculty and School administrators voted favorably on a motion to hold the Spring Marathon April 9-13th.

Last spring's marathon was cancelled in the wake of a large scale protest made by third world peoples, largely from the Third World Alliance. Principal among the charges made by the Alliance was the School's decision to not make "institutional racism" the focus of the Marathon.

However, another prominent issue raised by the Alliance and by many faculty and students at the School was that of the School of Ed's governance system headed by Dean Dwight Allen. As a result of the criticism made of his governing power as Dean, Allen agreed to a revising of the School's governance system, so as to provide for more faculty and student input into the decision making process.

A governance committee was set up over the summer and it is tentatively scheduled to make it's report somewhere around the Nov. 1st, according to remarks made at yesterday's meeting.

Another school of Ed. faculty meeting has been scheduled for the Sept. 27, at which time those attending will be brought up to date on the committee's progress.

Among the other business to be discussed at that time will be whether or not the School will retain a personel committee, and if so in what form. A number of proposals are expected to be made for personnel committee revision.

It was decided at yesterday's meeting that only faculty will be allowed to vote at future faculty meetings although the meetings will be open to the university community.

Approximately 15 minutes were spent discussing the motion to hold the fall and spring marathons for this academic year. Dean Allen presented the motion, stating that the marathons had in his opinion valuably served both the school and the local community in the past.

No real opposition to the marathon proposal was voiced although the original proposal was amended, to push back the start of the marathon from the 3rd of November to the 13th. One faculty member suggested that the question of holding either marathon be put to the campus community to see whether some of the issues present last spring are still in evidence. This motion was never voted on.

Carnegie Report May Be Decisive

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

The recent recommendations of the Carnegie Commission on Higher Education are expected to play a decisive role in the continued budget battle of state money for public higher education in Massachusetts.

Gov. Francis W. Sargent has indicated that his education and budget chiefs will be using the recommendations as major criteria in evaluating the UMass budget.

The UMass Board of Trustees approved two weeks ago a record $98 million budget request after fellow trustee Sargent urged them to exercise utmost care in reviewing their request and making it reflect economies.

The recommendations issued in June under the title, "The More Effective Use of Resources," call for a 20 per cent reduction in the nation's higher education costs over the next decade.

The budget request is for a 37 per cent increase over the present fiscal budget of $72.6 million.

The commission emphasized accelerated and integrated programs, a reduction in the number of "reluctant attenders" and a general push for efficiency in administration and wiser use of personnel.

"The central thrust of this report is that the total institutional expenditures of higher education must be, should be, and can be reduced by nearly $10 billion per year (in 1970 dollars) by 1980 as compared with the costs which would be incurred if the trends of the 1960s were to be continued; that expenditures should be held to a level of around $41.5 billion as against $51 billion per year. This is approximately a 20 per cent reduction," the commission stated.

Other recommendations made by the commission include:

—The three-year undergraduate degree.

—The incorporation of the first year of college into the last year of high school, or vice versa.

—Increased cooperation and sharing of facilities by public and private institutions of higher education.

—The year round use of facilities.

—The discontinuation of low-yield, high cost doctoral programs.

Change magazine, the influential higher educational Journal, has endorsed the commission's recommendations, but feels the panel was to conservative in its goals.

"The commission showed considerable political courage in advocating a dramatic lowering of future expectations for higher education, and we applaud it for both its courage and its wisdom in stating a prescriptive case for defusing the bomb," Change said in an editorial in its September issue.

However, the magazine said, "Even this 20 per cent reduction of overall national expectations would appear too conservative in terms of what may be best for the country and for higher education as well.

"Considering the other American social imperatives in this crucial decade, we would have preferred a still lower proposal - of annual 1980 expenditures (in real 1970 dollars) of $37 billion (as compared with the commission's recommended $41.5 billion and a straight-line trend projection of $51 billion.)"

Tackeff To Challenge Senate

By ROBERT L. SCHEIER

Recently resigned student senator Matt Tackeff says he will challenge a Student Senate vote guaranteeing 15 seats to members of the UMass Third World community.

Tackeff, who resigned following the vote Wednesday night, said the challenge would probably come through the university judiciary. He says the reapportionment is unconstitutional because it created a consistuency "on a racial basis."

Under the plan, New Africa House, the black cultural center on campus, would be declared a residential area.

The plan is designed to increase minority participation in the senate and will be reviewed next year.

According to Senate Speaker John Hogan, the bill's sponsor, the judiciary may not be able to consider the challenge until several vacancies on the judiciary are filled.

According to Hogan, these vacancies must be filled by a commission consisting of incumbent justices, and members of the Student Senate.

Hogan said he had no idea of how the challenge would fare at the hands of the judiciary, since he was not familiar with them.

He said if the challenge was brought within the university, the senate would be representing by the Student Attorney-General, Bert Emmons.

If the case was tried outside UMass, Hogan said, the senate would be defended by Student Senate attorney Richard M. Howland.

The speaker also said the apportionment was "in line with both the senate's constitution and the U.S. constitution." He said the 15 senators would be elected to serve "Third World interests", and could be of any race.

According to Tackeff, "this doesn't alter the fact of the creation of a constituency along racial lines."

He said that if ' is challenge failed in the student judiciary, the amount of support he received would determine how much further he would take his challenge.

Tackeff said three black students had congratulated him on his stand, including a former student senator. He said one of the students had called the senate action "patronizing."

Tackeff said if the apportionment of the senate was overturned and replaced, then he "might consider running again."

Currently, student senate elections for the 1972-73 year are scheduled for September 26.

U.S.-Soviet Trade Accord Seen Likely

WASHINGTON (AP) — Word came from Washington and Moscow yesterday that trade accords between the two countries and deals that could total billions of dollars may be signed in the next few weeks.

The White House and the Kremlin put out a joint statement giving an optimistic report on talks held in the Soviet capital this week between Soviet officials and Henry A. Kissinger, President Nixon's assistant for national security affairs.

"Significant progress was made on several issues of principle in commercial relations between the two countries," the document said. It went on to talk about possible signing of a comprehensive trade agreement "in the near future."

In Moscow, President Armand Hammer of Occidental Petroleum Corp., said Premier Alexei N. Kosygin had given his blessing to a series of commercial deals including development of Occidental of a permanent U.S. trade center in Moscow that could serve as headquarters there for 400 American firms. Hammer added that some details still need be ironed out and estimated these could be worth several billion dollars.

Kissinger arrived in Moscow on Sunday and, before leaving early Thursday, conferred at length with Communist Party Chief Leonid I. Brezhnev, Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko and others.

The joint Moscow-Washington statement said "special attention was given to the status of commercial relations" during the Kissinger conferences.

In addition to a comprehensive trade agreement, the two Cold War adversaries are working on a wartime agreement that would permit Soviet merchant ships to traffic in American ports and vice versa.

Not mentioned in the statement was Vietnam, but White House press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler told newsmen, "We're not hesitant in mentioning to you that it was discussed...and not just in passing."

He declined to elaborate.

Kissinger was in London Thursday for meetings with Prime Minister Edward Heath and will confer in Paris Friday with French President Georges Pompidou before returning to Washington Friday night.

House-Senate Conferees Agree On Revenue Bill

WASHINGTON (AP) - House and Senate conferees agreed Thursday night on a formula for sharing federal revenues with states and local governments.

While some aspects of the $30 billion, five-year revenue-sharing program still were under discussion, the basic agreement apparently clears the way for quick enactment of the legislation and distribution of the first $5.3 billion annual installment.

The complicated mathematical formula gives most states close to the highest amount they would have received under either the House or Senate version of the legislation.

The Senate and House formulas for sharing revenues differed in several respects, notably in the weight the House gave to a state's own income tax effort. As a result 17 large industrial states would have received less under the Senate formula while 33 smaller states would have received more.

Under the compromise agreement, each state's share would be figured on the basis of the formula that would provide the most money. However, to avoid raising the total above the $5.3 billion earmarked for the first year, all shares so computed would be reduced by about 9.1 per cent. In successive years there would be no such reduction.

The Senate also wrote into the bill a limitation intended to curb the soaring cost of social services for which the government provides three-for-one matching with state funds.

The limitation was set at $1.6 billion a year, of which $600 million could be used only for day care for children and family planning.

The conference substituted a $2.5-billion limitation, weighted for these two programs and also for care of retarded persons, including children.

For the distribution of funds among the cities and other governmental units within each state, the conferees accepted the Senate provisions which, by comparison with those of the House, favor central cities and rural areas over suburbs.

Remaining to be settled was the question of whether any federal strings should be attached to the shared revenues. The House provided broad categories within which they must be spent. The Senate deleted this requirement.

It appeared likely, however, that the conference would agree on this and other outstanding issues Friday, clearing the way for final legislative action before Oct. 1 and distribution of at least half the initial $5.3 billion during October.

Butz Hits Democratic Charges

WASHINGTON (AP) - Agriculture Secretary Earl L. Butz told Congress Thursday big U.S. grain sales to the Soviet Union have helped everyone but if Sen. George McGovern persists in "innuendoes, mistatements, falsehoods and haranguing," further business in Moscow will be endangered.

Further, Butz said at a House subcommittee hearing, there is no truth to accusations by McGovern that he-Butz-and other administration officials failed to pass along promptly to the public information on the Soviet transactions.

Meanwhile, Rep. Benjamin Rosenthal, D-N.Y., announced he will ask Government Accounting Office investigators to make "a more comprehensive search" for campaign contributions to the Republicans by big grain companies.

Rosenthal said, "powerful grain traders reaped a harvest of profit from early inside information" on the U.S.-Soviet grain dealings.

Butz discounted such accusations as "wild, unsubstantiated and inaccurate" attempts to make a political circus out of what he called a historic event.

Butz's comments were at the opening of a hearing called by Rep. Graham Purcell, D-Tex., to look into the government's role in the grain sales to the Soviet Union. Those are expected to be worth about $1 billion and to include 400 million bushels of U.S. wheat.

"The partisan attacks on this historic sale to Russia, and the poor judgement displayed, are jeopardizing the present and future sale of American farm products, and all commercial products, to the Soviet Union," Butz said.

Also on Thursday, the Agriculture Department officially confirmed earlier reports that U.S. wheat has been sold to mainland China. The sales so far amount to about 15 million bushels, officials said.

The Export Marketing Service in USDA told a reporter it could not, under the regulations, identify the company involved or whether more than one firm had made applications for export subsidies to China.

Purcell was concerned about wheat farmers in early harvest areas of Texas, Oklahoma and Kansas who sold their wheat in July for $1.32 per bushel before the impact of the Soviet purchases drove prices up to as much as $1.75 this month.

One of McGovern's contentions is that Butz and other administration officials participated with big export companies in a "conspiracy of silence" by not letting farmers know earlier that the Russians might buy more grain and that prices might go up sharply.

Federal subsidies to wheat farmers are based partly on market prices during a five-month period beginning July 1. Growers who sold their wheat in late June and early July for less money would not have full benefits.

Senate Passes Interim SALT Pact

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate approved the U.S.-Soviet interim agreement on offensive arms limitation Thursday after adopting an amendment calling for equality in long-range weapons in any future agreement.

Final passage of the five-year agreement was by an 88 to 2 vote. The Senate previously accepted 56-35 the controversial amendment by Sen. Harry M. Jackson, D-Wash., which had held up Senate action for more than a month.

The Jackson amendment, backed by the Nixon administration, calls upon the President to seek equality in "levels of intercontinental strategic forces" in negotiations for a permanent arms limitation treaty.

The amendment will be subject to a Senate-House conference before the resolution can go to the White House.

Voting against the full agreement were Sens. James B. Allen, D-Ala., and Ernest F. Hollings, D-SC.

The Senate rejected several efforts to modify the language of the Jackson amendment to provide for future negotiations on the basis of "overall equality".

The Senate first turned down 48-37 a substitute offered by Chairman J.W. Fulbright, D-Ark., and other members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee calling for continued negotiations with the Soviet Union for arms limitations on the basis of "overall equality, parity and sufficiency, taking into account all relevant qualitative and quantitative factors."

An amendment by Sen. Stuart Symington, D-Mo., to eliminate the word "inter-continental" from the Jackson amendment was defeated 51-38.

The stalemate was broken by Senate adoption of a debate-limiting cloture motion by a 76-15 vote, 15 more than the required two-thirds margin.

The agreement was signed in Moscow May 26 by President Nixon, along with a treaty limiting ABM defensive weapons in both countries. The treaty was ratified 88 to 2 by the Senate Aug. 3.

TOYKO (AP) - Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka said on Thursday Japan's relations with the United States "remain most fundamental and important" and will not be changed by developments with China and the Soviet Union.

He made the remarks as a special envoy departed for Peking to work out the program for Tanaka's visit to China and his talks with Premier Chou En-lai.

House Rejects Cutoff Of Vietnam War Funds

WASHINGTON (AP) — A proposed cutoff of money for U.S. Indochina-war operations in four months was quickly and decisively rejected by the House yesterday after 10 minutes of debate.

The proposed amendment to the $74.6-million defense appropriations bill was turned down 208 to 160. It would have cut off all except U.S. withdrawal money in four months, provided Hanoi released American prisoners and gave an accounting of Americans missing in its territory by then.

The $74.6 billion appropriation for the fiscal year starting last July 1, the biggest defense bill since World War II, was approved 322 to 40 and sent to the Senate.

Acting on another amendment, the House overrode its Appropriations Committee and voted to authorize the military to eliminate KP for all but recruits and men in the field.

Rejection of the end-the-war measure came after F. Edward Hebert, D-La., chairman of the Armed Forces Committee, said the House has already taken its stand on antiwar amendments and there was little left to argue about.

Rep. Joseph P. Addabbo, D-N.Y., author of the amendment, said: "We have stayed too long and paid too great a price. We have wanted to play doctor to the world and have instead suffered infection."

"It is time I believe," Addabbo said, "to come home and heal our own wounds."

Speaker Carl Albert refused to take sides on the Addabbo amendment, saying, "I'm for ending the war but I'm worried about the honor of the United States.

"The honor of the United States is not going to be hurt if we do not go ahead and win this war," he told newsmen, "unless what we do is disgraceful or irresponsible."

Besides rejecting the end-the-war move, the House rejected efforts to chop out $445 million for the advanced B-1 bomber and $10 million for tougher nuclear warheads.

The KP amendment-criticized as coddling GIs and defended as helping attract an all-volunteer military-was proposed by Rep. Robert L.F. Sikes, D-Fla.

Sikes emphasized that recruits and GIs in the field would still have to do chores. He said the services will have to find money for hiring civilians to take over KP chores out of their regular money allotments without special funding from Congress.

"The next thing you know we're going to have to give them breakfast in bed," complained Rep. William E. Minshall, R-Ohio, "and everything that goes with it."

Rep. Clarence Long, D-Md., said the taxpayers in his district have to spend some of their time on such menial chores as mowing the lawn and hanging out the wash. He said they aren't going like paying more taxes to let GIs get out of the clean-up chores.

But Rep. Charles S. Gubser, R-Calif., called "KP and the indignity" it imposes an impediment to President Nixon's goal for achieving an all-volunteer military next June 30. He said if it is continued Congress may have to extend the draft next year for lack of sufficient volunteers.

Chairman George H. Mahon, D-Tex., of the House Appropriations Committee, said making KP a civilian duty would cost the services $275 million a year. Sike said the services told him it would cost $125 million a year.

The House vote overrode its Appropriation's Committee, which had called KP and other chores "wholesome and character building" for GIs and recommended termination by next April 30 of the programs to turn the chores over to civilians.

Hughes Charges Air Strike Lies

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Harold Hughes, D-Iowa, said yesterday the 7th Air Force under Gen. John D. Lavelle was pre-planning strikes against North Vietnam and falsifying the strike reports to justify them.

Also Sgt. Lonnie Franks told a Senate inquiry that two sets of reports were made for each strike.

One report was false and had wide circulation, Franks said.

The second report was true, Franks said, and, the best he could tell from his intelligence post at Urdorn, Thailand, those reports of some 28 raids went to "individuals" only at 7th Air Force headquarters.

The only clue someone above Lavelle may have had something was wrong, by reading the false reports, was that "the number of missions increased fantastically," Franks told newsmen.

Hughes, who has taken part in the three-day closed door probe by the Armed Service Committee, told newsmen "there were preplanned strikes and falsification of reports..."

By falsifying, the reports would read that the pilots had been fired upon, Hughes said, when they had not been. Ground fire, under air war rules, is reason to attack a wide range of targets.

Franks, from Cedar Rapids, Iowa, wrote a letter to Hughes. This led to an Air Force investigation and the removal of Lavelle from his command.

"There was something very wrong, I wanted to try to correct it...It's a very bad thing if you can't trust your reports," Franks said.

Committee chairman John Stennis, D-Miss., said he didn't want to encourage men going outside the chain of command, but "someone had to do it, as I see it...This young man is sincere, troubled, and he did a practical thing."

Air Force Chief of Staff Gen. John D. Ryan, set to testify next week, has said Lavelle's relief from command was hushed up to spare the general personal problems.

Abrams' nomination as the next Army Chief of Staff has been held up pending this investigation.

On Wednesday he was quoted as telling senators he was unaware of the exact nature of the raids ordered by Lavelle.

Several senators commented that Lavelle, who now insists he did not disobey orders or guidance, stretched the rules.

"He was wrong," Sen. Peter Dominick, R-Colo., said.

More witnesses, including Air Force staff officers and pilots were scheduled into next week.

Fight Continues For Quang Tri City

SAIGON (AP) — Bunker-to-Bunker fighting ground on for a third day inside Quang Tri Citadel yesterday. Government marines were reported making scant progress in their battle to seize the walled fortress from its North Vietnamese captors.

Quang Tri Province fell to the North Vietnamese May 1 and the government launched a concerted 20,000-man drive on June 28 to get it back. A month later South Vietnamese paratroopers were pulled out after taking heavy losses in an abortive attempt to storm the Citadel, and marines took over the job.

After six weeks of slow and painful search operations under continuous enemy artillery bombardment, the marines closed on the Citadel from three sides.

Associated Press correspondent Holger Jensen reported that a compnay of marines, perhaps 200 men, was fighting savagely to expand a two-acre toehold in the southeastern corner of the 50-acre, 19th century Citadel at the heart of the rubble that was Quang Tri City.

There are still no government troops on the western side, where the North Vietnamese maintained their main supply route to the fortress. A river that flows past just west of the Citadel is swollen by heavy rains, and officers believe it has cut the enemy supply line.

The Viet Cong radio didn't mention the battle for the Citadel in its broadcast Thursday night.

McGovern, Kennedy Get Wild Welcome

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — A sudden downpour cut short a George McGovern speech here Thursday but not before the Democratic presidential nominee got another screaming ovation in the series of big rallies co-hosted this week by Sen. Edward M Kennedy.

Thousands of spectators, including college students bused in for the occasion cheered McGovern at a rally on the steps of the New York State Capitol as he denounced "special interests" and the Watergate bugging affair.

But as gray clouds turned to rain, McGovern dismissed the throng of several thousand with: "Before we all drown, let's resolve to go out and win this electin."

From Albany, McGovern planned to fly to New York City for a dinner with some 150 large contributors to his under-financed and underdog presidential campaign. Then he was to go to Waterbury, Conn., for a rally Thursday night.

McGovern told reporters before leaving Albany that his campaign is "going from day to day" as far as money is concerned.

"We don't have any reserves at the present time," McGovern said. "We're meeting our bills and I think we're going to be all right but we don't have any surplus.

"I don't feel alarmed about it I just feel concerned," he added.

But a problem with the microphone system delayed McGovern's speech and prompted a crack about the incident in which five men were arrested, allegedly while attempting to bug the Democratic Party's headquarters.

"We don't have as many electric experts with us as President Nixon does." McGovern said. And he drew a good response when he asked "Is it possible that Watergate may be Waterloo for Mr. Nixon?"

Kennedy asked the people of Albany to make a "sacrifice" by voting for McGovern. He said that "if you vote for Richard Nixon, he'll take Nelson Rockefeller out of Albany with him to Washington," a reference to rumors the New York governor will join the Cabinet if Nixon is re-elected.

"Put up with Nelson for two more and vote for George McGovern on Nov. 7," Kennedy pleaded.

Kennedy was introduced by Albany mayor Erastus Corning who led the slate of organization delegates who handed the McGovern forces one of their few setbacks in the primary last June.

Also on hand were former New York Mayor Robert F. Wagner, chairman of the New York state McGovern campaign, and the three Democratic candidates in the only major statewide contest for the Court of Appeals.

In his haste to finish as the rain started, McGovern only touched on a statement issued earlier alleging that the Republicans had made some "intriguing financial deals." He said they included the deposit of $25,000 and $89,000 into the Florida bank account of Bernard Barker, one of those arrested in the Watergate incident.

Campaign '72

Dem. Campaign Director Sued

WASHINGTON (AP) - George McGovern drew more cheering crowds Thursday at the windup of a three-day string of large and lusty rallies, but in Washington his national campaign director was sued for $5 million.

Capitol police estimated the crowd on the steps of the New York statehouse at upwards of 7,000. The group, stuffed with college students bused in from nearby campuses, cheered to the point of drowning out Sen. Edward Kennedy as he introduced the Democratic presidential nominee.

It was typical of recent McGovern rallies, with the crowd-swelling aid of Kennedy, in a string that began in Minneapolis Tuesday night and concluded in Waterbury, Conn., Thursday night.

McGovern declared his spirits were lifted by the size and demonstration of the crowds the two have drawn and said "we're on the upswing."

Meanwhile, former Commerce Secretary Maurice Stans filed a $5-million suit against Lawrence F. O'Brien, former Democratic national chairman and now national campaign director for McGovern, alleging that O'Brien "falsely and maliciously" accused Stans of criminal acts.

The suit was the latest in a string of legal actions between the two parties stemming from the Watergate bugging incident in which five men, one of them chief of security for the Nixon campaign, were caught in the Democratic headquarters with electronic bugging devices.

O'Brien sued the five arrested men and Republican officials for $1 million in connection with the break-in. Eventually all but the five were dropped from the suit.

Earlier this week O'Brien filed new papers seeking to ad Stans and other campaign officials as defendants, but the court rejected the papers on technical grounds.

Wednesday the Nixon campaign committee and its financial subsidiary, headed by Stans, filed a $2.5-million suit accusing O'Brien of abusing the judicial process.

The latest action is a personal suit by Stans against O'Brien seeking $2 million compensation and $3 million in punitive damages.

"I have brought this action not only to defend my reputation against a vicious and wholly unfounded attack, but to serve notice on Mr. O'Brien and his agents that so long as they persist in the low road of smear and character assassination, they will be held strictly accountable not only to the American people but before the law," Stans said.

From Albany, McGovern went to New York City for a dinner with some 150 large campaign contributors. Later he had a rally in Waterbury.

Sargent Shriver, McGovern's vice-presidential running-mate, told students at the Catholic Loras College in Dubuque, Iowa, that he and McGovern, if elected, would find a "constitutional method" to give tax relief to parents sending children to parochial schools.

Shriver also said he and McGovern oppose abortion on demand but believe the issue should be left to the states and not become a federal concern.

Another campaign issue moved to Capitol Hill Thursday as Agriculture Secretary Earl L. Butz told Congress that McGovern campaign allegations about the Russian wheat deal could endanger further business with Moscow.

McGovern has accused the Nixon administration of passing along information on the wheat sales to big grain companies before it was made public. He said it enabled them to buy up grain cheaply from farmers who didn't know a new market was opening up.

Butz told a House subcommittee hearing there is no truth to the McGovern charges and accused McGovern of "innuendoes, misstatements, falsehoods and haranguing."

But Rep. Benjamin Rosenthal, D-N.Y., said anew that "powerful grain traders reaped a harvest of profit from early inside information" on the U.S.-Soviet grain dealings.

Rosenthal announced he would ask the Government Accounting Office to make "a more comprehensive search" for campaign contributions to the Republicans by big grain companies.

On another political front Thursday, President Joseph A. Beirne of the Communications Workers union said labor support for McGovern is growing despite the split between top labor officials.

"It's still the gut issues that determine how working people will vote," Beirne told a National Press Club luncheon.

One Watergate Suspect Charged In Florida

Gerstein said Bernard L. Barker, 55, a real estate broker nabbed by police last June 17 inside Washington's Watergate complex, would be surrendered by his attorney Friday morning.

"We expect to make every effort to bring this case to trial before the November presidential election," Gerstein said. "I think it is in the public interest for the facts to come out and not be delayed and swept under the rug."

The charge, false and fraudulent use of a notary public seal, is a felony under Florida law punishable by a prison term up to five years upon conviction.

The $25,000 check was deposited by Barker in his Miami bank account last April 20.

Gerstein said the testimony indicated there may have been a second break-in at the Democratic headquarters.

Reaction Sharp To Ruling

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Editor

From the steps of St. Patrick's Cathedral to the Catholic Ladies Aid Society in San Franciso, Pope Paul's denial of a formal role in the ministry for females sparked sharp argument among Roman Catholic women in the United States.

Most women were predictably critical, although a few countered that the tradition of the Church should be upheld.

The pontiff issued a decree Thursday saying that although women may continue to perform some altar services, they may not be formally installed "in the ministries of lector and acolyte."

Two Brooklyn, N.Y., housewives, interviewed as they left St. Patrick's on Fifth Avenue, got into their own argument over the issue.

"Where would the Church-or indeed the whole world-be without women?" asked Mary Freehold.

"Who are you to question His Holiness?" countered Patricia Nelson.

"The Church must begin to modernize," returned Mrs. Freehold.

"There's too much modernization in this country — already," said Mrs. Nelson.

"Let's leave some things alone."

Mrs. Herbert A. Wilson, 79, a leader of the San Francisco Catholic Ladies Aid Society, said, "I don't believe that women should have a formal role in the ministry. I personally feel that women should spend more time at home. Then we would have fewer difficulties."

Kathy Riley, 25, a Chicago career woman, said the decree "just shows how far they are behind the times. I think the Church is continuing to dig its own grave. All the angry young men have left the Church and now the angry young women will be leaving."

"I think it's good," she said of the ruling. "Tradition should be preserved. Women shouldn't leave the Church because of it unless they're only concerned with putting on a show."

Margaret Valient, secretary of the 85,000-member Council of Catholic Women of the archdiocese of northern Colorado, said she personally agreed with the Pope's decree, but "I think a lot of our women feel differently."

Pope Bars Women From Church Roles

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope Paul VI, spurning appeals from cardinals and feminist groups alike, has barred women from even the smallest formal role in the ministry of the Roman Catholic Church.

The Pope ruled Thursday that women could continue to read the Bible during Mass and perform some altar services. But he made clear they could never claim it as a right for themselves.

The decree dashed the hopes of thousands of women and nuns who thought the Church would not deny official recognition to the help they have been giving priests in religious services for years.

"In accordance with the venerable tradition of the Church," the decree said, "installation in the ministries of lector and acolyte is reserved to men."

This barred women from receiving a formal investiture by a bishop for what they have been doing for years. They can go on doing it as a concession, depending on the priest locally in charge.

By contrast, the decree extended the rights of Catholic men. The Pope allowed them to become lectors and acolytes while preserving their lay state–that is, without becoming clergymen bound to obedience to the bishops.

The decree will undoubtedly bring controversy.

Spearheaded by Canada's George Cardinal Flahiff of Winnipeg, many bishops in the 1971 synod here appealed to the Pope to allow women to become ministers for the sake of justice and to help make up for the lack of priests.

A Vatican official said Pope Paul sought the advice of bishops around the world before issuing the decree. The official, the Rev. Paolo Dezza, said several episcopal conferences were in favor of having women ministers as lectors and acolytes.

Ali-Frazier Rematch Planned For November

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A heavyweight rematch between champion Joe Frazier and Muhammad Ali is hopeful for mid-November and will definitely be at the Forum promoter Don Fraser said Thursday.

Fraser, who met last week in New Orleans with Frazier's manager, Yancy Durham, said:

The fight has not been definitely set. It's all up to Durham. He's the key guy.

We're hopeful. Negotiations had been dead for awhile but we got closer. The fight is much closer to being consumated but it is not consumated. I haven't heard back from Durham."

Fraser said Durham, who had wanted the fight in Houston's Astrodome instead of Jack Kent Cooke's Forum in suburban Inglewood, has compromised and will accept the Forum as the site.

Bob Arum, attorney and chief negotiator for Ali, also said in New York, "I think the real hangup is Frazier. He knows he's going to lose and he's ducking the fight. He and Durham want to hold the title as long as possible by fighting nobodies."

Fraser said Durham also indicated willingness to compromise on the purses for the rematch. Both fighters now would enter the ring for guarantees of abour $3 million Cooke's promoter said.

Sound Politics

In its first meeting of the year last Wednesday night, the Student Senate passed a bill reapportioning the Senate to guarantee Third World students on campus 15 seats out of approximately 107 in the elections to be held at the end of the month. Passage of the bill sparked a wave of controversy, highlighted by the resignation of Senator Matt Tackeff of Field House on the grounds that the reapportionment was unconstitutional.

The Collegian supports the bill. As Student Government President Larry Ladd pointed out in debating the bill, the Supreme Court didn't wait for people to desegregate schools on their own. The Senate shouldn't wait either. It is impossible for Third World students to have proper representation on this campus with the Senate set up the way it was. The reason for this is that Third World students are in the position where they are always a voting minority, owing to the fact that they are scattered in small groups all over the campus.

Tackeff is planning possible legal action against the bill, starting with the Student Judiciary, and possibly going through higher channels. He told the Collegian yesterday that his actions have been applauded by a number of Third World students, some of them calling the Senate's action "patronizing".

The vote taken Wednesday night is by agreement binding for only one year, at which time it will be reviewed. It was done in this manner in the hope that Third World students will be able to build up a base of power in campus politics. We hope that the year is a constructive, building year for all concerned.

Carnegie And The Crunch

The Carnegie Commission on Higher Education released certain recommendations last June concerning the better use of resources for teaching. These guidelines, which were intended for the use of long term planners and decision-makers, will be used by the governor's staff to show that the UMass budget proposal for fiscal 1974 is out of line with the realities of state financing.

This is causing additional trouble for those in the UMass administration who are responsible for obtaining funds for University functions from the state government.

Officials from President Robert Wood's office have enough trouble trying to explain the causes behind the budget to state officials without having to worry about the elimination of adverse public opinion caused by a vote-hungry governor.

So far, the governor's office has hinted that much of the University's programs are too extensive and that they duplicate too many of the programs in the state's private schools.

Therefore, not only will the administration have to persuade the governor's staff of the proper funding for UMass, they will have to explain to the public why the University needs the vast amount of money it is requesting. This job should be for the legislator who votes for the University budget.

Some innovations which were thought of several years ago will come into being during the fiscal 1974 year. These projects include a new campus for UMass-Boston, the continuing enlargement of the medical school in Worcester, a law center for the Amherst campus, and occupation of the Fine Arts Center at UMass-Amherst.

If too much money is cut out of the budget by the executive branch, then many of these plans will be deferred, but not abandoned. One, then, could visualize a Medical Science Building in Worcester completed but not occupied because money would be deferred for several years.

Lamar Soutter, Dean of the Medical School put it this way: if the state continues to cut its requests as it did last year as it is threatening to do this year, then the Med. school will take 32 years to fully open, and he will be 95 years old when it does.

If, on the other hand, the University budget requests remain relatively unscathed for the next few years, the Med school would be fully operational by 1978, Soutter said. That is, a fully staffed teaching hospital with 400 students.

Soutter stated yesterday that under the current budget, there will be no money for fuel when a portion of the Medical Science Building is ready for occupancy this January. This was caused by the standstill budget forced upon the University for the current year.

This cannot be allowed to happen two consecutive years.

President Wood refuted the concept of using Carnegie Commission recommendations (see page three) as guidelines for evaluating the 1974 budget. The report "does not speak to the immediate budget," it speaks to both public and private institutions at the same time, and it does not address itself to Massachusetts since we're not in the lowest quartial of per capita contribution to public higher education."

The trustees have been presented to the public as being informed about recent innovations in education. Trustees are certainly not uninformed, especially concerning the Carnegie Commission report. Much time was spent discussing it during their June meeting.

The trustees will use those parts of the Carnegie recommendations which they feel apply to the University. However, parts of the recommendations really do nothing to save money for the school.

For example, if a three year degree program were to be instituted and if this included implementation of year round attendance, costs would not necessarily go down, according to Ed Lashman, UMass Vice President for Development.

The same amount of teaching hours would be used, he indicated, so it would merely be a matter of over how long a period to allocate those hours, nine months each year or twelve months. What is true, however, in a program like this, more students would be able to pass through the system.

The administration feels that its programs should be aimed towards accessability to higher education for a larger segment of the population. They also claim to be committed to offering only high quality education. Wood admitted that if the proposed budget is cut back from $98 million down to near this year's $72 million, higher education won't die. "We do not claim that higher education can't survive," he said.

However, if students feel that they aren't getting quality education now, if students feel that classes are overcrowded, if students feel support material such as audio-visual aids are lacking, they should know that any severe cutbacks in the proposed 1974 budget will only result in making matters worse.

The University is being watched closely by the rest of the state college system. One unnameable source claims that the state colleges are awaiting reaction to the UMass requests before making their own.

Support for more money for higher education must start from within the walls of UMass. When the entire state college system is receiving its share of funds, then community colleges will be able to realize their goal of vocational training, rather than serving only as the first two years of liberal arts school. State colleges will be able to develop more fully into individual four year schools and shed forever the teacher college image, too.

So, we see that if the state commits itself to public higher education for all, it must start by backing the University of Massachusetts plans. Then not only can the specific goals of the University be met, but also the long range goals of our well run state college system could be achieved, too.

The Season Has Begun

WASHINGTON–The football seson has officially begun, and in living rooms all over the nation friends are gathering to watch these exciting contests on TV.

There is a certain one-upmanship in football TV watching that has become part of the game.

If you are the host, it goes something like this.

Bradlee comes in and sits down. "What's wrong with your color?"

"It looks fine to me," you say.

"You have too much green. The players all look sick." Bradlee goes over and adjusts the color knobs. "There," he says, "that's better."

Two minutes later Dalinsky arrives. "Why is the grass so red?" he asks.

Bradlee replies, "The grass is too green when the players are too green."

"I'll fix it," Dalinsky says. He gets up and twists a dial.

"It's fine now," you say, having missed the first seven plays.

Geyelin arrives and asks, "Do you still have that old TV?"

"It's not old," you protest. "I bought it two years ago."

"Where's your fine tuner?" Geyelin asks as he goes up to the set.

"It's the third button down."

Geyelin twists the fine tuner. The color comes in perfect, but he's lost the sound.

"Will you get the sound back?" Califano yells.

"If I get the sound back, everything will look yellow," Geyelin says.

"It wasn't yellow until you started fooling with it," you say. "Will you sit down so we can watch the game."

Califano asks, "Do you have an aerial on the set?"

"Of course I've got an aerial on the set."

"Outdoors or indoors?"

"Outdoors, dammit. What kind of question is that?"

"You should be able to get Channel 7 better than that," Califano says. "Maybe there are leaves clogged in it."

"There are no leaves clogged in it," you say angrily. "I had a perfect picture before you guys came in."

"Why don't we go to my house?" Dalinsky suggests. "I have no trouble getting Channel 7."

"I don't have any trouble either," you shout.

"Then why is Howard Cosell's face chartreuse?" Geyelin asks.

Bradlee gets up and starts fiddling with the dials. The picture goes to black and white.

Everyone starts yelling at once.

Dalinsky gets up, stops the vertical, but now the players are elongated and look 12 feet high.

"This sure is a crazy set," Califano mutters as he tries to get the horizontal back.

"Everyone sit down," you scream. "The next person who touches the set leaves the house."

You get up and adjust the knobs exactly as they were before anyone arrived. It's a perfect picture. You sit back and suddenly you hear Frank Gifford's voice. "And that's the end of the exciting first half. Now stay tuned to a wonderful half-time show, right after this message."

"I Don't Like The Sound Of That Transmission"

BY ED BRYANT

These days people are getting in touch with their own bodies. All kinds of people are jogging and eating organic, as their desire grows to be kind to the bodies that carry them around. One part of their bodies, however, is almost always ignored. The automobile, which is after all only an extension of the body, is parked outside, and with the exception of the transmission who talks to her owner on the radio, no one seems to care. So people abuse their cars, until they have to be taken to high-priced specialists to be repaired. People who know all about protein have never heard of brake fluid.

The Student Automotive Workshop, a child of the Free University, is coming into being this fall. It will probably be in the Campus Center Garage Service Area in the beginning. It will be equipped with tools, and is designed to help people take care of their own cars, saving them a lot of money in the process.

SAW has come about thanks chiefly to the efforts of three students, Warren Bean, Marc Waxman, and Rick Ricard. Automobile care is expensive, requiring as it does expensive and specialized tools. Most students don't know how to care for their cars, but even those who do often cannot afford to spend the money required to buy the necessary tools. After more than a year of work, SAW, now incorporated as an RSO organization, will soon begin providing tools, space, and instruction to students interested in doing their own automotive work.

The workshop would have existed last year, but there were major bureaucratic foul-ups which prevented it. $350 worth of tools were purchased a year ago, some of which were to go to the Student Senate Transit Authority (otherwise known as "all those Busses"). Somehow the tools never got out of storage. This year's budget is considerably larger. The location of the SAW is still to be worked out, but the essential plans have been made.

If the Workshop is in the Campus Center Garage, there will probably be four bays rented. The workshop will be open for four hours daily, in the evening. Students will be able to use the Workshop's tools in this area. A flat rate will be charged for use of the space, a rate considerably lower than on the outside. In addition, a trained student mechanic will be on duty. He or she is not there to work on your car, but to show you how to do what you want to do. The mechanic will be on duty twenty hours a week.

Warren Bean is scheduled to meet this week with Terry Grinnan, the manager of the Campus Center, and Robert Gleason, the Campus Safety Officer. They will work out the details which will allow the Workshop to function in the Campus Center Garage. There are matters to be worked out, such as the use of fire, but it appears likely that the Garage will become, for this year, the home of the Student Automotive Workshop.

Once established, the Workshop will be equipped with a wide variety of automobile tools. Included in the budget were funds to purchase almost a $1000 worth of tools. There will be two ramps, which will allow the student working underneath on his car to see what he is doing. There will be a tune-up kit, so that students can do their own tune-ups. (A tune-up helps a car to live a longer life, and should be done every three to six months. Some people never get a tune-up for the entire two years their cars last.) There will be grease guns, mechanics tools, wrenches for both the English and metric systems, brake tools, tools for banging out dents, a battery charger, mechanic's tools. There will be stands and pulleys and jacks. The Workshop hopes to provide basic repair services in its first year.

Students should be able to save a great deal of money on the minor but basic tasks necessary to repair or maintain an automobile. The charge for using the Workshop's space and tools will be fixed at a flat rate, probably of around two dollars. A tune-up will probably cost only $2.00, whereas at Northampton Volkswagen the same tune-up would cost you $15.00. Besides tune-ups, the Workshop will be equipped to repair brakes, to bang out dents, for resanding, and for diagnosis. This last is particularly important.

The idea of an automotive cooperative is overdue in Amherst. There are over 10,000 cars on campus each semester, all of which have to be serviced. The amount of money spent on car repairs is astronomical. People who previously have been unable to do their own work will now be able to save all the money they have been spending on their cars if they take advantage of this service.

Warren Bean is a senior, but his interest is in the Workshop's future as well as its inception. He would like to see the SAW expanded far beyond the scope intended for this first year. The operation this year will be on a small scale, and it is currently figured that if five people a day use the Workshop, it will be a success. By the same token, however, if everyone took advantage of its offerings, four bays in the Campus Center Garage, and $1000 worth of tools, wouldn't be nearly enough resources to meet the demand. Bean would like to see the SAW with its own building, fully equipped, in a year or two. A dream? Perhaps. There are not, though, too many garages anywhere with anything like 10,000 regular customers. Amherst already has two successful food cooperatives, both of which grew out of recognition of the same problem we face with automobile repairs. And cars don't require refrigeration, as do many foods. The possibility of a full-scale automotive cooperative is hardly far-fetched. The implementation of the dream would not be surpassing in difficulty. The major obstacles are likely to be political. If the University's 10,000 cars drop out of the Amherst-Hadley-Northampton Car Repair Game, it could place a strain on town-gown relations.

This is a problem which must be faced, not only in Amherst but in America. There are many people in the area whose livelihood depends on the University. The University has grown tremendously in ten years, creating markets for all the Hungry U's, Stop & Shop's, Dangling Conversation's and Four Seasons' of the area. If the students of the University stopped going to Campus Arco and Spencer's Mobil, there would be a major squabble, which would call into question something which is extremely important, but often overlooked, namely the question, "does society owe the specialist continuance?"

The twentieth century is unique in that the things people do to stay alive are farther removed than ever before from their life functions. Once a man and woman constructed their own home, grew or killed their own food, made their own clothes, and generally took care of themselves. In America today, fewer than one of five people work in the area of food production, although everyone eats food. An outstanding example of the twentieth century specialist whose primary work has nothing to do with providing for his own life functions is the life insurance salesman. The effect of this specialization is economic interdependence to a degree which would astound Aristotle.

The danger lies in that the world is a delicate economic mechanism, a sort of living machine, in which one malfunction can leave a festering sore. Faith in technology, defense spending, and Cold War thinking caused the state of Washington to become dependent on the aerospace industry. For more than twenty years after the Second World War, both the aerospace industry and the state of Washington

Twenty-plus-two

In return for my time & effort on this column, which no one else wants much, I am allowed to spill my brains in public. I'm even encouraged to do it. Readers are in turn encouraged to shelve their petty gripes, grudges, hopes, fears, thrills, victories, agonies, defeats, delusions of grandeur and illusions of central position, and entertain a few of mine for a change. This makes me feel wonderful and presumably has untold the raputic value for the world at large.

Today is Friday, which we set aside for wondering about the meaning of existance rather than experience the tedium of finishing out the week. Put down your spoon. What are you doing here? That's a good one, isn't it? Why are you sitting here rather than there? Why this room and not the lawn? Don't go out on the lawn, it won't help. I mean, what would you be doing there if you went? Do you begin to see the futility of it all? Cautiously lower the paper and look at the person sitting immediately across from you. What an unmitigated geek. He has his nose buried in Poor Richard's, doesn't he? Would you like to meet him? No?

See that sheepish expression? He's cautiously lowering his paper and looking at the person immediately across from him. Raise your paper again. So will he when he reaches this line. Safe! That was close, wasn't it? Now stop fooling around and think of your future. You'll be frequenting some other collection of points in an infinite space-time lattice after you graduate. Where? When? What will you be doing there/then? Anything at all? You've been led to believe that no one will ever call on you to justify your existence. I guess you were wrong, huh? QUICK -- JUSTIFY IT! Why this university? Why this state? Etc? There are at least 400 million Chinese asking slanty-eyed questions about the rights to your place. They're asking WHO GAVE YOU THE RIGHT? They're asking WHY HIM AND NOT ME? Now wait a minute. Communists everywhere are by their own naked admission lusting for your place. Why not give it to them? It's no prize, is it? It's no bowl of cherries, no bushel basket of cuddly gerbils, no Jello-filled waterbed. Let the poor bastards find out for themselves. See how inscrutable they look when they find out about Baseball, fiberglass, ketchup, Command Tahitian Lime and Firestone retreads. Let them see how it feels to be away at college and horny. We'll all be out on the lawn.

Zapping Zappa

Will the real Frank Zappa please stand up? From Freak Out to 200 Motels, the omnipotent scourge of Motherhood continues to spit on everything sacred and devastate the counterculture. Mike Kostek reviews a new book on this anti-hero called No Commercial Potential which, for the first time shows Zappa the iconoclast in a different, human light. Is he mad or is he a genius? What motivates him to pursue the life that he leads? And, finally, what made him try to stop the publication of this book? It's all on page 12.

Semester On Celluloid

Will Fay Wrey once again become the object of King Kong's overt fantasies? Will Charles Foster Kane re-emerge as a tycoon of the fifth estate? Will Dr. Caligari's monster stalk the open streets for yet another time? On pages 14-15 is the entire schedule of this semester's films on campus. With such programs as the Director's Series and The Golden Age of American Cinema, we get treated to everything from Murnau to Fellini, Capra to Bergman as well as the already mentioned King Kong, Citizen Kane and The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari.

Summer Holdovers

For the movie industry, the summer usually marks a time for exhausting re-releases, an uninteresting myriad of grade-B features, and a minimum of quality flicks. Two of the summer's finest film offerings, however, were Alfred Hitchcock's taut thriller Frenzy and Robert Mulligan's macabre The Other. The former marked a return to the basics for the old pro Hitchcock and on page 18 Briwn Dailon properly extols the film's virtues. Bob Nesti, on page 18, asserts that The Other isn't all that it's hyped up to be. Read on.

And New For The Fall

On the left is a new weekly column called "Twenty-Plus-Two" for that's how many column inches are necessary to fill said alloted space! On the opposite page is "Poor Richard's" own op-ed page, a new feature. More political material is found in the book review of "McGovern" on page thirteen. Albums this week: "La Reed", "Live at Max's Kansas City" by the Velvet Underground, "Saint Dominic's Preview", Van Morrison's latest, "Trilogy" by Emerson, Lake, and Palmer, and "Soledad on My Mind" by John Lee Hooker. All on pages sixteen and seventeen. What to do this weekend? Turn to pages nineteen and twenty for a myriad of suggestions.

Politics

Nixon By A Landslide? Think Again

BY GALEN TINDER

This is the first in a series of weekly articles concerned with politics and public affairs.

President Nixon, with his usual hyperbole, has hailed the coming Presidential election as the "choice of the century" but in actuality the difference between the two candidates has been largely and, at times, purposefully exaggerated. The differences between Nixon and McGovern do not revolve around the issues as much as they do around the tone, spirit, and vision of the two men. This is not to say that policy differences do not exist or that they are unimportant. This obviously is not the case. It is to say that we are not witnessing a race between a dangerous radical and a right wing fascist as McGovern and Nixon have respectively been characterized.

It is ludicrous to label McGovern as a leftist or a radical as anyone who is knowledgable of European politics well knows. In comparison to someone like Jean Paul Sartre he is a centrist with liberal learnings. Certainly none of McGovern's proposals are radical nor would they precipitate any vast changes in the fabric of American domestic and foreign policy. He would like to ensure that every American has enough food to eat. He would also like to force corporations and millionaires to pay their share of taxes, make cuts in a needlessly high defense budget, and end a grossly immoral war. These are sensible and humane goals, built around the simple belief that human beings should be able to live in peace and, if possible, with some measure of dignity.

It is as improper to call Nixon a rightist as it is to call McGovern a leftist. In terms of concrete policy Nixon can best be described as a man who fluctuates according to the winds of politics and public opinion. What is distinctive about Nixon is the extent to which he appears to be devoid of any principles or sense of morality. His every action and utterance is spurred by political considerations.

The same man who expressed "horror and shock" over the terrorist attack on the Israeli olympic team is currently presiding over the destruction of a small agricultural nation in Southeast Asia. The reason, of course, why the President was so shocked and horrified by the Arab attack was because he was well aware of millions of potential Jewish voters who would be reading his remarks in the morning paper. But few people care about the hundreds of helpless Vietnamese peasants who are maimed or killed by US bombs every day. So the slaughter continues. Richard Nixon is concerned with death and suffering only when it bears some relevance to his career in public office.

Perhaps the major difference between Nixon and McGovern lies in the way in which they perceive the US, both as an entity unto itself and as a powerful member of the international community of nations.

Nixon, like most human beings, places a great deal of emphasis upon power and very little emphasis upon the uses and misuses thereof. For Nixon power is a good in itself; something to be coveted and never relinquished. Consequently Nixon has a mechanistic view of the value of human beings. Their value is determined by what they can produce, in other words what they can contribute to the power of the country.

McGovern on the other hand seems to believe in elements of the Platonic vision (albeit watered down) in which the state embodies the good that is, the moral. He shows evidence that he appreciates the ideal of community and the possibility of a nation possessing a collective humanity and spirit. He understands, unlike Nixon, that a nation is partially composed of and in some sense ultimately is, that which transcends what can be seen and explained.

He does not worship power but properly recognizes that it is, like science, morally neutral and that man must shape its spector in his own image. It is this shaping of power which in large part determines the spirit of a nation.

Because of these differences this year's Presidential race is going to be interesting but for the very same reason it is at the same time going to be depressing and upsetting. The false image of McGovern's "radicalness" is going to spur the Republican party onto new heights of duplicity and banality. Nixon has already released his host of plastic patriots to convince the country that McGovern represents a national threat. Every time one of them opens his mouth he demeans the political process, of which reasoned discussion and debate is an integral part, insults the American people, and further demonstrates the intellectual, aesthetic, and moral decadence of the Republican party.

The campaign to date has produced few hopeful signs for the Democratic party. The latest poll shows McGovern a full 34 percentage points behind Nixon and his campaign organization as a whole is still struggling to find a firm foothold from which to launch a concerted and cohesive attack on the Nixon administration. Between the Eagleton affair and apparent organizational difficulties the McGovern campaign seems perpetually off balance. It would be wise for McGovern to place less emphasis on the Watergate affair (particularly since the immensely complicated business will never be resolved by election time) and instead concentrate on the war and bread and butter issues.

But in spite of Nixon's impressive lead in the polls it would be a mistake to assume that he will win by a landslide. Political forcasting is much like weather forcasting. In attempting either, one fashions a prediction out of a certain amount of set data. As long as that data remains constant the prediction is nearly infallible. Unfortunately in both cases the data changes often and usually with little warning, and when this occurs the forecast becomes worthless. In short, it would behoove all political commentators, particularly after the surprising primary campaign, to exercise a degree of restraint in their predictions of a McGovern debaucle.

A Half-realized Book Look At Frank Zappa

BY MIKE KOSTEK

NO COMMERCIAL POTENTIAL: THE SAGA OF FRANK ZAPPA AND THE MOTHERS OF INVENTION.
by David Walley, Outerbridge and Lazard, $6.95, 184 pp.

But Frank Zappa knew all along that Brown Shoes don't make it.

Yes, yes, it was going to be great. Just as Bob Dylan had "Dylanologist" A.J. Weberman, Frank Zappa had "Zappaologist" David Walley. And best of all, Frank's life struggle was going to be set down for the ages in a biography just like Dylan, The Beatles, The Stones, Jimmie Piersall and Connie Hawkins. Well, almost.

"Frank always said I was too serious," says Walley.

Frank Zappa leads the Mothers of Invention, a pop-rock combo that is gaining national noteriety and record sales with each album. The LIVE FILLMORE album is a favorite of more than one jock on campus, undoubtedly due to the raunchy material covered. I was playing volleyball outside Van Meter the other day when "Coconut" by Nilsson came out of a window, followed by The Hollies outrexing T.Rex with "Long Cool WomanIn A Black Dress" followed by The Mothers and "Billy The Mountain". I've heard the FILLMORE album coming out of Hills House. Now that's a long way, Frank, from where you started sixteen albums ago. That is influence. Insidiousness.

"I think it's really tragic when people get serious about stuff. It's such an absurdity to take anything seriously. I worked out that attitude about the time I was eighteen, I mean, what does it all mean when you get right down to it, what's the story here? Being alive is so weird.", Frank Zappa.

The basic problem with NO COMMERCIAL POTENTIAL is that Walley has fallen down on his job of illustrating properly this great saga. He is the weak link, both in writing and researching this book, even though he's been given a great set-up. Zappa has been great as the protagonist, giving juicy quotes here, outraging one former drummer there, and in general plays the part of modern pop genius very well. The forces that are large parts in Frank's life are competently played by his parents, his wife (in a very small role in the book,) various band members, Captain Beefheart and those business managers. And most importantly, Frank has been set against a classic set of surroundings to contend with, to wit: Baltimore, Lancaster, Greenwich Village, Los Angeles, Southern California, the United States of America, Planet Earth, etc.

Of course, it's not necessarily Frank against these forces, it's more like them against him, but never mind.

What Walley has brought to this task is a healthy devotion and respect for his subject, a keen understanding of the historical period (the 50's & 60's) that has shaped and misshaped us all, and the energy and stamina to consume a large amount of his time in compiling the necessary material for the book.

Walley's main preparation for writing the book seems to have been twenty or so interviews of pertinance. Trouble is, he didn't dig a little deeper. Once he talked to somebody he never rechecked with that person over conflicting statements he would particular points...When I would be talking about an art statement, he would be trying to police it, you see."

Walley should have researched those nasty quotes from the Captain about how it was a joke for Frank to be comparing himself to Stockhausen, and some other particulars.

Says Walley: "The Zappa/Beefheart relationship was unusual. For a while they were fast friends, but business changed all that. Zappa had always maintained that Beefheart was much farther out than he. Now neither Zappa nor Beefheart talks to each other due to the nasty business (Frank's producing one of the Captain's albums which was an artistic success but a commercial failure). Beefheart maintains the album misrepresented his talents; Zappa maintains Beefheart was too difficult to work with."

Example: The famous Zappa-Beefheart feud.

Says Frank's father: 'Vliet (Captain Beefheart) to me is not worthy of total friendship. He has stolen from Frank. Frank has to laugh about it."

Says Capt. Beefheart: "I never knew Frank either actually to be perfectly truthful. I thought he was awfully insensitive, I thought his sensitivity was awfully alarmist...like he was always arresting me on Herb Cohen, Zappa's business manager, but the question is not explored in depth enough for either Walley or the reader to draw any meaningful conclusions.

There are a few minor instances that Walley gets into enough, such as Frank's love for 1950's rock but they are certainly minor compared with the one issue that he raises that could zip Zappa and his large reputation apart forever, but Walley let it slip.

This all concerns Frank's amount of composing creativity, and his alleged stealing from other sources and calling those riffs his own. He has always admitted lifting snatches of Varese and Stravinsky, but Lowell George, an ex-Mother makes some strong charges:

"Frank borrows a lot of music from a lot of players that are in the group..Don (Preston, keyboards) has been getting ripped off all along. A lot of chord passages are Donny's concepts that Frank borrowed. Frank's attitude is, 'The guy plays in my group. I pay him $250 a week, sure I can borrow anything from him.' "

Art Tripp, now Captain Beefheart's drummer, is also an ex-Mother. He says, "I'd say (to Zappa) 'Hey, listen to this' and he'd mumble something like 'Yeah, that's good' but there was never any acceptance, but then later it would come out and all my ideas were used. So I thought 'Well, I don't care as long as we're using it' but then, after a while, it got on my nerves...what kind of man won't admit to a good idea?...when somebody who makes his entire musical and conceptual output feed off one, two or three sources-(Stravinsky, Varese & Beefheart) why, that's pathetic. Now if he just claimed to be a good arranger and not a great composer..."'Hasn't he been prolific?" asks Walley. "Well, give me a few hours in the library and I'll outdo him, but that's not my idea of a good time.", replies Art. Hmmmmmmm.

Tripp then runs down Frank's satire, "He took concepts and good ideas that were just honest truthful things and tried to turn them around on people...His entire hazy half-assed concept is the sum total of each individual thievery."

Says Frank, "People compute my work habits in strange ways."

Walley never goes to Zappa and asks about this alleged thievery, nor does he go to Don Preston to get the facts. A good writer would ferret out the true facts as completely as possible and tell us who's right. If he couldn't decide he would give us as much as possible and let us decide. Instead we are given a few quotes, none of which are addressed directly at another statement. There can be no resolution if the sides involved do not clash directly. So Walley never lets on if Frank is a stone genius or a clever interpreter surrounded by the right people at the right time.

But any book devoted to Zappa's continuing saga must be inherently more good than bad. Never mind the little misquotes, misspellings and omissions in the text and the discography, and please ignore the incredibly rank liner notes. Of course any Zappa nut has to read this, and so too the casual observer will find great delight in reading how little six-year old Frank horrified his father by refusing to read Shakespeare, calling it shit. The book is full of great quotes, like this one by Frank. "Dylan's 'Subterranian Homesick Blues' was a monster record. I heard that thing and was jumping all over the car. And then, when I heard the one after that, 'Like A Rolling Stone', I wanted to quit the music business because I felt if this wins and it does what it's supposed to do, I don't need to do anything. It sold, but nobody responded to it the way they should have. They should have listened to that and said 'Hey, that record got on the radio. Now wait a minute, we've got a chance to say something, you know? The radio is for us to use as a weapon.' It didn't happen right away and I was a little disappointed. I figured, well shit, maybe it needs a little reinforcing."

Read this book, it is very important. Flawed as it may be, it has wonderful pictures, and the lowdown on such things as Rock's first operetta, I WAS A TEENAGE MALTSHOP, by the sixteen-year old Frank; how the young Zappa scored a movie, THE WORLD'S GREATEST SINNER (see Woody Allen's kitchen doorway in PLAY IT AGAIN, SAM for further details. On the left.); Frank's porno movie, as well as the many fascinating musical combinations throughout the book, such as Dr. John, Van Dyke Parks and Harvey Mandel drifting in and out of the Mothers. All this and more Howie.

To Walley's credit, this is a very interesting and readable book which will probably come to be known as the first biography of one of the most important people of this century.

I Don't Like The Sound Of This Transmission (Cont'd)

Lockheed went bankrupt. In a capitalist system the capitalists who own Lockheed would have been left to suffer for their mistakes. Lockheed was able to obtain a loan from the Federal Government, however, because the production of the SST, although it represented a bad investment, would mean 10,000 jobs to a state already reeling from a 15% unemployment rate. In our age of specialization, Washington rises and falls according to whether or not the Federal Government is buying airplanes.

There is a clear parallel to the situation here in Amherst, although certainly the magnitude of the problem is less here. The town of Amherst is economically dependent on the University population. If everyone bought from Yellow Sun, everyone at Louis', everyone at Stop & Shop, and all the dining commons ladies would be out of work. If every student made all his purchases through a cooperative, the economy of the area would be drasticly strained. The town, which has been bending over backwards offering the students political power in the town, might not be so willing to see student-cooperatives taking over the profitted. In recent years, however, with a few reversals, the economy of both Washington and the industry collapsed. economy.

These questions are not immediate problems, nor are they one-sided. Lacking the concentration of the state of Washington, many humanities and social science students leave Universities all across the country only to find there is no work for them in their fields. The government has not stepped into the flooded Ph.D market as it has into the aerospace industry. Labor and capital are both far more powerful than disorganized doctors of philosophy who are competing for jobs. Society doesn't seem to feel it owes a living to a Psych major. Psych majors receive no protection; the question is, how powerful are the garages in Amherst?

Warren Bean is not interested in destroying the economy of the United States of America. The Student Autumotive Workshop is intended for students who are hard pressed to pay someone else to do what they are perfectly capable of doing for themselves, given the equipment and space necessary. It is not intended as a new phase in the Revolution. It is intended to protect you from getting ripped-off by the commercial garages.

The Student Automotive Workshop is but a small amount of paperwork away from reality. It will be run by students for students. If you use it, it will save you money. If every enterprise could make that claim, there wouldn't be any Lockheeds.

The Political Biography of George McGovern

by FRANK JOHNSON

MCGOVERN: A Biography (1972)
by Robert Sam Anson

The ascension of George McGovern to the rank of Democratic Presidential candidate was remarkable. When he announced his candidacy for the Presidency in January, 1971, most people saw it as a lost cause. In those days, Edmund Muskie appeared to be the front runner, Hubert Humphrey was making plans for re-nomination. Ted Kennedy remained a constant threat to invoke the Kennedy "magic", and George Wallace threatened to divide the vote in 1972 as he had done in 1968.

But by the time of the Democratic Convention last July, George McGovern had the most powerful following of any of these candidates. Despite the delegate challenge and other problems, most observers saw McGovern as the eventual victor. Thus, it surprised many- and astonished no one- when in mid-July (and in the middle of the night) he made his stirring acceptance speech.

The road that George McGovern travelled to reach the podium that morning could fill a biography. It is no accident that an able Time correspondent, Robert S. Anson, delegated himself to the task. A Vietnam correspondent, Anson was captured by the North Vietnamese in 1970 and was feared missing for many weeks. He was an early McGovern supporter who elicited the aid of many in the McGovern camp to write the "authorized" biography of the Senator from South Dakota.

As is true of many biographies of this kind, this type of aid invokes initial skepticism as to its credibility. When billed as the "authorized" biography of George McGovern, the fact that McGovern collaborated with much of its research and organization presents an initial liability. However, this collaboration adds more strength than it does problems. Anson notes that McGovern was perfectly frank about a number of items; some of them astonishingly so. Mention is made of McGovern's abortive support to Wallace (Henry) in 1948, an embarrassing bete noire in the Senator's past history because this was an ill-fated attempt at discrediting incumbent Harry S. Truman. McGovern's speeches tend to be uneven and at times sound like sermon; they frequently provoke outrage and actually were working against him as early as 1952. The fact that McGovern enjoys considerable support from Zero Population Growth and has five children seems a mite incongruous, even with the pragmatic logic of his wife Eleanor, who ascribed the postwar "baby boom" as a cause in the September 10 Sunday New York Times. And although McGovern hails himself as being consistent, space is duly provided in the biography to allow his support of the 1954 Tonkin Gulf resolution to be made known.

"Wot De Hell Kind Of Machine Is Dat?"

Thus, the inclusion of the not-so-good with the good to make a very readable and convincing biography is one of its strong points. Throughout his political life, George McGovern has put a premium on the overwhelming power of logic and forthrightness. In Anson's biography, we follow the evolution of George McGovern from birth and later to his inculcation with logic on his high school debating team. A minister's son, McGovern attended Dakota Wesleyan University ostensibly to take up the cross- until the war intervened. A B-24 bomber pilot in the European Theatre, McGovern was decorated with the Distinguished Flying Cross for bravery following an emergency landing on a small island in the Mediterranean after his bomber was badly shot up. But the experience of war, for George McGovern, was by no means a glorious one. More than anything else, the war taught him the value of human life and the absurdity of international conflict to solve the world's problems. For a time McGovern was a member of the United World Federalists, a quasi-pacifist organization that includes Norman Cousins (former editor of the Saturday Review) and Buckminster Fuller, noted architect and critic. Following his return home after the war, Eleanor McGovern frequently had to comfort her husband when he suffered from recurrent nightmares involving flashbacks from the war.

Anson's biography is more of a journalist's attempt to piece portions of the McGovern political jigsaw puzzle together than it is a scholarly analysis. Moot points are not footnoted, and the casual application of dates to important events frequently incites irritation on the part of the reader. Perhaps the most flagrant example of this omission occurs right at the very beginning, where for 11 pages the reader is left to waddle through a mumbo-jumbo of rambling: "Slowly the big jet began its long descent toward the Dakota flatlands. The land loomed up, a sea of unbroken blackness. The balding figure in the first class cabin stared out the window." Only through guess and interpolation are we to determine the date of this earth-shattering episode as being 1968.

Moreover, the "authorized" biography of George McGovern is a misnomer. A title should theoretically relate to its contents, and in this case it should read: "the political biography of George McGovern". To a political science student, the wheels and deals might prove interesting, but what is sorely lacking is more material on McGovern's early life; in particular, some sort of clue to the alluring mind of his wife, Eleanor Stegeberg McGovern. Eleanor McGovern has proven to be one of the most charismatic wives a recent presidential candidate has enjoyed, and in Anson's biography she is constantly relegated to the sidelines. The fact that she figures so importantly in the Senator's planning, as she did in the selection of a Vice-Presidential candidate last July (!), merely underscores the need for more about her history.

However, despite these shortcomings, Anson's biography contains numerous examples of important and captivating material. One such example concerns Adam Wallinsky, a former speech-writer for Robert Kennedy. In 1969 Wallinsky told McGovern, to the Senator's initial disbelief, of an 80% North Vietnamese troop withdrawal taking place during the initial months of the Nixon administration. Finding out from Averell Harriman that this withdrawal had been met by increased U.S. escalation, the outraged McGovern was nevertheless told by Harriman that the time for a public announcement of these facts was not politically expedient. The time, as it turned out, was expedient enough last month, when Sargent Shriver aired the disclosure shortly after he joined the McGovern ticket.

Another interesting fact Anson mentions brings us back to June, 1971 at the time of the Pentagon Papers' abrupt appearance. Weeks before Daniel Ellsberg presented the Papers to The New York Times, he first offered them to McGovern, a logical recipient of such damning material concerning U.S. involvement in Southeast Asia. But McGovern prudently refused, realizing that to accept illegal documents, in Anson's words, was tantamount to "political suicide". Aides to George McGovern have referred to this incident as a bout with his conscience, and some say that McGovern should have accepted the papers and disclosed them, albeit in a perhaps different manner than Ellsberg did (by secretly supplying them to a nationally-read newspaper). Nevertheless, there is some question about McGovern's political future if he had chosen to accept the role of Russo and Ellsberg, informing the American people with the aid of pilfered documents.

The strengths of this book thus lie in its original material and its readability. Its weaknesses lie in the execution and the organization: any competent editor should excise the rambling introduction and instead insert the final chapter, which admirably puts McGovern into proper perspective. In its better moments, Anson's biography effectively deals with George McGovern's scruples, an understanding of which seems vital to the potential voter this November.

Semester On Celluloid

Films this semester will prove the old logo "Movies Are Better Than Ever", is true. Beginning this week any number of interesting and exciting film series are beginning and they are generally listed below. This semester looks to be one of the most best in years, with many neglected and talked-about but-not-seen films featured. And an absolutely masterful stroke for film buffs is the establishment of a film co-operative in Amherst. For a small amount you can join and be part of a continually educating and enjoyable experience. The Co-Op this semester will feature little seen commercial films as well as a rectrospect of the American work of Fritz Lang. More on Lang will be featured in next week's "Poor Richard's", blow is a listing of this and other series films.

The Film Co-Op begins with:

9/17 Fury (1936) Kicking off the Directors Series is Fury, Lang's first American film and his personal favorite. Joe Wheeler (Spencer Tracy) is jailed for a crime he didn't commit. The townspeople become an angry mob and set fire to the jail. Moral questions are raised in a manner reminiscent of Hitchcock as the audience is implicated in Joe's private fury as Lang sets the themes for his films to follow: "fate, murder, and revenge."

9/19 Wild Child. Directed by Francois Truffaunt. Photographed by Nestor Almendros. Stars Jean-Pierre Cargol. This beautifully moving film tells the story of a beast-child found wandering in the forest in France. Truffaunt uses the character to ask "What does it mean to be 'civilized'?" It is a touching drama that reminds one of Griffith films such as Orphans of the Storm where innocents are caught up in the history of ideas. In fact, Truffaut hommages Griffith with an effective revival of the silent film "iris" technique, still capable of heightening the audiences perception.

9/24 Manhunt. Fritz Lang. Watching a big game hunter settling down at the edge of a forest, we suddenly find that he is at Berchtesgarten and has Adolf Hitler centered in the crosshairs. It's just for the fun of a "sporting kill;" he wouldn't really shoot, he says–or perhaps he would, the Gestapo say. A strange sort of thriller and a fine film. With John Carradine and George Sanders members of the Gestapo.

9/26 Night of the Hunter. Directed by Charles Laughton. Stars Robert Mitchum. The only film directed by Laughton makes one wish there were more. Ignored in its initial release, it has become a cult movie primarily by word of mouth. Robert Mitchum is a traveling preacher with "love" tatooed on the knuckles of one hand, "hate" on the other. Pauline Kael: "This Protestant fable is, despite its peculiar overtones of humor, one of the most frightening films ever made."

10/1 The Big Heat (1953) An honest cop after a mobster, gets too close to underworld dealings and the gangsters go after him. He adopts their own tactics and his idealistic campaign turns into a personal vendetta. Lee Marvin and Alexander Scourby as the heavies are given stiff competition by Gloria Grahame and Jeanette Nolan.

10/8 Ministry of Fear (1944) From the novel by Graham Greene. Ray Milland as a man just released from a mental institution, who happens upon one of the strangest little carnivals you'll ever see, and innocently wins one hell of a "loaded" cake.

10/10 Moonrise. Directed by Frank Borzage. Photographed by John L. Russel. Stars Dane Clark, Gail Russell, Allyn Joslyn. Borzage is known as the ultimate romanticists, convinced that the, world can be saved by the self-sacrificing love of men and women. This is one of the best Borzage films that iterate this theme. It tells the story of a young man pursued by the fact that his father was hanged for murder and by the fear that he too may have "bad blood". In many ways this film sets the tone for the 50's rebel youth films. Don't miss the first three minutes – a beautiful montage of childhood terror that sets the tone and pace until the final manhunt and reconciliation.

10/15 While the City Sleeps. Lang. Almost a variation on Lang's masterpiece M, John Barrymore Jr. in the role of the killer. The brutal sex-murders are terrorizing the city and the top reporters of the New York Sentinal compete for the editorship of the paper by trying to solve the crimes. With Dana Andrews, George Sanders, Ida Lupino, Vincent Price. Next to Fury, Lang thinks very highly of this film.

10/17 Major Dundee. Directed by Sam Peckinpah. Stars Charlton Heston, Richard Harris, James Colburn. Set during the closing months of the Civil War. Dundee (Heston) is an obsessed cavalry major who leads a force of renegades and rebels into Mexico in pursuit of a marauding Apache chief. Harris plays a Confederate officer and one-time friend of Dundee's who joins up with the regiments but makes it clear that if the Apachees don't kill Dundee. he will.

10/22 Beyond a Reasonable Doubt (1956) Lang's last American film. In order to prove the inadequacy of laws and police, a writer plans false evidence against himself in a murder case, is convicted, and sent to death row. Of course, the fraud was supposed to be revealed....The film is a complex mystery about death, hate, corruption, and people who are inevitably doomed.

10/24 French Can-Can. Directed by Jean Renoir. Stars Jean Gabin, Francois Arnoul. This film is lately being placed among Renoir's recognized masterpieces, Grand Illusion and Rules of the Game. On the simple narrative level, the film tells the story of a showman who envisions his own theatre, gets it, loses it, gets it again and finally stages a grand show with great success. The threatre is the Moulin Rouge. The film operates on many other levels: life, dance, making love, theatre. The final, show sums up a personal statement on art and artists.

10/29 This Sunday starts a New American Cinema Series. The series will feature the works of directors and artists who have chosen to work outside the system, depending on their money or on private funds to produce their work. The works chosen will hopefully represent the range of ideas and forms in this group. First will be Robert Downey's Chafed Elbows with Gunvor Nelson & Dorothy Wiley's Schmeerguntz. Complete synopsos and reviews will be available at the showings.

10/31 Body and Soul. Dir. Robert Rossen, Photog, James Wong Howe. Screenplay Abraham Pelensky. Stars John Garfield Garfield made his reputation as a tough guy who, in the words of critic Archer Winsten, "Was fate's shipping boy, a personification of the bloody but unbowed hero and the bitter voices of the dispossessed." It is perhaps these qualities that, along with Polonsky's script that sets this fight picture apart. The picture was produced independently by Garfield himself.

11/5 New American Cinema Series: Corruption of the Damned, George Kuchar; Airplane Glue, I Love You, Howard Lester; Fireworks, Kenneth Anger.

11/7 Mr. Deeds Goes to Town. Directed by Frank Capra. Stars Gary Cooper. Logfellow Deeds, a greeting card verse writer, is wrenched from quiet little Mandrake Falls by the sudden inheritance of $20 million. Deeds hasn't decided what to do with the money but when he moves to the city he finds a lot of other people have ideas. In the meantime we are treated to classic comedy scenes: Deeds and his butler testing an echo in his mansion, and the solemn courtroom testimony that Deeds is "pixilated". The film received N.Y. Film Critics Award for best picture (1936) and Capra won the Oscar for Best Director.

11/12 Shadows. Directed by John Cassavettes. Lelia Goldoni, Ben Carruthers. Music by Charles Mingus. In Cassavettes unique improvisatory style, this film about color barriers was produced on $30,000 budget, much of it gleaned from $1 contributions by radio listeners who heard Cassavettes talking about the plight of New Cinema directors. The confrontation scenes in this film release all the frustrations of two blacks passing for white and their brother who is struggling in his own way with a black identity. His first film before Hollywood gave him a rough time.

11/14 Coming Apart was scheduled for this date but late cancellation forces us to find an alternate. It will be either Medea or Weekend by Pasolini and Godard respectively.

11/28 Chikamatsu. Directed by Kenji Mizoguchi. This film is the last work of the late Japanese film artist and one of his greatest. Mizoguchi has always been known for his understanding and sensitive treatment of the female characters in his films, most notably Ugetsu. His soft, careful style is very much different from the more virile legend films of Kurosawa. In Chikamatsu, Mizoguchi presents a memorable male character. He is a shy scrollmaker in 17th century Kyoto and his plight is that he has fallen in love with his master's wife. The lovers are more real and their problems more familiar than in any contemporary film. But the real delight is the creation of compositions on the screen that rival any painting. The color, placement, length of time allows us to see film as a true art.

12/5 Saboteur. Alfred Hitchcock directs Robert Cummings, Priscilla Lane. The plot is much like Hitchcock's more famous films N by NW and 39 Steps. A man is falsely accused of a crime and is pursued by both the police and the real criminals. The film contains the beautifully edited struggle atop the Statue of Liberty, but the most interesting parts of the film is when Hitchcock makes use of his flawless sense of irony when the protagonists are trapped by the criminals in a ballroom full of people–in a crowd of free people, yet alone and imprisoned. Very good character studies, a sense of motion and the vastness of America.

The University Film Studies Series will open its ninth consecutive season this Sunday evening. Sponsored by the Department of Speech the UFSS has for the past eight years provided the University community with a consistant bill of great American and foreign films rarely accessible to the general public.

Screenings for the Series take place on Sundays at both 7 and 9 P.M. at Thompson 104. Admission for the films is 75¢, with a special series discount of $5.00 for the entire ten date program. Both series tickets and singles may be purchased at the door. The films scheduled for this season are: 9/17 – Tol'able David, directed by Henry King (1921) - King's silent classic depicting the life of country people at the turn of the century has been cited by the great Russian director V.I. Pudovkin as being a model of imaginative filmmaking. The understanding and naturalness of presentation which the King has employed in this timeless film makes it as equally popular with contemporary audiences as it was when first released; and, Sherlock Jr., directed by Buster Keaton (1924) - The comic and cinematic genius of Keaton is most certainly in evidence in this, his third feature film. Employing the technique of a film within a film, Buster, a nickelodian projectionist, indulges his romantic fantasies about the girl of his dreams. The resulting gay and magical movie provides us not only with Keaton's inimitable humor but also with his uniquely piercing appraisal of life as well as his comment on the medium of film itself.

*9/24 - Mother, directed by V.I. Pudovkin (1926) - This masterpiece depicting the abortive Russian revolution of 1905 is considered by Paul Rotha to be one of the finest works in cinematic history. With Mother Pudovkin established himself as one of the silent cinema's greatest directors. Not only is he masterful in producing acute emotional excitement, but his sensitive portrayal of the individual characters caught up in the mass wave of revolution creates some of the most humanistically profound moments in all of film.

*10/1 - The Love Parade, directed by Ernst Lubitsch (1929) - One of the biggest hits in the United States and Europe the year it opened, this parody of operetta launched the career of singing star Jeannette MacDonald as well as insured the stardom of Maurice Chevalier. Jeannette and Maurice, sovereigns of the monarchy of Sylvania, wage a battle of the sexes in Lubitsch's first sound film and one of the great early musicals.

10/15 - Rules of the Ga[illegible] [illegible]ted by Jean Renoir (1939) - In the [illegible] poll of film critics conducted by Sight and Sound Renoir's masterpiece was voted the second greatest film of all time, topped only by Citizen Kane. This stinging appraisal of the French leisure class before WWII was long banned in that country by a community too soft-skinned for Renoir's criticism. The great Renoir mordantly satirizes the social and sexual mores of a decadent society near collapse. In this unfeeling world, the game, like that of the hunt, moves inevitably toward death.

10/29 - Meet Me in St. Louis, directed by Vincent Minnelli (1944) - By 1944, when she was Esther Smith in Meet Me in St. Louis, Judy Garland was undeniably the most electric musical star in the business and Metro's biggest star. Under Minnelli's direction the young Garland glowed. No other director understood and handled the Garland magic quite as well as her future husband in this timely and timeless classic.

11/5 - The White Sheik, Federico Fellini (1952) - Marking Fellini's debut as a sole director this is considered his most humorous film. A satire on Italy's serialized comic strip adventures, both the characters in them and the readers of them, Sheik contains broad farce, caricature and the fantastic, circus-like atmosphere typical of his world. The subject provides an ideal format to the central theme of Fellini's later, more serious work: the danger of living in a world of one's illusions.

11/19 - Touch of Evil, Orson Welles (1958) - As was the case with the films of the "boy genius" from Citizen Kane on, Touch of Evil was received poorly by American audiences primed for the mediocrity so often emanating from Hollywood. But foreign audiences enthuslastically greeted Welles' masterful tale of suspense and intrigue, appreciating the rich cinematic technique which has justifiably place the enfant terrible of Hollywood among the great artists of film history.

11/19 - The Servant, Joseph Losey (1963) - Critic Andrew Sarris called this exploration of the class structure in England "the most exciting movie of the year." Losey's (director of The Go Between) most complicated work features Dirk Bogarde giving the performance of his career as the servant. The English director's masterful visual technique traces the interweaving of couples and triangles to the eventual total exchange of roles between the master and servant of a household.

12/3 A Report on the Party and the Guests, directed by Jan Nemec (1966) - A brilliant allegory about the willingness of man to conform without restrictions on his liberty, this grim Czech film was suppressed in Czechoslovakia for two years, cleared for showing by the Dubcek regime in early 1968, then banned again after the Soviet occupation. Critic Renata Adler acclaimed Report as "one of the best Czechoslovak films ever made!...Jan Nemec is clearly one of the most powerful and universal young directors now at work."

12/10 - Pretty Poison, directed by Noel Black (1968) - Tony Perkins and Tuesday Weld join deranged forces to play CIA games in a black comedy which Film Quarterly called "a quiet American tragedy of youthful despair and violence."

The Thirties are being retrospect by Butterfield dorm the semester. King Kong and Littie Caesar (9/20) are spoken of elsewhere in "Weekend." Mutiny On The Bounty and The Thin Man (9/27) are the next double bill. Bounty won 1935 Oscar for Best Picture and is the suppossed true story of the infamous Captain Bligh and the mutiny of his ship in the South Seas. The Thin Man was the first of the highly successful sophisticated--comedy detective series. William Powell and Myrna Loy play Nick and Nora Charles in probably the most celebrated acting duo of that decade. MGM still receives letters demanding the two revive the series.

Two very different comedians, A Day At The Races and Mr. Smith Goes To Washington (10/25) are coupled next. A Day At The Races is second only to Night At The Opera in being the funniest of the wacky Marx Brothers comedies. Mr. Smith Goes To Washington was another of Frank Capra's little man vrs. society social comedies in which James Stewart plays a naive, idealistic senator from the Midwest. One of the more memorable of the Thirties comedies.

Musicals are next; two of the Thirties finest. The Wizard Of Oz and Top Hat (11/1). The Wizard Of Oz that took Judy Garland over the rainbow and into stardom. It is a splendid adaptation of Frank Baum's popular children story in which a little girl visits an imaginary land called Oz. Songs by Harold Arlen and E.Y. Harburg. Top Hat was the first feature to star Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers and is wispish, delightful, endearing comedy. The Irving Berlin score features "Cheek-to-cheek" and "Top Hat."

Two of the Thirties most delightful star vehicles are paired next, Morocco and Dinner At Eight (11/8). Dietrich made her American debut in this Von Sternberg film. It is a masterwork of style and a good deal of fun, much more than The Blue Angel. Dietrich shocked American audiences when she kissed a young girl on the lips while dressed in drag and further transfixed them when she strode into the Sahara clad in high heels. Dinner At Eight was another of MGM's all star, exposes of the very, very rich. All the studio's favorites, Marie Dressler, John Barrymoore, Jean Harlow, Wallace Berry are featured, but its most memorable moment is when the dizzy Billie Burke gives an exasperated yelp when her dinner party seems in chaos. She still brings audiences to cheer.

Two Thirties female superstars are paired next, Mata Hari and I'm No Angel, (11/29). Mata Hari isn't one of Garbo's better films, but worth seeing if only for her seductive dance with an oriental statue. I'm No Ange. is probably Mae West's best film, made before the Havs office made her clean-up, it features lines like "is that a rod you're carrying or are you just glad to see me."

Two action melodramas of the late Thirties are featured next, Stagecoach and Captains Courageous (12/6). The first is John Ford's masterful Western featuring John Wayne, Claire Trevor, Thomas Mitchell, and Donald Meek. Captain courageous had Freddie Bartholemew as a rich bad boy who becomes a rich good boy through the fatherly lessons of seaman Spencer Tracv. The latter won an Oscar.

The last two films are about as dissimilar as can be imaginable. All Quiet On The Western Front and Red Dust (12/13). All Quiet is one of the greatest of the early sound films and its strong pacifist message still has power today. Red Dust has Clark Gable and Jean Harlow, with Mary Astor. Harlow has some good lines and is a charming actress. Gable remade the film in 1953 as Mongambo with Ava Gardner as poor Harlow.

The Program Council Director's Series ends its survey of Bergman this evening with The Touch, the Swedish director's most recent film, his first in English, and his first to star a major box office actor Elliot Gould. The next group features German films of the Twenties. Germany during that decade rose to being the leading maker of quality, inventive films and influenced America both directly, through importation of its film-makers, and indirectly, through the adaptation of many techniques. Erich Von Stroheim was one of the first to emigrate and way the "enfant terrible" of Hollywood. He had his greatest success with Foolish Wives (9/25) a sophisticated comedy about an American couple touring Europe and the affair the wife has with an aristrocratic German. F.W. Murnau's The Last Laugh (9/26) is probably the most fluid and clearly told silent films. It has but one title. The story is how a hotel doorman is demoted to a washroom attendant and how this humiliation leads him to lose his wife, home, and friends. Emil Jannings gives a clever, oversized performance as the doorman. The third German film was something of the touchstone of the movement, The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari (9/29) directed by Robert Weine. An expressionist horror film, it appears to be a story of how a mad scientist possesses a helpless young man and forces him to do evil things. Most remembered for its use of expressionistic decor.

Fredrico Fellini is the next director featured, La Strada (10/9) was his first international success and the tragic story of an adorable waif whose slavery to a brutish carnival strongman is one of the most moving ever filmed. His autobiographical 8 1/2 (10/10) is a film of an entirely different temper; the story of a slightly off film director in contemporary Rome who cannot seem to distinguish his dreams and reality. The final Fellini film is his most recent released in America, Fellini Satyricon (10/13). Based upon Pretonius, the film is a vividly dreamlike meandering through antiquity. The director has called it a culmination of all the dream imagery he has ever wanted to film.

Orson Welles is next and his first two splendid films are programmed. Citizen Kane (10/24) which a recent Sight and Sound survey called the greatest film of all times, and The Magnificent Ambersons (10/23), a film of domestic life in the early part of the century which Welles never was able to complete.

Victorio De Sica's career spans nearly the identical period as Fellini. Both have roots in the neo-realist movement following the Second War and De Sica's The Bicycle Thief (11/6) is the most memorable of that group. De Sica would prefer the film be called The Bicycles Thieves because the story is of how poverty makes even decent men steal. The story is simple; filmed with all unknowns; a man, on his first day of work has his bicycle stolen, unable to work without it, he and his son search the city futily for it and its thief. Umberto D (11/7) is a similar film, using non-professional actors it tells the story of a lonely proud old man who, unable to raise his rent, contemplates suicide. De Sica's most recent film, and an absolutely beautiful and moving one, is The Garden of the Finzi-Continis (11/9), the story of the Fascist elimination of Italian Jews prior to and during the early days of World War II.

The final director is Hitchcock, and, rather than be redundant, the three films will be The 39 Steps (12/4), Notorious (12/5), and Psycho (12/7).

The Program Council Film Series brings this coming week Little Big Man (9/16, 9/17) and One Day in the Life of Ivan Denosovich (9/21). The remaining films are Willard (9/24), the dumb story of a sick boy and his rat friends. Two Land Blacktop (9/28), James Taylor, Brian Wilson and a jalopy in a rather mindless road picture. They Must Be Giants (10/1), a curious serio-comedy about a man undergoing psychoanalysis in London who falls in love with his female analyst. George C. Scott and Joanne Woodward star.

Red Sky in Morning (10/5) is similar to Summer of '42, in its concern to portray a young man coming of age during the wartime years. Zeppelin (10/12) stars Michale York and Elke Sommer and is an even bigger disaster than the Hindenburg. George C. Scott reappears in The Last Run (10/15), a fair crime melodrama. Peter Fonda's first attempt at directing The Hired Hand (10/19) is a handsome, often charming western with a superlative supporting performance from Warren Oates.

Pornography can be found in Coming Apart, a boring story of a man losing his mind remembered only as being the first feature film to explicitly show fellatio. THX 1138 (10/29) is a futuristic social drama and the first feature to come from Francis Ford Copolla's experimental school. Movember brings Sunday, Bloody, Sunday (11/2), John Schlesinger's remarkably modulated story of a break-up of a three-way affair with a superb performance by Peter Finch as a middle-aged, homosexual doctor. Shaft (11/5) was one of last year's biggest successes. It is an engaging, sharp and coolly made crime melodrama. Another recent crime melodrama is Bullit (11/9) in which Steve McQueen plays a private eye having an identity crisis. Best-remembered for its chase scene. Don Siegal has called The Beguiled (11/12) his best film. It is very much unlike any of his recent Westerns; a lyrical, almost romantic story featuring Clint Eastwood and Geraldine Page. Roger Vadim's most recent fiasco Pretty Maids All in a Row (11/18) had Rock Hudson play a high school teacher who enjoys murdering his students. Planet of the Apes opens the mini-Ape retrospect. Charlton Heston plays a wayward American astronaut, lands on a planet where evolution has been reversed. The remaining films are the Other Ape films and Frank Zappa 200 Motels in early December.

This is only a partial list of film series in the area this semester. Amherst College features a fine Classic Film Series on weekend evenings, Mt. Holyoke has an Elizabeth Taylor Subscription Series planned, and Smith has its usual series Saturday nights at Sage Hall. Watch the weekly "Weekend" column in this paper, "The Week Ahead," in the Amherst Record, the Fine Arts Calendar, available at the scheduling desk in the Camups Center, and the bulletin boards about the campus for the many additional films to be presented this semester.

Are We Ready Yet?

BY MIKE KOSTEK

Lou Reed, RCA LSP 4701 time 37:58
Live At Max's Kansas City-The Velvet Underground, Cotillion SD 9500 time 38:21

"I was talkin' to Chuck in his Ghengis Khan suit and his wizard's hat.
He spoke of his movie and how he was making a new soundtrack.
Then we talked of organic soap and the way suicides don't leave notes.
Ah, but when it was back to Lorraine.
It's always back to Lorraine.
She's a wild child." from "Wild Child" by Lou Reed

Lou Reed is one hell of a brilliant album that slipped out last spring, and has since disappeared over the summer. Never heard of Lou Reed? Okay, from the top:

Lou Reed and the Velvet Underground exploded out of New York City about 1965 or '66. Their Verve/MGM records are milestones in shock/rock with immense songs like "Heroin", "Sister Ray", "The Gift" etc. They were so far ahead of the public it's sad. They were banned from playing "White Light/White Heat" in San Francisco. Seven years later, "Heroin" and "Sister Ray", just to pick two, remain untouched, and are two of the first truly underground classics.

Their four previous albums are all fine, with each having two or three tremendous cuts. However, time went by and so did the public. Imagine it's 1967 again, and here are these people singing this song called "Heroin" and they're singing about "putting that spike into my vein" No, the underground was/is too lame to handle something so close to reality. On their second album is "Sister Ray", a seventeen minute cut that remains the definative cut for long, nasty, hardriving, murky, evil, EVIL, rock. It is incredible. The sound is so murky, dense and separated, you have got to turn it up, and just take off. Even now it is more awe-inspiring because no one has approached it since. You must recall that it's contemporary was "In-A-Gadda-Da-Vida". Enough said. When they put down the top ten rock cuts of all time, it's for certain "Sister Ray" will be there.

So the Velvets an act that reached far, far, far beyond the scope of most Iron Butterfly fans, and except for a hard core burch of fools who were buying period pieces like Freak Out, the group was ignored. In 1969 they had exhausted almost all of their bookings as a novelty act, and were reduced to playing a few select gigs around New York City, one of which was the famous Woodrose Ballroom in South Deerfield, Mass ("Ate at the Four Way Diner, slept in the Woodrose Hall"). Three times they came to destroy the feeble heads around this area that ventured to see them. There was Lou Reed up on stage, nervously looking at the So. Deerfield cops as he explained that they weren't really praising heroin, just singing about it. On the bill with them that night was a local band who ran through their covers of such things such as the Vanilla Fudge's version of "You Just Keep Me Hanging On". It was Anthony Burgess' "duaverse" (two worlds) as the local band would finnish, and the Velvets would get up there and devastate everyone, finally blowing the roof off with "Sister Ray". I was disappointed when I first heard "Sister Ray" on record, because they played it so much harder, faster and more frenzied live.

One of the world's great losses is that no one recorded one of these Woodrose concerts, because there is no "Heroin" on Live At Max's Kansas City. No "Sister Ray" either. No "Rock And Roll". However, despite all these amputations, you can still dance to this at your station.

Live At Max's was made from a cassette tape at a 1970 concert by a fan. By chance, it turned out that this was their last show, which makes it even more dear. As a result of this accidental recording, the record is in mono, and lists for $3.98 ($2.75 most places). The liner notes call this the first legal bootleg, but whatever, it's a good record that Underground fans will enjoy.

Being mono, this record always sounds like the band is playing in the next room, no matter how good your stereo is. But what's wrong with that in an important document like this?

As for the music, it's divided by sides into fast side, slow side, which is good and bad. Good because you can set up and sustain a mood without interruption; bad because the slow side drags if you re in a fast mood, and you've also lost a certain amount of variation which is always nice. But it is different, and that's important. The songs make a sort of Velvet Underground survey, with old and new readily mixed, and it's all very, very good, especially the fast side.

However, this is not the album for novices to enter the Velvet Underground. This is for fans, who will want to hear Lou Reed singing the lead parts on old stuff like "Femme Fatale", "After Hours", and "I'll Be Your Mirror", as well as seeing how good they were live. Newcomers are advised to head downtown where there is at least one copy of White Light/White Heat selling for $1.98, which will give you "Sister Ray" and feelings of aw. Instant greatness for $1.98.

It occurs to me that Lou Reed and the Velvet Underground are the only people to come out of New York City with anything to say in rock. Why?

After a year or so of unrecordedness, Lou Reed's back. We need him, Singer, writer, arranger and guitar player extroadinaire, there are very few people with his perceptiveness and humor in the business. His first solo album, Lou Reed, is certainly one of the best released this year, and is more listenable than any by the Velvets. I'll pile the ten cuts on this album against any other, and I know it will certainly hold its own, and most likely will melt anything else.

Made in London by Lou and some good session men (Caleb Quayle, Steve Howe and others), this record has everything you'd find on a Velvets album without some of the excesses than kept some of the Underground's albums from soaring off. Lou has written ten great songs, performs them flawlessly, and has given us this masterpiece. His songs are a rich blend of rock, both hard and soft, with his excellent lyrics and a beautiful chorus here, a killer passage there. All topped off perfectly by Lou's unmatched singing and playing. About the only thing more that we could have asked is another five minute ball of energy, like those scattered through the Velvets albums. But this is still a great album.

Reed doesn't sing pretty, neither does Dylan. But he sounds like he means it, and has the great sense of inflection and timing that Dylan has. When Lou's voice cracks, it is terrific because we know he really means it. What most of his songs consist of is a solid rock beat overlaid with a great melody. Reed plays some of the strongest and meanest six and twelve string guitar around and here he's better than ever.

Some reviews say this album lacks the murkyness of the Velvets stuff, but it isn't that type of album. It is ten great songs that grow with every listening. "Ocean" gets scarier every time. Every cut is distinctive and stands in its own way. Every review I've seen of this has been a rave, yet nothing's happened. A great album, a great group lost in the shuffle. Sad.

Morrison: Prolific And Profound

BY STEVE FELD

Saint Dominic's Preview–Van Morrison (Warner Bros. Records)

It took the first ten seconds of "Wild Night", the opening cut of last year's Tupelo Honey, to make me an undying adulate of Van Morrison. Those first few bars, which consisted of a rhythm guitar in the left speaker, followed shortly by a rat-tat-tat of the drums out of the right speaker, paved the way for an amazing song and a prodigious album that put most of the 1971 releases to shame. Tupelo Honey was as sweet as its name, cut-after-cut of pure, immensely likable music.

Prior to that, Van Morrison won fame with his 1969 release Moondance. Astral Weeks, from the year before, was filled with sparse, basic music that failed to catch on to the mass audience. It was a highly personal vision of Morrison's that was considered uncommercial and ahead of its time. Moondance, on the other hand, was a full-house of interesting, appealing music which brought him the publicity and record sales he deserved. His 1970 effort, Van Morrison, His Band and the Street Choir, was unamiously disappointing, a mere shadow of Moondance that reflected not a decadence, but more a distraught overambition. It had more songs than any other records of his, but the majority failed to generate any true excitement and emerged as undistinguished.

Tupelo Honey put an end to that, though, and placed Van higher than he has ever been in the minds of the record-buying public.

When I picked up on the new one, Saint Dominic's Preview, and slipped it on the turntable, visions of "Wild Night" and its explosive impact danced around in my head. Will "Jackie Wilson Said (I'M in Heaven When You Smile)" fare the same? Not quite, but almost. Enough to realize that Van Morrison has done it again. Saint Dominic's Preview, in no way, matches the sheer brilliancy, utter exuberance or unadulterated virtuousity of Tupelo Honey. Instead, it manages to chip away at you and force its way into your consciousness rather easily, leaving you no choice but to turn it over and play it again, and again, and again.

"Jackie Wilson Said (I'm in Heaven When You Smile)" has the same "can't-sit-down" beat as "Wild Night", soulful, powerful singing by Morrison, and a bridge consisting of harmonic fifths. All in all, it's an irresistable package that proved overpowering. "Gypsy", being in a minor key, carries with it the foreign feeling of its title. The verse, in 3/4 leads its way to a chorus in 4/4, concluding with a sudden, poignant bridge back in 3/4 that gives us our message: "No matter where you wander, no matter where you roam/Any place you put your hat, You know that that is home."

"I Will Be There" brings back fond memories of "Moondance" in that they both are jazz, a la Van Morrison. Jazz chording, mostly major ninths and thirteenths, play a dominant role, while Van's singing will rival the best of the black jazzmen. Another gem.

Side two is where the album starts to show some wrinkles. The title cut, "Saint Dominic's Preview", is the weakest song on the album, marred by the absence of a break from the musical tedium that it falls into. Lyrically, however, its as political and topical as Morrison has ever gotten. Saint Dominic's is a church in Belfast, Ireland, amid the fighting that is happening daily. Van, don't forget, is the "Belfast cowboy" (as named by the Band on Cahoots). He was born and raised in Belfast, where he formed his legendary group Them (remember "Gloria"??). "Saint Dominic's Preview" is Morrison's highly personalized plea for peace in his homeland.

"Redwood Tree" is something else, though. Three minutes of beautiful, meaningful music, with touching lyrics, it emerges as the album's "grabber"; the song that will prove most rewarding with the first listenings.

It's the remaining two songs, however, that are the outstanding departures and most important cuts on the record. Closing sides one and two respectively, "Listen to the Lion" and "Almost Independence Day" are ten-minute-plus excursions into the metaphysical land that was explored by Astral Weeks five years ago. Both have the same flowing, hypnotic qualities that permeate through a simple two-chord structure. "Almost Independence Day" especially echoes Morrison's five-year-old sentiments where he seems to be saying, "This is my song and I'm getting into it; sure hope that you can".

ELP&P Slowly Declining

Trilogy--Emerson, Lake & Palmer (Cotillion Records)

In today's music, innovation often takes a back seat to variation, explaining why there is little that can be termed as truly novel or original. Most musicians are content with the standard progressions, shiftless tempos, and a 4/4 time signature that has come to characterize rock. While there are infinite forms that these elements can be molded into, there is, nevertheless, a void created by this conventionalism; one that can be filled by skilled musicianship and a creative imagination.

Emerson, Lake & Palmer represent a faction of rock music that is daringly new, exciting and flamboyant. Three highly inventive musicians, each has scored a previous success with other groups before joining forces. Keith Emerson, formally with the Nice, is, quite simply, the number one keyboard player in contemporary music. His extensive classical training (10 years) in conjunction with his ability to synthesize several musical motifs make him the driving force and leader of Emerson, Lake & Palmer, as well as the main composer.

Greg Lake was with King Crimson for their first, and finest, album, In the Court of the Crimson King. A lead vocalist, his was the reedy voice that added considerably to the eerieness of the record as a whole, and especially his "Twentieth Century Schiziod Man". His ability in classical guitar playing is another commodity that make Emerson, Lake & Palmer a many-faceted jewel.

Carl Palmer is the group's percussionist, having a previous engagement with England's Atomic Rooster. His talent in keeping up with the frenetic pace of his present cohorts is enough to testify to his qualifications.

Trilogy is the fourth album for EL&P. Their first, Emerson, Lake & Palmer, marked a stunning debut for this versatile, kinetic band. Tarkus, their follow-up, was the recipient of much critical abuse. To the contrary, I still find this album, and side one in particular, to be a vigorous, energetic excursion into the cinematic, story-telling capabilities of rock music. For their third album, their songwriting talents took a bow to classisist Modest Petrovich Mussorgsky and his well-known Pictures At An Exhibition. Recorded live, it was an equally stunning piece of music that gave rise to the perplexing question of how could three men do "all that" with just two hands apiece.

Trilogy is by no means Emerson, Lake & Palmer's best outing—there are too many sore spots. Emerson's "Abaddon's Bolero" sounds like the musical score to a TV police drama (Dragnet?, Adam-12??). It spends eight minutes on a weak, hackneyed musical phrase to no apparent end. "Living Sin" also tends to shy to the background, by no means distinguished.

Besides those two, both on the second side, Trilogy fares just fine. "The Endless Enigma" (that being the purpose of life) at first will seem like several other EL&P tunes, but, in time, will reveal itself to be a top-notch opener. Parts one and two of "The Endless Enigma" are separated by a Keith Emerson "Fugue" (the classical influence). This is typical of Emerson. He has done it several times before, on the Nice's Five Bridges, and on Tarkus he preluded "The Only Way" with "Toccata in F" and "Prelude VI" by Johann Sebastion Bach.

The title song, "Trilogy" is also remarkable; a sensitive ballad that undergoes striking transitions, ending up as a swinging, up-tempo, free form jazz figure.

"From the Beginning" offers Carl Palmer on his classical guitar, and "The Sheriff" and "Hoedown" (by Aaron Copland, no less!) feature the quality that we've come to expect from Emerson, Lake & Palmer.

Adding it up, Trilogy doesn't carry with it the potentiality of Emerson, Lake & Palmer, the sheen and veneer of Tarkus, or the authenticity of Mussorgsky's Pictures At An Exhibition; but I find myself listening to it, and enjoying it, an awful lot.

Blues With Hook And Son

John Lee Hooker
Soledad on My Mind
BY BILL DENSMORE

On June 11, 1972, after an intial abortive attempt, John Lee Hooker gave a concert at the California Corrections Training Facility near the Monterey Peninsula. The show, which included emerging jazz impressionist Michael White as a warm-up, was less than organized-- prison officials simply shut off power to the Hooker band when the music was supposed to end.

But the Hooker's (John Lee Jr. debuts on this album, introducing his father as "my ol' man") turned in a fine performance regardless, and while there is nothing new or innovative about this album, it is another in a series of fine city-blues performances by Hooker et al. Gone are all the celebrities found on Hooker's last lp Never Get Out of These Blues Alive, and the feeble attempt at electric piano which destroyed that album.

"Soledad on My Mind" opens with two John Jr. compositions, "Superlover", and "I'm Your Crosscut Saw". Young Hooker hasn't yet developed the voice of a blues master–it's too mellow, too modulated, and too far from the raw power that makes the blues fee right.

This is a cleanly produced album, so if you're ordinarily scared off by live performances this one should pose no problem. The audience noise is kept at a tasteful level, and clapping is minimized; instead, individual voices are heard. The concert was small, and the recording has an intimate quality.

Careful listening discriminates Hooker's distinctive Civil War style guitar from that of back-up picker Luther Tucker, late of the James Cotton Blues Band. Whoever engineered the recording emphasized the bass rather than lead guitars, improving the general listenability of the lp, but making it a frustrating experience for followers of Hooker Sr.'s guitar style.

Perhaps more than any other blues performer, Hooker's work has been popularized by recent rock bands, including the Rolling Stones. On this album, Hooker does live versions of two such songs.

An adaptation of "Serves Me Right to Suffer" appeared on the first J. Geils album done in a raunchy big-band blues style. Hooker's version is easier to take, less driving, more careful. "Bang, Bang, Bang" I first heard done by the Animals with Eric Burdon's driving organ, but Hooker's gravel voice fits the lyrics with far greater precision that Burdon ever could. "Bang, Bang, Bang" sounds like any number of cuts off Endless Boogie, Hooker's next to last double lp.

In fact, "Soledad on My Mind" continues an electrified and no-experiments style typified by "Boogie Everywhere I go" and first heard on a joint Canned Heat and John Lee Hooker album of nearly two years ago. It represents a defection from Hooker's fol.

In fact, Soledad on My Mind continues an electrified and no-experiments style typified by "Boogie Everywhere I Go" (which begins with the same guitar work as the Canned Heat's "On the Road Again") and first heard on a joint Hooker and Heat album of nearly two years ago. It represents a defection from Hooker's folk and acoustic compositions of the 40's, 50's, and 60's. But then I find big-band blues tremendously more satisfying anyway.

Summer Residue: "Frenzy" And "The Other"

BRIAN F. DAILEY

Frenzy

"fren'zy n. 1, violent mental agitation. 2, delirious excitement."— Webster College Dictionary

After seeing Alfred Hitchcock's new movie I'm sure you will agree, as I did, with Webster's definition of it's title. "The Master of Suspense" has again proved that he can still produce excellent films of the same caliber of his earlier masterpieces ("Thirty-nine Steps", "The Lady Vanishes", "North by Northwest", "Psycho" and "The Birds") even after such minor disappointments as his last three movies ("Marnie", "Torn Curtain", and "Topaz").

This time around Hitchcock returns to his native England for the first time in over twenty years to film the story of the search for a sexual psychopath who's murder weapon is a necktie. The film concerns itself with many of the standard Hitchcockian themes and contains the masters unbeatable knowledge of film technique.

Very early in the film Hitchcock vividly depicts the strangulation and rape of a woman. Having met with some criticism about this scene, the director himself explained his technique and use of scene in an interview as follows: "You suggest violence by the rapidity of the cuts. You must be very intimate with it. To make you feel the effect of the strangulation, it's done in very close shots." Many people will be immediately reminded of the previous murder of Janet Leigh as she is taking a shower in "Psycho." As in his earlier film, Hitchcock again produces horror through his explicitness, close-ups and unique use of montage but unfortunately many of these same people become outraged at Hitchcock and argue that there is no longer any reason to sustain the suspense throughout the rest of the movie since we already know who is the killer. To those people I point out that Hitchcock is not maintaining the suspense over the identity of the real killer as he did in "Psycho" but instead keeps us in suspense as to how the wrongly accused man can free himself from the charge and help capture the real murderer. Thus we, the audience, must wait and wonder if the real killer will "get away with murder" or if the police will discover their mistake. The "wrong man theme" is a recurring theme in many of Hitchcock's earlier movies including "Stage Fright", his last picture in England, and "The Wrong Man", of which the basic story concerns just such an incident as in "Frenzy."

From the outset of the film London is established as an important character as well as the setting of the story. By showing the scenes in the Salvation Army hostel, the local pubs, and the expensive high-rise apartment building, Hitchcock is presenting an overall view of an entire urban society. After each rape Hitchcock stresses the way ordinary life flows on unknowing and unfeeling of the most hideous crimes. He always backs away from the scene of the crime to point out ordinary people in their daily routine as they rush past in the streets. One extended take begins with the closed door of Bob Rusk's (Barry Foster) apartment behind which he is about to murder and rape a woman and the camera proceeds backwards down the steps and out into the street. This brilliant bit of camerawork does more to indicate something ominous than any of the close-ups of strangled necks and protruding tongues. The horror of the murder behind the closed door is all the more potent for being silently implied rather than explicitly enacted.

Hitchcock continually shifts the emotional focus among a large group of minor but equally important characters in order to insure that the audience never loses sight of a larger social context in the film. Characters are defined in social circumstances and no longer in psychological terms as in "Psycho" and "Marnie." The fundamental social unit which runs throughout the entire film seems to be marriage. As William Paul explains in Rolling Stone Magazine; "it might seem arbitrarily willful on Hitchcock's part to combine a plot about rape with a theme about marriage, but male-female relations in Hitchcock have always been something of a power struggle. The most successful marriage in the film is seen as a kind of stand-off between two equally determined combatants, with the dining room table as battlefield and French cuisine as the weapon." This very relationship between Inspector Oxford (Alex McCowen) and his wife, Forsythe, (Vivien Merchant) is one of the fantastic ways in which Hitchcock uses sardonic humor as a counterpoint to horror. Every evening as Oxford returns home after a day of "horrors" involved in the "necktie" case he's faced with the "horrors" of his wife's concoctions.

The victim and victor. Barbara Leigh-Hunt as the unfortunate victim of a necktie murderer in "Frenzy," and Chris Udvarnskey as the good twin Niles in "The Other."

The juxtaposition of horror and comedy in the screenplay written by the brilliant author of the Broadway play "Sleuth", Anthony Shaffer, adds up to that perfect combination of the two which Hitchcock always demands in his films. The contrasts are so extreme that the horror and comedy don't alternate but instead co-exist. As the bare foot of a rigor mortis filled corpse accidently flips up and kicks Rusk in the face while he struggles with the body the audience is left not knowing whether to laugh or gasp in horror.

The film ends with justice prevailing and Hitchcock laughing at us, society and himself. Alex McCowen is called upon to perform this deed by saying to Foster as he is finally discovered as the real killer, "Mr. Rusk. . . you're not wearing your necktie." It's obvious throughout all the technical perfection and gripping suspense that Hitchcock thoroughly enjoyed making this film and I'm sure you'll enjoy seeing it!

BY BOB NESTI

The Other

written for the screen by Thomas Tyron, from his novel; directed by Robert Mulligan; with Uta Hagen, Chris and Martin Udvarnsky, Diana Muldaur.

George Bernard Shaw said bad melodrama fails with the uttermost ignominies of tedium. "The Other" is an altogether satisfying instance of that definition. A gothic melodrama filled with murder and mystical doings one summer in a rural Connecticut town during the Thirties. The plot hinges upon a single turn of the plot, the device Hitchcock used so well in "Vertigo" and "Psycho," in which a major revelation is made toward the end that makes perfectly clear what came before. With "The Other" the revelation is redundant, anyone with half a brain can piece the mystery together from the onset. The "Secret" concerns twin brothers, Niles and Holland, and how their mysterious rendezvous in their family's barn leads to numerous murders and injurious mishaps. Tom Tyron, who wrote the foolish script from his own best selling novel, is lucky that story ideas are in the public domain and not patented. He'd have any number of lawsuits. He seems to believe the more red herrings his plot could hold the better hidden his secret would be. He may hide his secret, but he can't hide the film's "de ja-vu" quality. We have all been here before; in "The Dark Mirror" where Olivia de Havilland played twin sisters, one good and one bad, in "The Bad Seed" where Patty McCormick was a charming child psychopath, in "Rosemary's Baby" where Mia Farrow was victim to all sorts of spiritual pranks. Robert Mulligan has even been over the film's familiar terrains of gothic melodrama and dripping sentiment with "Inside Daisy Clover" and "Summer of '42."

"Inside Daisy Clover" was a spectacularly misconceived film. Gavin Lampert's scathing account of a Hollywood child star's career during the Thirties was reduced to a heavy handed fright show thanks to Mulligan's pervasive gothic touches. There was an evil in Hollywood during the decade but it was never as scary as Daisy viewed. She seemed to believe everyone around her came from the back lot of some Universal horror film, why were they torturing her so? Ghouls abounded. With "The Other" Mulligan returns to the gothic, this time in spades. What intricacies the story may have held are subordinated to an endless parade of chiller devices. Yet "The Other" is a thriller with few chills and even less mystery. The atmosphere is stifling; cinematographer Robert Surtees does his "Summer of '42" thing and the soft focus and long, slow horizontal pans give the film a languid, heavy texture. It's pretty, but only works against the story. When the film needs to break the dreamlike texture, it seems crude. Such turn-of-the-plot as missing family rings and a supernatural game are too obviously calculated and overstated for shock and too simple for dramatic value. Hitchcock has stated his most shocking moments come when the audience leasts expects them, Janet Leigh murdered in a shower or Cary Grant being chased by a crop duster. Mulligan imbues "The Other" with such foreboding that the audience expects to be frightened to death, instead of bored.

Many people leave remarking on how simple the story was, but that's just the problem. The "secret" is all this film is about; once you guess it, all Tyron's character games and Mulligan/Surtees' technique cannot be anything but ridiculously single-minded. In avoiding a psychological explanation for the mystery, the story is much too dependent upon unfulfilled mysticism. Confusion is the key; the film begins in its exposition as to make ambiguous the relationship between the twins. Soon it's established Niles is good and Holland is bad. They live in an oversized farmhouse with assorted aunts, uncles, and counsins. Their mother is bedridden, recovering from the shock of her husband's premature death. He died the year before in a fall down the fruit cellar stairs witnessed by his twin sons. Their supersticious grandmother, Ada, demanded the man's ring, a family heirloom, be buried as it was cursed. The ring, though, was stolen by Holland and, when the film begins, he gives it to Niles. Niles hides it in his band-aid box, not before the ring is seen by his cousin who threatens to tattle. He dies before he can in a freak barn accident.

While Niles plays a Russian supernatural rite called "The Game." The story becomes even more complicated, but for fear of giving away the all too transparent secret, the plot be best left to its many, tired devices.

Reports have circulated that "The Other" lost more than an hour in cutting. This could explain the inconsistancies in plot and character, but only partially accounts for the tedium. Shaw also had a definition of sentimentality, he said it was the attempt to elicit the greatest emotional response on the cheapest of terms. In this sense, Mulligan is a sentimental director, not simply because his most recent films have been period pieces, but because he expends all his energy to a simplistic end. These characters aren't people, they're emotional quotients. Mulligan plays upon our responses to already overused feelings. The old lady neighbor is the epitome of an old lady caricature. You want to wrap her in the mouth she's so spinsterish and crabby. The boys' mother at first looks like Billie Burke in "The Wizard Of Oz," all magic wands and flowing, chiffon gowns, but when she becomes sick, she slobbers her soup with such anemic intensity she makes Ken Russell's cholera victims seem like health spa patrons. Beyond the twins, who are well played by newcomers Chris and Martin Udvernsky, the characters function and pose, but never breathe. Uta Hagen as Ada hasn't a chance with this dumbly written part. She's the twins' spiritual referee. Mulligan's saving grace are the twins whom he directs with the competence of an able drama coach. Everyone else, in fact everything else, is conceived for surface impact.

Canterbury Tales

The U. Mass. Theatre's original production of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, which had its world premiere on the University last spring, will be presented for a second time on Sept. 21-23. Canterbury Tales, conceived and directed by Ms. Marya Bednerik and Ms. Janet Craft of the Theatre faculty, will be the U.Mass. entry in this year's American College Theatre Festival in Washington, D.C. Two years ago, the University Theatre's production of The Clouds by Aristophanes was selected to play in the national festival.

Six of Chaucer's most popular tales (Wife of Bath's, Prioress's, Miller's, Pardoner's, Clerk's, and the Merchant's) were selected for their variety of expression and humor. They are explored for their dramatic quality by an ensemble of six performers.

Working with only six people enables the ensemble to display a variety of talents in a great variety of roles. Each performer singularly and with the group is given the opportunity to explore the dramatic nature of Chaucer's poetry through dance, movement, and music. The performers are led to their themes chiefly through improvisational techniques.

During the world premiere production, local reviewers greeted Canterbury Tales very favorably. The U.Mass. production was described variously as being "as colorful as a carousel, as graceful as a minuet, as modern as plexiglass, and as creative as tomorrow's inventions" (Francine Trevens, Springfield Daily News) and as "an interesting evening of mime, dance, and dialogue which captured the 'bawdy' irreverence of Chaucer's tales" (Rusty Blossom, Amherst Record).

The scene designer is Jeff Fiala, technical director is Nick Scott, the costumes are designed by Elizabeth Hopper, and the lighting is designed by Mr. Fiala and John Woods.

Reservations and tickets for Canterbury Tales will be available beginning Monday, Sept. 18 in the Bartlett Auditorium Box Office (tel. 545-2579). Tickets are $1.00 for U.Mass students with I.D. and $1.50 for the general public. All performances will be presented at Bartlett Auditorium at 8:30.

Pantomine Circus

The Lotte Goslar Pantomine Circus will perform two different programs when it visits the UMass Sept. 21-22.

This engagement, part of the Coordinated Dance Residency Project for 1972-73, is sported by grants from the National Endowment for the Arts, Massachusetts Council on Arts and Humanities, and the University's Fine Arts Council.

"One does not hesitate to use the word genius in describing this artist." The "Los Angeles Times" has written. "In a world of her own creation, peopled with blissfully detached, supremely idiotic beings ... she can metamorphose herself into an elf or an elk, a sylph or a sofa; she could undoubtedly braid herself if she desired."

Ms. Goslar's appearance at UMass will be her first there. The ensemble will perform in Bowker Auditorium Sept. 21, Sept. 22 and will offer a master class Sept. 20.

The Candidate

Robert Redford as a senatorial candidate in California. He's drawn from the mold of the Seventies politician; well-scrubbed, attired and presented with all the efficiency of a computerized ideal, and staffed with a group that works with machine-like precision. The film has a strong, surface reality; the footage seems taken from some network documentary. The story itself, Redford's race with an incumbent conservative and his own personal come at you with the relevancy of being about three weeks too late. The story of pre-packaged candidate of the Seventies has a quick staleness to it, the throwback to the Kennedy image is appalling. Redford, a good actor who has yet been given any role better than mediocre or simply cute, has a hard time attempting tough, talking, Pierre Salingerish campaign manager. At the Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

Duck Soup

Generally regarded as the zaniest of their many pictures, this film marks the premier of the union between the Marx Brothers and director Leo McCarey. Groucho puntilly portrays Prime Minister Firefly of Freedonia while Harpo and Chico pose as peanut vendors turned secret agents. Zeppo also appears as Groucho's secretary and straight man, as if he needed one.

The mirror scene, in which Harpo and Groucho get each other and the audience going in circles, is only one of the hilarious moments that this film has to offer. Of course, Margaret Dumont offers the lover interest, as only she can.

Everything You Ever Wanted to Know about Sex but Were Afraid to Ask

Six questions taken from Dr. David Ruben's maddening best seller are given a deceptively scathing review by Woody Allen. He has written and directed a skit for each question; "What happens during ejaculation?" etc. and most of the time is in hilarious bad taste. Allen writes with a devistating wackiness and few filmmakers are as adept as he in satrizing cetain genres of film. Here he's best with mimicing the cool, efficient "Stranglove"-like science fiction film where the body is broken up into a group of compartments with a control center in the brain. The Fifties Science Fiction/Horror film is beautifully done to death in a skit about a mad sexologist, his hunchbacked companion, a room filled with sex-starved cub scouts, and a thirty foot teat. Romantic interest comes in a skit where Gene Wilder falls in love with a sheep and like any lovesick man is driven into a frenzy by the touch of his amoured. A large cast participates, including Allen (some of the time). Louise Lasser, David Carridine, Burt Reynolds, Tony Randall, and Lynn Redgrave.

Fury (1936)

The best of Fritz Lang's American films and conceivably the finest of the Thirties social commentaries. A young man (Spencer Tracy) is picked up by local authorities on suspicion of child kidnapping. Through circumstancial evidence he is held and once word reaches the vengeance hungry townspeople, mob hysteria prevails. Lang through the repeated use of close-ups, shows how decent people become barbaric, yet unlike similar films the mob is never caricature or condenscended. The articulation of the film's argument against vigilente justice has few peers for effect. Lang's first American film and his favorite. Hampden Dining Commons, Sunday, September 17, 7:15.

Gimmie Shelter

The Rolling Stones 1969 American tour is incisively dissected in this powerful, often brilliant documentary by the Maisles Brothers. The two used a piecemeal style which fuses the Stones in concert with the planning behind Altamont concert in attempting to comment upon the larger themes the violence of the Altamont concert raised.

The concert portions show Jagger as the master showman he is often called and proves the group to be the rock and roll band of the Sixties. The film has the final effect of a nightmare, filled with chaotic incidents and ambiguous meanings. At the Calvin Theatre, Northampton.

The Godfather

A straight-forward melodrama about the rise of a Mafia dynasty. Reverent and sympathetic to the exploits of the bloodletting Corleone family, the violence i seen as a means to incorporate identity. Ir all its use of old techniques, the film suggests a new realism and understanding of the ruthlessness and scope of the crime empire today. Marlon Brando as the family partriach takes a relatively small part and makes it memorably moving. His supporting cast, Al Pacino, James Cann, Sterling Hayden, are all competent. Directed by Francis Ford Coppolla, from the novel by Mario Puzo, an altogether extraordinary experience. At the Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

The Graduate (1968)

A slick and very funny comedy which does an abrupt about-face midway through and becomes an exaggerated youth romance. Benjamin Braddock, first in his class at a large Eastern university, comes home to Southern California after graduation and becomes a listless showpiece for his parents' friends. He has an affair with an alcoholic family friend, then falls in love with her daughter. Mike Nichols directs this comic-strip comedy as if the characters still had bubbles over the heads. He is very good with actors, especially Dustin Hoffman as

The Hellstrom Chronicle (1971)
An enthralling semi-documentary which expounds the theory that insects will outlive and overrun man. This terrifying vision is negated somewhat by the rather mawkish and corny screenplay and the performance of Lawrence Pressman as the film's guide. Sit back though, and enjoy the fascinating photography of insects which borders on the incredible. At the Calvin Theater, Northampton.

Horsefeathers

In this tour de farce, the Marx Brothers are turned loose on a college campus and show how education can really be fun. Groucho plays the President of Huxley College, professor Wagstaff, while Chico runs an ice delivery service from a speakeasy. Somehow Groucho mistakes Chico and Harpo as a pair of football ringers and makes a deal with them to play in the big game. Student Union Ballroom, tonight at 7 and 9:30.

Hud (1963)
A modern morality play from Larry McMurtrey's novel about a good, for-nothing, amoral cowboy in the dying West. The allegorical basis is curious, it seems to say the degeneracy of today's West is akin to that of Hud and the strong, moral tradition of his father has all but evaporated. Filmed with an austerity which passes for reality by Martin Ritt, the West has never seemed bleaker. Paul Newman makes a charmer out of Hud. Patricia Neal won the New York Film Critics Award and an Oscar in a sharp, subordinated role as the housekeeper Hud continually abuses. Melvyn Douglas also won a supporting actor award as Hud's strong-willed father who seems ruined when he foreced to shoot all his breeding cattle. The late Brandon deWilde plays Hud's younger brother caught in the moral maelstrom. Wright Auditorium, Smith College. Tuesday evening, September 19 at 7:30.

Joe Kidd

King Kong (1932)
"The eighth wonder of the world," as he was referred to, still remains one of the finest horror films ever made. The film concerns a Lloyd Thomas-type explorer who captures a giant ape and takes him to New York for exhibition. He breaks free and the city goes beserk. This is the original, uncut version including features sequences considered in poor taste when originally released. The film is quite often delightful and fascinating with some ingeneous special effects. Bruce Cabot and Fay Wray are featured. Student Union Ballroom, Wednesday, September 20, 7 and 10:45.

Little Big Man (1970)
Arthur Penn's massive, entertaining, and difficult film about Indian-White Man relationships during the 1860's and 1870's. The film is told in one, long, rambling flashback by the sole survivor of Custer's Last Stand, a naturally born white man turned Indian named Jack Crabbe. Jack's story is rich in color and Dickinsian fatalism. Jack hasn't any idea where he belongs, is he an Indian or is he a White Man? More than his story, though, the film is an account of the elimination of a culture drawn along allegorical lines. Penn has a good feel for the moods of his fable and the mixture of comedy and drama flows well. Dustin Hoffman plays Joe Crabbe, with Faye Dunaway. Campus Cinema Auditorium, Saturday and Sunday, September 16 and 17, 6:45 and 9:30.

Little Caesar (1931)
One of Mervyn LeRoy's early Warner Brothers' ganster pictures made, as all that studio's films made during the early Thirties, with austerity and craftsmanship. LeRoy researched the settings with meticulous care and the film admirably portrays the grubby background in which the rise to power of the stupid ganster Rico takes place. He is at first presented as an objectionable and callous thug but through his rise LeRoy's modulates the film as to make him sympathetic. His final lone His death in a back alley has a good deal more pathos than most similiar films and his final line, "Mother of God, is this the end of Rico?" is memorable. The film made a star of Edward G. Robinson and is considered a classic today, although it doesn't differ greatly from the many competent ganster films of its time. Student Union Ballroom, Wednesday, September 20 at 9:20.

Night of the Living Dead (1968)
A film which has claims to being the most frightening film ever made simply because it goes further than any other horror film in showing utter depravity. The film is a huge, black conceit; working on the premise that a "blood--and--guts" film should not be covert, but rather overtly show some inhumane behavior. The plot concerns the plight of six-odd travelers who find themselves seeking refuge in an abandoned farmhouse the night the recently dead return to life and prey upon the living. This low-budget, B-flick has revolutionized the genre and despite some obvious rough edges, makes for amightly scary experience. Campus Center Auditorium, tonight (no times available).

One Day in the Life of Ivan Denisovich (1971)

Casper Wrede's careful, contrilled, and thoughtful adaptation of Alexander Solzhenitsyn's novel about the hard, tedious life at a Siberian labor camp. The film has a subdued power, less about men and events than about the ideas which rule their lives, and drama may seem more boring than is probably necessary. Still the futile existance of wasted intelligence put to use at its most mundane level is always fascinating and the film contains a controlled title portrayal by Tom Courtenay, a genuinely underated British Actor. Student Union Ballroom, Thursday, September 21, 7 and 9:30.

Play It Again, Sam
Another comedy in the genre of zany Allenesque farses, this film stars Woody Allen as a woe-begotten loser in love, the rejected husband who cannot quite cope with his new status of "single swinger." Despite many attempts by friends at introducing him to attractive women, Woody manages to successfully make a disaster out of each date by being his bumbling, clutsy self. An enjoyable film that should delight Woody Allen fans, and anyone looking for a good laugh. It also stars Diane Keaton, Tony Roberts and Jerry Lacy.

The culminating scene in "King Kong"; Kong takes on the Air Force, but it was beauty which killed the beast.

This Man Must Die (1969)
Claude Chabrol's film of revenge; a man Charles, vows to kill the man who ran his son down in a hit-and-run accident. He discovers the murderer's identity and finds the man an inhumane brute, cruel to his wife and teenage son. His feeling for vengeance is further enhanced when the man's son tells Charles that if he won't murder him, the boy will. The film seems actually two different films, one conforming to fatalistic mold of Fritz Lang, another relying simply on the ambiguity of events and their almost random relationship. Chabrol's film moves like a Hitchcock film without any obvious stylistic borrowings and is one of the more engrossing examples of a revenge–themed film in recent years. With Michel Duchaussoy, Caroline Cellier, Anouk Ferjak, and Jean Yanne, who starred in Chabrol's recently released "Boucher".

Torn Curtain (1966)
Alfred Hitchcock's fiftieth film stands out mainly because of his strange idea to cast Butch Cassidy (Paul Newman) as an American Scientist-- Professor and Mary Poppins (Julie Andrews) as his secretary--lover. The couple become involved in espionage and a plot to steal "top secret"government formuli. The most interesting scene depict an agonized Newman forced to kill for the first time and a good chase beginning in a theater. A magnificant cameo performance is given by the Academy Award winning Madam Hortense of "Zorba the Greek" (Lila Kedrova). Merril Science Center, Amherst College, tonight at 7 and 9:30.

The Touch (1971)

The first English--language film of Swedish director Igmar Bergman concerns a three way affair between a married Swedish couple and their American visitor. It is an oddly disturbing film which doesn't quite come up to what one expects from Bergman. It is filmed with a great deal of skill and has a surface warmth that is quite likeable, but one comes away oddly unmoved and a bit bored. Ther are two superlative performances by Bergman regulars Bibi Anderson and Max von Sydow as the married couple. The only obvious dissonance in the film is the performance of Elliot Gould who should have stayed in Hollywood where at least his excuse was that the movies he was in were bad. Herter 227, tonight at 8.

Wild Child (1970)
Directed by Francois Truffaut this beautifully moving film tells the story of a beast-child found wandering in the forest in France. Truffaut uses the character to ask "What does it mean to be 'civilized'?" It is a touching drama that reminds one of Griffith films such as Orphans of the Storm where innocents are caught up in with an effective revival of the silent film "iris" technique, still capable of heightening the audiences perception. Folklore Center Amherst, Tuesday, September 19, 7:30.

Z (1969)
Costas--Gravas brilliantly executed yet shamefully hollow polemnic about Greece and the recent right-winged takeover. The film is breathtaking and fascinating thriller about a political leader who is murdered by a Fascist conspiracy in contemporary Greece. Director Costas--Gravas stretches things a bit when he begins to push his message. Jean Louis Trintignant manages some fine acting as the government investigator who uncovers the conspiracy, otherwise the results are mediocre. At the Jerry Lewis Cinema, Northampton.

Letters To The Editor

Destroying Myths

To the Editor:
We, American Indian students of the 5 College area, feel that the editorial comments such as those that have appeared in recent editions of the Daily Collegian should be answered so that myths and false illusions of the Native American will not be perpetuated.

We consider it to be unfortunate that Indians continue to be stereotyped. There is no need for history books to define our personalities (we are individuals, too). There is no need for paternalistic symbolism. Above all, there is no need for the ignorance that is so blantantly obvious about the Native American.

The real damage of the use of the term 'Redman' begins when the subconscious connotations of Native Americans come out. It cannot be denied that terms such as savage, scalp, blood-thirsty, drunken, massacre, warpath, and hatchet readily come to mind. It is such barbaric and animalistic relationships that seem to be logical extensions of the name 'Redman' against which we protest.

We regret that so many are upset because we as a minority have spoken up for what we consider to be our humanity, thus dispelling another myth of the Indian as being pasive. Despite our number, we feel assured that our protest is legitimate and worthy of discussion. However large the change demanded of the University, our number as Indians has very little to do with it. The point is that we feel an injustice was done. In this case, as a minority, we do have more to say about the matter because the injustice has been against US. And, unless we speak up, cheap stereotypes will continue to feed the fantasies of the insensitive, for too many people still think of Indians as savages doing war dances and wearing feathered headdresses.

These remarks are our personal opinions and we will gladly discuss them with those who are sincerely interested.

This is an answer to Bill Foster's explanation about my letter stating my feelings on UMass dropping the nickname "Redmen".

First off, it's too bad that I couldn't get some kind of an answer from an Indian before Mr. Foster wrote his comments.

Yes, Bill, I have a few comments of my own. I understand your comments on my letter but one thing that you did not make clear was the bit about the fighting spirit. You stated that only recently has anyone published literature on this. You also stated that the images of the "untamed savage" and "uncle tom-tom" cannot be easily removed from our minds, to quote you. To tell you the truth, any educated person could tell you that he realizes that the days of those type of people are long gone and will never return. Certainly other minority groups do have parts of their past such as their culture that they can be proud of (Isn't this one of the reasons that Mills House exists as it does today?). Couldn't today's Indian be proud of the fighting spirit of his ancestors? Couldn't he be proud that this was chosen to symbolize the spirit of UMass teams? If not, tell me, Bill, why not? I don't think that the nickname "Redmen" was chosen to humiliate today's Indian. I realize that today's Indian, like any minority-past or present-is searching for a new identity and is trying to become a member of this "great melting pot". But while he is trying to do so, isn't there anything about his ancestors that he can be proud of? And if there are such things, isn't this fighting spirit I'm talking about one of them? Think it over before giving me an answer.

Don't think I didn't appreciate your reply. It made me think a little more about this situation we are talking about.

You remember that it used to be that calling a black man "Black" was to insult him and his people. Nowadays, he wants to be called black, as we all know. So why couldn't the same sort of thing apply to the Indian? I know that this team name business is a different thing altogether but reconsider what I have said above. I have tried to analyse the situation putting together what I first wrote and taking into consideration what you said yesterday. I would appreciate a personal response as soon as possible. Contact me when you can. Just take what I'm saying here into careful consideration first.

Real Situation?

To the Editor:
After reading John Sullivan's reaction to the Arab Terrorists' responsibility in the recent and horrifying events in Munich I cannot let his so called 'understanding of the real situation' pass as the truth. Any Arab now living in Israel lives a higher standard of life in regard to education, medical care, and job security than do most Arabs in Arab nations. (The reverse situation is hardly the same.) When the state of Israel was established Arabs left on their own free will, afraid of the recriminations they would face. It is the Arab governments that hold these refugees captive in camps in order to attract world wide sympathy. It is in this very situation that the hate needed to perpetuate the Arab terrorist movement is breed along with such extreme emotions that are to blame for the irrational incident in Munich.

There can be no justification for those deaths; especially in the midst of an event that attempted to bring nations together. Israeli blood is spilled again, and again Israel must be strong and defend herself. War is a dirty game with little to be gained. Negotiations must be sought after and people must try to give together in peace.

This Is Democracy?

To the Editor:
It is intuitively obvious that the 15 senate seats allocated for Third World People is a giant leap towards true democracy. To continue in this noble direction, I suggest that 2 senate seats be likewise reserved for the minority of students who are of German-Jewish origin with the third phalange of their right hand missing. Clearly these people can not be justly represented by others who can't communicate and relate to them effectively.

Also, regarding the replacement for the word, "Redmen", it is quite clear that a new word must be invented - one that is not in any dictionary, encyclopedia, publication, or part of any language. In this way no one can possibly be offended. Of course if this new word is eventually accepted by a future element of society it must be changed again, for it may offend them. But this shouldn't be much of a problem!

Obvious Racism

To The Editor:
The notion of racial quotas is an obvious expression of racism. If a person is barred from the senate because the quota for his particular race has been filled, he is barred by reason of his race. To demand such quotas in the name of fighting "institutional racism", is a mockery.

Observe that the quota doctrine regulates blacks to the status of children, with 15 appointed guardins in place of genuine representatives. No individual choice, no personal authorization to represent him, is required on the part of the black student - physiology provides the authorization.

The 15 senators are apportioned, not on the basis of the Third World's membership, but on the basis of the number of blacks who live in the university at large. Thus, 15 senators "represent" blacks (all blacks). This means that an individual black - who has never heard of these senators, may not even agree with their views - is counted as one of the senator's constituents, without voting, consent, or authorization on her or his part.

No organization has the right to speak for or to act in the name of anyone but its own members. No organization may be taken as an agent for an individual without his personal knowledge and consent.

The Answer Is . . .

To The Editor:
RE: Yesterday's Peanuts 9/14/72

Concerning Problem #5

Solution:

x=daughter's age
x+3=son's age
y=man's age
1+y=6x
10(y+1)+(x+3)=114
10+y=2x+17
y-7=2x

Solving simultaneously:

y+1=6x
-y+7=-2x
8=4x
2=x

Therefore: The daughter is 2, the son is 5, and Daddy is 1+y=6(2)=12, y=11.

Can such things be?

Parking Bureaucracy

To The Editor:
After much trouble I finally received the parking lot sticker I needed and paid for. Upon receiving my priceless commodity, for lot 13, I presumed my days of living in fear of the ticket crazy UMASS cops were over.

The scene on a Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock is chaos in the lot. There are cars parked all over the place and not an opening anywhere. Finally, I decided to risk my car being nicked and parked it on the outside of white markers. As I was getting out of my car I decided to check the stickers on the cars "legally parked" in the row. Out of 4 cars, 2 did not even have stickers and one had a sticker for another lot.

Thinking the cops might be lenient at this time of the year, I walked off only mildly worried that somebody might scratch my car.

On returning 2 hours later, I saw a little white ticket on my car and on every other in sight that was parked outside the assigned spaces. I cannot really argue with the tickets but the fact that the cars that should not of even been there escaped without any tickets. What the Hell!

Why don't they do something about the cars that have no place there in the first place so that people who have a rightful place won't have to suffer.

Lend A Hand

To The Editor:
My memories of last year include many Thursday and Saturday nights spent at the State School in Belchertown.

Making popsicle stick boxes may not seem like such a big deal to us but for someone who has not had a visitor from outside the institution for ten years, it's a pretty nice thing to have a volunteer come to see only him every week.

The coffeehouse program that operated every Saturday night last year will be in existence again this year. It's a great chance to make someone else's day a little happier by dancing, playing cards, holding a hand or just talking. The people at the State School are pretty lonely, and they appreciate and love the Saturday night gang. Volunteers interact with each other and many a lasting friendship has been made over coffee and cake.

Numerous programs will be operating this year from the five college area and volunteers are needed for weekly commitments. Organizational meetings begin next week and anyone who is interested is urged to attend. Times and places will appear in the Collegian this week.

American Foreign Policy Shifts In U.N. Veto

By KENNETH J. FREED
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-The United States veto for a Security Council resolution calling for an end to the latest Mideast violence represented a 180-degree turn from previous American policy in the United Nations.

U.S. Ambassador George Bush blocked the resolution because it did not link the Israeli attacks on Syria and Lebanon to the Arab terrorist attack on Israel's Olympic team in Munich.

"There is an obvious connection," Bush said, "between the actions of which the Syrian governments now complains and the tragic events which took place in Munich..."

To only condemn the Israeli attacks without mentioning the cause of the raids is "to perpetuate the notion of 'unreality' that is often assigned to the United Nations, Bush stated. No good would be done, he said, by a resolution "which looked to effect but not to the cause."

However, last December, Bush criticized the Soviet Union for vetoing two resolutions calling for an immediate end to fighting between India and Pakistan. The Russians said the resolution was one-sided because it did not link Pakistani terrorist actions cited by India as causing the fighting.

At that time Bush said, "We must simply say there is a lot of blood being lost, a lot of agony, a lot of misery, a lot of death; and this body must act now to stop the war...

"Peace must be restored before we can expect progress towards the creation of a climate conducive to the settlement of the issues that lie behind the fighting." While the fighting goes on, Bush said, "blame is unimportant."

But Bush demanded immediate blame be placed in the Mideast fighting. "Each of us has a responsibility to make clear that those who practice such acts of violence and terror, or aid and abet them in any way, are the ones deserving of censure and condemnation."

U.S. officials acknowledge a shift in the two statements, but they say the situations are different and it is U.S. policy to seek a balance in making Mideast decisions.

But they also acknowledge that the United States did not before demand that Security Council resolutions link the causes cited by Israel for its raids on Arab nations.

In the past, the United States has either supported resolutions calling for an immediate end to Israeli military actions or abstained.

Grain Prices Rise

CHICAGO (AP)-Wheat and soybeans futures prices rose 7 cents a bushel on the Chicago Board of Trade yesterday.

Corn futures gained 2-3/4 cents, while oats were mixed at the close. Soybean meal advanced some $1.50 a ton and soybean oil moved up more than 30 points.

It appeared that the early buying was largely by the public and was associated with the disclosure from Washington that Mainland China had purchased a quantity of wheat from the United States.

At the close, soybeans were 4-1/2 to 7 cents a bushel higher, September 3.46-1/2; wheat was 2 to 7 cents higher, September 2.05; corn was 1-3/4 to 2-3/4 higher, September 1.36-3/4; and oats were 1/4 lower to 1 cent higher, September 81-1/4 cents.

Audience Outnumbers Candidates

Fifteen candidates and seven of their staff members came close to outnumbering the audience last night at a League of Women Voters meet-the-candidates session at Amherst Regional Junior High School.

Candidates for state and county office spoke before the small group. The proceedings were televised over Channel 8.

The format permitted each candidate a brief statement, followed by questions to each other, from the floor and via an open telephone line.

Senate Candidates

The first two speakers, candidates for the state senate seat, are running unopposed in the Sept. 18 primary. Sen. John Barrus (Rep. incumbent) will be facing John Olver (Democrat of Amherst), the present state representative, in November.

Both men agreed on the seriousness of the present fiscal crisis, on the need for a graduated income tax, and on their special concerns with education and the environment.

Olver felt the signigicant differences between them were not their committee experiences but the large number of bills he had sponsored compared to Barrus and their marked liberal-conservative split.

Barrus challenged some of Olver's votes and his successes at getting bills passed. In response to questions, neither man favored legalizing marijuana at this time or supported teacher strikes.

Five of the six candidates for state representative attended the meeting. Only Norman Cowles (R-South Hadley) was not present.

James G. Collins (D-Amherst) described some of the problems he felt were most pressing: inequities in the present tax structure, misapplications of legislative powers and alienated youth. Speaking second, James R. Nolan (incumbent, D-Ware) emphasized his wish to be judged on his record of 14 years working for the district and the state.

He cited some of his legislative achievements, including the fiscal autonomy act for state colleges and universities and the public regulation of cable TV.

Edward Scheinost (D-South Hadley) was particularly concerned with planning for orderly growth, the need for careful zoning and coping with traffic safety.

Nathaniel Reed (R-Amherst) discussed his interest and experience in education on all levels. He expects being a member of the governor's party will help the district and the university receive its just revenue share. William "Gerry" Whitlock (R-Belchertown) mentioned the revenue sharing bill passed by Congress as a hopeful sign of money coming back to the local level. His concern is with the loss of local control over such items as transit systems, schools and town salaries.

Agreement on Tax

Questions following candidate presentations brought general agreement on the need for a graduated income tax and on the concept of open spaces and the Holyoke Range Park. Cutting the size of the Massachusetts House was supported by the candidates with the exception of Reed. In response to a question directed specifically at Nolan and Scheinost, the former stated his opposition to legalizing abortion and contraceptives, while the latter felt it was a decision best left up to the individual.

Four candidates for the post of county commissioner spoke.

Donald W. Madsen (R-Southampton) is running unopposed. John Breguet (incumbent, Williamburg) George E. Como (Amherst) Paul R. Dineen (South Hadley), and Henry F. Opatkiewicz (Easthampton), who did not attend, are candidates for the Democratic nomination.

All the men discussed the need for greater cooperation between the local, county and state levels, and of new roles for county government.

Belchertown Benefit Concert On Saturday

This Saturday from 12-5 p.m. there will be a free concert for the benefit of Belchertown State School, sponsored by the Greek Council. The concert will be held on the Haigus Mall lawn. Signed to perform for the afternoon will be Flight and Wheeler's Egyptian Dog.

Throughout the afternoon members of the Greek community will circulate among the crowd collecting for the needs of the Belchertown State School. Also refreshments will be served. Although Coke may seem out of line for a concert, the intent and the direction of all the profits certainly is not.

Ira Kligerman, a junior from Delta Chi and chairman for the concert, highlights its importance. "The main thrust of the concert is that people come and enjoy the festivities but more and primarily that the students see the needs of the Belchertown children first, and hopefully they'll contribute heavily."

Students are reminded that campus rush begins in the next few weeks, but Saturday afternoon at the Haigus Mall lawn, the children of Belchertown are the ones on stage asking your support.

Stock Market Stalled Dead

NEW YORK (AP) - The stock market stalled near dead center Thursday, unable to extend a weak rally that began Wednesday. As it has since Labor Day, the volume of trading remained low.

Wednesday's small rally, which halted a string of six straight losing sessions, gave the market a little lift Thursday morning. But the effort lost momentum, and the Dow Jones average of 30 industrials was down more than 4 points in the early afternoon.

The blue chip indicator pulled up a little at the finish, closing at 947.55, off 2.33.

However, an indicator with a broader base, the New York Stock Exchange index of more than 1,400 common stocks, closed a shade higher, up .02 to 59.80. And advancing issues on the Big Board squeaked past declining stocks, 673 to 670.

Amherst College To Present 'The Threepenny Opera'

"The Threepenny Opera," the long Off-Broadway run which brought the popularity of one of its songs, "Mack the Knife", will open at Amherst College on September 15.

The Amherst College Masquers will offer "The Threepenny Opera" as their first production in Kirby Theater's Fall Festival of Plays on the Amherst campus. Performances will be at 8:30 p.m. September 15, 16, 17 and 18. In addition, a 2:30 p.m. Saturday matinee will be given on September 16.

Bertolt Brecht and Kurt Weill, author and composer respectively of "The Threepenny Opera", based their work on John Gay's "The Beggar's Opera" an eighteenth century play, although the Kirby production will be performed in modern dress.

Set in bawdy London, "The Threepenny Opera" was first produced in Germany during the twenties. It has since enjoyed a long run of many years Off-Broadway here in the United States. Weill's score will be familiar to the audiences: "Mack the Knife" is perhaps the best known of all the superb music in "The Threepenny Opera."

"The Threepenny Opera," as well as the other productions featured in the Fall Festival, is a continuation of the Amherst Summer Theater, under the direction of Stanley King Professor of Dramatic Arts Walter Boughton. The star role of "The Threepenny Opera," Mack, will be played by Amherst College senior Geoffrey Keller of Pasadena, California.

Draft Counselor's Training

Draft Counseling Services, the free draft information agency on campus, has announced that it has a serious shortage of trained draft counselors this semester. All those who have had training as draft counselors are being urged to contact the Draft Counseling office in 923 Campus Center, either personally at a meeting at Noon today or at their convenience, or by calling 545-0813.

According to Gil Salk, co-ordinator of DCS, the draft still poses a major problem for a large number of students. Induction orders are being sent out to all in the 1st Priority Group with numbers of 95 or below, and men with numbers of 125 or below are being called for physicals. Also, Salk states, men in next year's 1st Priority Group with low lottery numbers are already starting to receive orders to report for physical exams, despite rumors that the draft might end.

Salk also urges those who wish to help but who have not been trained as counselors to sign up for the draft counselor training course being offered this fall. Those wishing to register for the course, which starts next Tuesday evening, should call 545-0871 for further information.

Those who need help with draft problems may visit the draft counseling office in 923 CC Monday through Friday from 9-4. Appointments may be made for other times if needed.

Parking

Any staff, faculty or students who have submitted their parking applications on or before August 15, 1972 must come down to the parking Office in Hampshire House Room 105 to pick up their decals.

Pre-Law Advising Office Open

The Pre-Law Office, located in E-24 Machmer Hall, is once again operating to serve the students of the University Community. The Pre-Law Advisor, Mr. Harvey Stone, has established office hours as being Monday through Friday, 8:30 a.m. to 12:00 p.m. and in the afternoons by appointment. Professor Goldman will also be available in Machmer, Monday and Wednesday 1:00 to 4:00. Although morning appointments are not usually necessary, it would be highly adviseable for students seeking aid, to make appointments at least early in the semester when the Pre-Law advising staff is the most busy. This would tend to mitigate against confusion and much wasted time.

The overall view in regard to law school admissions paints a very bleak picture. Last year, 151 people from the University of Massachusetts applied to law school. Only 41 gained admission. This is a success rate of 27%. As law as this may seem, one must then be accosted with the fact that this figure is approximately twice the national average for acceptances. To further darken the problem, the nation's law schools are projecting an increase in applications by approximately 10% (with no corresponding increase in the number of available spaces). What these statistics basically portend is that the middle ground has fallen out at most law schools. By this, the Pre-Law staff means that most of the seats are being taken up by the highest caliber of student, the ones with the highest grades and the highest LSAT scores.

Given this state of affairs, the Pre-Law staff means that most of the seats are being taken up by the highest caliber of student, the ones with the highest grades and the highest LSAT score.

Given this state of affairs, the Pre-Law staff offers two pieces of advice. First, if a student wants to go to law school, but feels pessimistic due to his cumulative average of his LSAT score, he should still seek out the Pre-Law advisor. In certain instances we have been able to place individuals in law schools even though their grades and LSAT score did not measure up to a law school's requirements. Please come in, for no matter what the individual situation is, if the person desires to try to gain acceptance to law school, the Pre-Law staff stands ready and very willing to offer all of the aid that they can.

The second element of advice is for those students who possess both high grades and a good LSAT score. Do not attempt to apply to law school on your own. There are too many pitfalls to be traversed. The Pre-Law staff has the information needed to match up your credentials with the best law school possible. In addition to providing entrance requirement information at all of the nation's law schools, the Pre-Law office will also coordinate efforts to send out recommendations to law schools. In the case of law schools requiring a recommendation from a Dean, the Pre-Law staff will handle these recommendations.

Please note there will be a very important meeting for all students interested in pre-law on September 26, at 7:30 p.m. in Room 163 of the Campus Center. All students, freshmen through seniors, should plan to attend this meeting if they are at all interested in attending law school.

They Play Lacrosse In The Summer, Too

By MARTY KELLEY

Who likes old hash? Thoughts have now focused on the present with the Cornell game just around the corner but behind the bend and over the last hill beside the hustle and bustle of finals last spring are hidden a few choice hours in someone's athletic life that need to be rehashed.

Summer vacation came a bit late for the UMass lacrosse team, but it was a pleasant wait.

There was scarcely a soul on campus late that early summer evening. Well, not really. Some of the Commonwealth's Finest were pushing their brooms but the tone in the Boyden lockerroom was somewhat morbid, quite pensive, a bit nostalgic and only the ripple of the colloquial and traditional have a nice summer could be heard.

The occasion? The return of the group of athletic characters from a pedestal of achievement seldom and perhaps never before attained by any facsimile of a UMass sports team.

Garber's Gorillas fell one game short of earning a shot at a national title in small college lacrosse when after a tourney bye, a 19-9 swamping of Bowling Green, the visitors were curtled and literally humiliated by Hobart College, 13-2.

The consolation? Well, to say the least, there was a bit of personal pain for a cast of thirty or so but UMass still finished third best in the country out of a field of 16 small colleges in the first U.S.I.L.A. small college national tournament.

The agony of losing was nearly comforted by the prestige of being in Geneva that balmy but warm June afternoon. But it seems to me that most of the thrill of the athletic contest was literally swallowed up by the rowdy partisan crowd of near 3,000-not at all uncommon for Geneva, N.Y., one of the country's hotbeds for lacrosse.

For sport sociology, it was funny as hell. But for the performers from UMass, the environment was a downright pain in the ass.

With drafts flowing almost as free as the choice comments from the gallery, the Gorillas were rattled to the brink of subversion. In sports you're to forget about the catharsis from the gallery and concentrate on performance. But with the howling gallery but ten yards from the bench, well, it wasn't as cozy as one would prefer. But the lines were great. Don Rickles would have been challenged.

Whether the Bowling Green artistry (which many critics thought to be the best first half of free flow lacrosse viewed) jinxed the visitors will never be known, but I bet it didn't help.

But All-Americans (Yes, All-Americans) Dwight Bloomquist and Hirsch Seidmen would like to perhaps remember the New York-Massachusetts wiffle ball game the night before which found Charley Hardy's New Yorkers on top, or Joe Deriso's leading excursion to Geneva's latenight skyline complete with one at best two college honkytonks. And even the roadside picnic next to a winding Upper New York state river took some points. But the game itself was disastrous.

I've learned to live with tough losses and have always tried to look beyond the pain for character, and by all means, coach Garber's Gorillas had it to spare after the Geneva travesty.

Athletes shouldn't send themselves to the morgue after a heartbreak, but most do, it's been that way ever since Little League. But the bus ride back from Geneva was a classic. No tears. NO one felt sorry for themselves or had the heroism to take blame much less the humility to sulk.

So the bus driver did the next best thing-that being the pulling over to a local place of business and a good time was had by all on the way home. The sojourn in no shape, fashion, or form resembled the ride home from Chestnut Hill this past winter when Jack's Cagers were shaded by our friendly neighbors the Boston College Eagles. It was so solemn the only voice heard on the way home was mine. And I'm sure it wasn't because I didn't know any better.

But the memoirs of early summer are over for Garber's Gorillas. Thoughts now for co-captain's Bloomquist and Seidman have now turned to fall practice. Now, one would logically say, "why do they practice in the fall, they don't hit themselves with those funny looking sticks until the springtime. I know because I've seen them from my room in the tower".

The purpose of fall practice? In the words of coach Garber, "Basically it's a time for people to get acquainted with each other and for the coaching staff to get a good look at the material. We have games lined up with five schools, namely, Rutgers, Dartmouth and Army. But I guess most of all in the fall, it should be noted that there's no stress in drills, on conditioning, or for style, but the accent is on having fun.

And if we all sit down, relax, wipe our political brow, and really think about it, and God knows the time for reflection is just right following the Olympics, well, to have fun, that's probably what amateur athletics is really all about.

Aaron Moves Closer

ATLANTA (AP) — "I'm still trying to catch that man" Hank Aaron said softly after being told he had just shattered another one of the immortal Babe Ruth's home run records. The mark Aaron is still reaching for is the Babe's all time career record of 714 home runs. But Wednesday night the 38-year-old Atlanta Braves slugger drilled a pair of homers for a record 30 in 14 different seasons to inch closer.

Ruth and Aaron held the record of 13 seasons apiece before Aaron connected twice off Cincinnati's left hander from Hall.

"It's a good think I haven't been in this league before this season," Hall said. "Or Aaron would have 714 off me alone." Hall came to the Reds from Minnesota of the American League this year.

Aaron now has 669 career homers and is within 45 of Ruth's record.

"I'm swinging the bat real good now," the 38-year-old superstar said Thursday. "If I hit five more this year I think next year I might have a chance to do it. I didn't say I'd do it but I think I'll have a good chance."

"I'll have to be more consistent though than I have been this year."

Sparky Anderson Cincinnati's manager says of Aaron:

"I never wanted Babe Ruth's record to be broken. But if Hank Aaron does it, I'll be rooting for him. He's a great person and a super ballplayer. He's above the big leagues. He's in a class by himself."

Aaron's biggest problem could be injuries. "I have to worry about them," he says.

"At my age you don't come back as fast. But right now I have to feel very good about next season. I don't have any worries but to go to spring training and get in shape. I don't have to think about a contract.

Aaron signed a reported $600,000 three-year contract before this year. Aaron also admits he has been swinging more for the home run this year.

"I think I've lost a bit and probably will never hit .300 again. But I'll be happy to have two more decent years and get out of this game with a .300 or better lifetime average after 20 or so years. I think that would be something to be proud of.

Aaron, in 18 major league seasons, owned a .313 lifetime mark prior to this year. He is currently hitting .270 with 30 home runs and 69 runs batted in.

Anderson contradicted Aaron by saying he felt Hank could hit .300 if he wanted to "but he's swinging for the home run this year. And that proves how great he is Everybody knows what he's trying to do and they can't stop him.

NL Names Black Ump

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Umpire Art Williams of Bakersfield, Calif., will become the first black umpire in National League baseball history, league President Charles S. Feeney announced Thursday.

Williams, promoted from the International League, will umpire his first major league game next Monday in San Diego. The native of Camden, Ark., has been a minor league umpire for four seasons.

He was a minor league pitcher in the mid-1950's and graduated from baseball's Umpire Development School in 1965.

The major league's first black umpire was Emmett Ashford who retired from the American League Staff two years ago and now works for the baseball commissioner's office.

How The NFC Looks

NEW YORK (AP)-So what else is new?

That, to put it simply, is how the National Football League's National Conference races shape up this season-as a 14 week instant replay of last season.

Despite the lose of their No. 1 quarterback, the Dallas Cowboy's No. 2 will do quite well, thank you, and keep them atop the East. Minnesota, regaining a No. 1 quarterback, will remain as the Central Division's team to beat. And San Francisco, with John Brodie quarterbacking a wealth of talent, appears ready to put down another Los Angeles challenge in the West.

Here, then, is how the forecaster sees the final NFC standings:

Central Division-Minnesota Vikings, Detroit Lions, Green Bay Packers, Chicago Bears.

West Division-San Francisco 49ers, Los Angeles Rams, Atlanta Falcons, New Orleans Saints.

Roger Staubach probably won't be calling signals for Dallas for at least half the season-but a lot of people seem to forget that it was Craig Morton who got the Cowboys to the Super Bowl before Staubach did.

The loss of Duane Thomas was a big one-but one countered by the acquisition from San Diego of running back Mike Montgomery-who will join Calvin Hill and Walt Garrison. Wide receiver Billy Parks will join Bob Hayes and Lance Alworth. If that's not formidable, nothing is.

Formidable is also the word for the defense, one of the best in this game. Bob Lilly, Chuck Howley, Cornell Green and Herb Adderley may be getting on in age, but they've yet to show it.

The Redskins, with Sonny Jurgenson to join Billy Kilmer, will hardly be pushovers; Charley Taylor, Roy Jefferson and Clifton MacNeil give them a potent aerial attack and the addition of George Nock to a backfield already sporting Larry Brown and Charley Haraway can only improve the ground game.

The only question is whether the defensive "Over-The-Hill Gang" will unwillingly live up to its name. Don't expect it to hold the opposition under 200 points again this year.

Everybody seems to be writing off the Giants, but don't be so sure. Quarterbacks Randy Johnson and Norm Snead may not be cast in the Fran Tarkenton mold but they're capable. A healthy Ron Johnson brightens the running game and Bob Grim's arrival will take some of the pass-catching load off tight end Bob Tucker.

Not much can be said for the defense beyond Spider Lockhart and Jack Gregory, although the innovative "rover back" system holds some promise.

The Cardinals, with quarterbacks Jim Hart and Gary Cuozzo, running backs Leon Burns and Donny Anderson, and receivers Jackie Smith and Mel Gray, will make some noise. But the big St. Louis problem is the schedule-seven games against 1971 playoff teams.

The Eagles, with little offense, must count on defense, and without Tim Rossovich, that half of the squad will be sorely overworked.

The Vikings, with one of the best defenses in the league, may now have an offense to go with it, thanks to the return of Tarkenton to toss the ball to Gene Washington and John Gilliam and hand it off to runners like Dave Osborn, Clint Jones and Bill Brown.

Alan Page, Carl Eller, Jim Marshall and Gary Larson will keep the opposition quarterback running for his life and the linebackers and secondary will continue to shine.

The Lions can't be counted out. Quarterback Greg Landry is as good as they come, as are receivers Larry Walton and Ron Jessie and running backs Steve Owens and Mel Farr. But the inability to strengthen the defense, mainly on the pass rush, may cost Detroit a shot at the Super Bowl.

Running is still the forte of the Packers, what with John Brockington and MacArthur Lane. But Bart Starr's departure leaves Scott Hunter as an erratic No. 1 quarterback.

Decent describes the defense.

UMass Hosts Big Red In Final Tune-up

By EARLE BARROLL

Ed ("I should have won the Heisman Trophy") Marinaro is presently in Minnesota with the Vikings (who say he should have).

That's the good news...now the bad.

While the loss of 200 yards plus a game on the ground is a pretty tough apple to swallow Cornell, according to some pre-season sources, may still have the horses necessary to make another run at the Ivy title they shared last season with Dartmouth.

As one coach put it, "They lost Marinaro, but very little besides."

That coach is Dick MacPherson and tomorrow afternoon at Alumni Stadium (1 p.m.) his team will be put to the task of facing the "very little besides" in a pre-season scrimmage.

Last year (Mac's first) these teams battled to a 27-all tie at Cornell, a game that saw Marinaro run for 234 yards and four tds. But, back from that squad are eleven for eleven on defense and just about the same count on offense.

And MacPherson's the first one to point this out.

"Cornell will be one of the finest football teams to come into the Stadium this season," Mac emphasized. "I'm hoping that a lot of students can make it to this game (admission is free). It'd be a great way to spend a Saturday afternoon in Amherst."

The head coach also sees this game as a natural pre-season clash for both teams. "They think we're a great contest for them. UMass is on the same level with the Ivies. We'd probably be in the top four. Cornell's coach Jack Musick feels this game is a great test on where they are.

"Likewise, we feel that when you play an outstanding team like Cornell you have to get better. If we're going to be a good team, we're going to find out tomorrow."

Probably the biggest question surrounding Cornell football this fall is "What are you going to do without Marinaro?" The answer is pretty simple. They're going to come at you with an exceptional quarterback named Mark Allen (whose coach says, "Allen is a good leader. I can't remember a sophomore quarterback leading a team to a share of the Ivy title as Mark did."

The guy who blocked for the rock-shouldered all-American for the past two seasons was Bob Joehl, an all-Ivy fullback. And the guy who watched Marinaro for two years from the sidelines is a halfback named Rick Russo who MacPherson says, "He's been sitting in the wings for two years watching Marinaro eat up the yardage he should have had."

And up front...well, that's another story. "Their offensive line," says MacPherson, "really blows out and it's going to be a real shock to our offensive line and a good one at that."

As is quite natural when a team has a super runner, the defense goes somewhat into obscurity. Don't let it fool you. "We're not going to find many better defensive teams on our schedule," MacPherson noted.

For the first time since he took over as head coach Dick MacPherson will have a healthy team on the field (eek, that kiss of death!!!).

And for the first time here at UMass MacPherson is going to have what he likes on offense: A completely sound quarterback in Peil Pennington, a power back in Dick Cummings (back after a year's absence), a fleet back in Paul Metallo, two swift ends in Steve Schubert and Tim Berra, and the strength in backup men that he feels is a must to be a winner.

"We should be an exciting team to watch," Mac said. "Peil has added the option series. Paul (Metallo) is everything we thought he'd be and more. And our young defense will be put to a big test against Cornell's offense."

The weeks of hitting teammates is all over.

As MacPherson put it, "The hay's in the barn."

Amazing Bosox Still on Top

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Red Sox, riding high in first place in the American League East, relaxed during a break in the schedule Thursday before opening their last home stand of the regular season at Fenway Park.

"We certainly can use this day off," Manager Eddie Kasko said. "We're going to be plenty busy the rest of the way, with only one other break, Sept. 25, in the next three weeks."

The Red Sox took over the lead in the torrid East Division race a week ago, and have managed to hold it despite challenges by Detroit, Baltimore and New York.

With a 7-2 victory over the Yankees in New York Wednesday night, the Red Sox returned home with the standings looking like this:

6 pt. here

The Red Sox hope to pull away in the 13-game stand at chummy Fenway, where they have a 44-21 record. Starting Friday night, they play three games with Cleveland, three with Baltimore, four with Detroit, two with Milwaukee and a make-up with Kansas City Sept. 28. Then they leave to wind up the season with three games at Baltimore and three more at Detroit.

While the Red Sox play Cleveland, the Orioles and the Yankees will be meeting in a showdown at New York, and Detroit will be at Milwaukee.

Kasko has his pitching lined up for the Indians. Marty Pattin, 14-12, is due to pitch the opener, with Luis Tiant, 11-5, starting Saturday afternoon and rookie southpaw John Curtis, 10-6, going Sunday. Curtis, who blanked the Indians in Cleveland last Sunday, replaces veteran right-hander Sonny Siebert, who has been ineffective recently.

Ruggers Ready

By JOHN QUINN

If any of the women of this fine University are looking for a gentleman, he can be found any Tuesday or Thursday afternoon around four over on the Rugby field doing his thing.

The UMass Rugby (a sport for gentlemen) Club is getting it together for their first match with Fairfield University on September 23rd, at Fairfield. Player-coach Doc Laurence feels that it's going to be a good season for the club. Toby Lyons, voted Best New England Hooker (not to be mistaken with the female hooker of another sport), Jim Tkacik, onetime Princeton Football player, who played a year in England, John Piepul former captain of Holy Cross, and his brother Bob Piepul, a veteran of two years with the UMass club, Terry Ohara out of Harvard Business School, and Nick Abbot who did four years at Hartford give this team a lot of experience. Other returning Rugby veterans are, Jim Clapper, Larry Tebo, Bill Kesgen, and Doug Knapp, who helped in the making of a 11-9 record between the A&B teams.

The first home games will be October 7th and 8th, when UMass hosts the Yankee Conference Tournament. Eight Rugby clubs from around New England will come to play three games each at the University field, and will be expected to participate in the post game parties which are as traditional as the game itself.

European Pro Hockey Loop To Open Next Year

PORT HURON, Mich. (AP) — Bruce Norris, owner of the Detroit Red Wings of the National Hockey League, announced Thursday the formation of the European Professional Ice Hockey League, which plans to start operating in October 1973.

Norris and associates John Ziegler, Jr., and Joseph Besch, said franchises have been awarded thus far to Sweden, Finland, Switzerland, West Germany and England and that it was hoped the Soviet Union and Czechoslovakia would also participate.

Each team owner, said Besch, interim and acting president of the European league, has guaranteed an investment of $500,000. He said the league would conduct a draft in December to secure top European and certain North American players and that each team would play a 60-game schedule for the 1973-74 season.

Besch also said the NHL has "agreed in principle to recognize the league as the professional league of Europe and work toward an affiliation that would produce international championship and tournament play between the two leagues and to develop mutually agreeable rules that would respect the various contracts of the two leagues."

Roy Lyons

To almost everyone in Canada and the United States, the results to date of the showdown between Russia and Team Canada have been completely shocking. Some reasons cited have involved personnel adjustments. Why was Peter Mahovolich taken out of the line-up after a strong showing in game two? Why wasn't Ken Dryden given an early hook after some shaky moments in the fourth game? Or why wasn't Gil Perreault inserted into the line-up sooner? And, of course, some will say it would have all been different had Bobby Hull, Derek Sanderson, and J.C. Tremblay not been banished for jumping to the World Hockey Association. And they'll be quick to remind you that the saviour from Parry Sound, Ontario was not on the ice to perform his magic on defense.

The validity of these arguments is questionable to say the least. A much more credible if more painful argument would be this - in every category the Russians have played better hockey than the Canadians. Offensively, they play exactly the same brand of hockey which lost its popularity in the NHL with the advent of the booming slap shot and the curved stick. The new breed of Canadian professionals play the game spontaneously, claiming their speed does not lend itself to rigid positional play. Despite this claim the Russians, only silver medalists at Sapporo last winter, have proven that their disciplined positional play allows them to make brilliant passes with amazing regularity. Defensively, they backcheck with a tenacity equalled by only a handful of NHL players. And in the goal, Tretiak has performed better than the more seasoned Canadian tandem of Dryden and Esposito.

The Russians may not take as many booming slap shots or throw as many crunching body checks, but these are hollow statistics compared to what shows on the scoreboard. Their strong team effort has been more than enough to offset the more spectacular solo efforts of several members of Team Canada, notably Phil Esposito and Yvan Cournoyer. Espo has continued his prolific scoring in this international competition. Cournoyer has played his heart out at right wing.

Still, the end result is that instead of witnessing a long awaited comeuppance for the Soviets, we are all left with lingering doubts. Have we been seeing the best hockey in the world all these years? It hardly seems possible anymore.

Seven PIRG's Plan Activities

By AVIS YUNI

Representatives from seven Public Interest Research Groups (PIRG) in the New England area attended the New England PIRG Conference held Friday through Sunday, September 15th - 17th in the Campus Center.

As stated by Steve Ryder, of Western Mass. PIRG the conference had a two-fold purpose: First, to allow those attending to swap experiences and ideas, and provide a wider base for people in these PIRGs to draw on and help set-up their own organizations since they all are presently in different stages of development. Second, the conference was held to allow for more communication between these groups in the New England area, so that all could find out what they were doing and hopefully draw from this in the future to co-ordinate activities in the areas.

The conference consisted of a series of meetings on various topics. Friday night's opening discussion concerned itself with clearing away some of the confusion surrounding the PIRG concept–what a PIRG is, what it can do, etc.

Saturday, discussions were held on the selection of projects for PIRGs, PIRGs and community relations and media coverage, the roll of local boards, PIRGs and University relations, individual problem areas, and where the PIRGs can go in the future. An optional session was held on Sunday morning to discuss any topics or problems the members felt needed discussion.

During the conference, many varying topics and facts were discussed. The forthcoming WMPIRG suit against Western Massachusetts Electric Company, the funding of PIRG groups in the Five College area, and the fact that 55% of UMass undergrads contributed the $2 voluntary WMPIRG fee, were among them.

This conference provided the first chance these groups have had to meet each other, according to Don Ross. It's hoped to get some organization started on the problems that cross state lines and involve more than one group, he said. Another meeting like this one will be held in the Mid-West in early October.

Ryder, President of WMPIRG, said the conference, called by his organization and CAG, was "historic in the PIRG movement" and was the first time there have been enough PIRG's in the region for such a meeting.

CAG, according to Ryder is a Washington-based Nader off-shoot He said its function was to help PIRGs and other citizen groups form, advise them on what projects they might tackle, and serve as a general information and resource center

CAG is funded by Public Citizen Incorporated, Ralph Nader's fund raising organization According to Ryder, Public Citizen raised over one million dollars last year, mainly by soliciting through the mail.

About 30 members attended from Western Massachusetts PIRG, Massachusetts PIRG East, Central PIRG (Central New York), New Jersey PIRG, Vermont PIRG, Connecticut Citizen Action Group, and Citizen Action Group (Washington, D.C.).

Among them were Toby Moffett, Director Connecticut Citizen Action Group; Donald Ross, Director Citizen Action Group; Steve Ryer, Western Massachusetts PIRG; Scott Skinner, Director Vermong PIRG; and Ronald Bogard, lawyer and Director of Western Massachusetts PIRG.

Tanzania Denies Invasion Of Ugandan Countryside

BULLETIN:

KAMPALA, Uganda (AP) - Uganda claimed Sunday it had been invaded by Tanzanian troops with the main purpose of blocking Uganda's plans for expelling thousands of Asian residents.

Tanzania denied the invasion claim.

Radio Uganda said a force of 1,000 Tanzanians invaded Uganda shortly before dawn. The Kampala government said the troops advanced along a road leading to the capital on the shore of Lake Victoria.

A military spokesman said Tanzanians captured in fighting affirmed that "one of the main reasons for the attack was to interrupt the expulsion of non-citizen Asians.

The first of the planned charter flights for taking out 50,000 Asians with British passports left Kampala for London early Monday, two hours behind schedule, with 193 passengers aboard. A Nov. 8 deadline has been set for the Asians to leave this East African country.

President Julius Nyerere of Tanzania has criticized the Ugandan decision to expel the Asians. Nyerere's home minister has indicated that Tanzania is unwilling to accept any of those expelled should they seek residence there.

The Ugandan military spokesman said Sunday night that three towns fell to invading Tanzanians.

The spokesman later reported a fresh clash, with "heavy casualties on both sides," in the border village of Kikagati, 35 miles south of Mbarara, where the army barracks was reported to be surrounded by enemy forces.

The spokesman also reported intense fighting in the Masaka area of southwestern Uganda, about 80 miles west of the capital.

He said the invaders included white mercenaries. At one stage, he reported, the Ugandan air force had sent planes to support ground forces against the attack.

Some in Kampala voiced skepticism of the invasion report and said fighting could reflect fresh indiscipline within Uganda's 10,000-man army.

Troops within the barracks, together with reinforcements which had had been sent in, were "fighting hard to repulse the enemy," a military spokesman said.

He said it had not been possible to assess casualties, partly because of communications difficulties.

UM-Amherst Seeks $676 Million; 860 More Students Seen in '74

By JAMES GOLD

For the continuation of its functions, the UMass-Amherst administration's request in the fiscal 1974 budget totals $67.6 million, according to figures in the Maintenance Budget Request released recently.

This request, up $12.5 million from fiscal 1973, includes provisions for an increased enrollment of 860 students, 57 new faculty positions, a Dean and "small staff" for the planning of the new Law Center, and other necessities for the Amherst Campus.

If the budget of the entire University is passed unchanged by the state, the Amherst share would be 68% of the total $98 million sought.

In an attempt to realize the eventual goal of 25,000 students, UMass-Amherst plans to enroll the equivalent of 22,055 full time students, according to the budget document.

This breaks down to the equivalent of 18,370 undergrad and 3,685 graduate full time students in the '73-'74 academic year. These total figures represent a total of 23,500 "headcount students."

To accommodate the increased number of students, the Amherst campus intends to employ a total of 1,471 faculty members, according to the Personnel Summary of the budget.

Also shown here is the intention to employ 529 professional and 1,927 classified personnel. The professional total is up 72 from this current fiscal year, 1973. The classified total is up 191.

According to the Chancellor's statement submitted with the budget, the proposed Law Center is currently in the planning stage. "This Center will provide professional training for lawyers, a program in the law for undergraduates, and also contribute to building allied professions within the field of law," the statement says.

The proposed Law Center budget allows for 75 students in the fall of 1975, 125 students in the fall of 1976, and 180 students in the fall of 1977. All these are on a graduate level, according to the request.

The Chancellor's Statement also indicates an "intensive effort to assure affirmative action in correcting existing patterns of under-utilization of minorities and women on the campus."

For this effort, the appointment of an Associate Provost, specified as a woman, with responsibilities for "women's concerns on campus," the appointment of an Interim Coordinator of Affirmative Action in the Chancellor's office, and the use of a new faculty positions to "stimulate recruiting of minority and women faculty planned.

The Chancellor's statement cites progress in the continuing effort to develop links with the UMass community through off-campus service. "We are supporting the reallocation of departmental and faculty efforts to encourage such efforts," it says. It also expresses the intention of "strengthening such thrusts as the Institute for Man and His Environment, and expanding programs like the University Year for Action."

To comply with the recommendations of the President's Working Group on Counseling, Advising, and Supportive Services for a "broad range of student services throughout the University," four positions will be created.

Two staff associates and two staff assistants will be allocated one each to the following units of the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs: Admissions, Financial Aid, Community Development and Human Relations, and Office of the Vice Chancellor.

Also indicated in the Chancellor's statements is the development of a Closed Circuit Television system. "A modest start on such a system in FY 1974 will require approximately $100,000 for installation and equipment costs as well as approximately $75,000 per year in initial operating costs for minimal support staff, student help, and supplies."

The reasons cited for the closed circuit television system include the following:

–meeting the demand for large enrollment courses,

–reducing the inefficiencies of professors conveying the same information repeatedly,

–bringing instruction to the residential areas,

–"meeting special campus-wide needs for communication,"

–broadcasting special events or public affairs,

–enabling better instruction in media uses,

–providing for a student operated TV station.

–preparing films or tapes for various off-campus programs purposes.

The University is also asking for subsidies for the Continuing Education Division. Currently this operates on a self-amortizing system; that is, all the students who use it must pay the total overhead and operating costs. The University wants funds for the "administrative overhead and program development costs" to be provided by the state.

Second-class postage is paid in Amherst. THE DAILY COLLEGIAN publishes Monday through Friday during the academic year, except during vacation, exam periods or holidays. Accepted for mailing under the authority of an act of March 8, 1879, as amended by an act of June 11, 1943. Subscription rates are $6.00 per semester or $10.00 per year.

Lecture Note Program Revised

By SHELLEY LAUZON

Several major policy changes have been announced by the Student Senate Lecture Note Program, formerly the Student Educational Service (SES).

Unlike the past, notes will be taken only in those courses where permission is granted by the professor. Contracts are signed by the professor to protect his copyright, and all notes are seen by the professor after printing. Any necessary revisions will be printed in the following set of notes.

Notes are being sold for the first time on a daily basis - 25¢ for 50 minute and 40¢ for 75 minute lectures, in addition to the 1/2 semester prices of $2.75 for two 50 minute lectures and $4.00 for 75 minute or 3 lectures per week. If the program is successful, the $4.00 price may be lowered next semester, if not at the 1/2 semester mark in October.

The aim of the program is not to make a profit but to break even. Future emphasis will be placed on expanding the program from the present 33 courses, with enrollments over 200, to the smaller enrolled courses, and the lowering of the $4.00 fee.

Approximately 20 students work for the program. All are paid by program funds, which come entirely from subscriptions. There are 16 student notetakers, 6 of which are student's wives. The expansion of the program will require more notetakers, thus opening up more jobs to the student body. Any profits which do result will be returned to other student programs.

The program belongs to the Senate but is run by a Board of Directors. Four students appointed by the Senate and one faculty member appointed by the Faculty Senate are voting member. Non voting ex officio members are the Chairman of the Student Affairs Committee, Chairman of the Services Committee, Treasurer of the Senate, and the manager of the note service.

Notes may be purchased anytime during the 1/2 semester and will include all lectures from the beginning of the semester. They can be picked up anytime during the week at the Lecture Note office, located in the lobby of the Student Union. Office hours are 10 a.m. - 3:30 p.m. Monday through Friday.

School of Ed Offers New Group Dynamics Course

The Center for Human Relations at the School of Education is offering, for the first time this fall, a course in group dynamics for undergraduates. Titled "Educ ——, Laboratory in Applied Group Dynamics", it has previously been offered on a graduate level only. Advanced Doctoral students under the supervision of Center staff members Donald Carew, Don Mastriano, and Pete Sherrard will serve as trainers.

This course is primarily intended to be a labooratory training experience which will focus on personal growth and group development. The major part of the classroom time will be devoted to T-Group sessions which will provide an opportunity for each participant to: develop a greater insight into himself and his personal value system and an awareness of his impact on other people; increase his sensitivity to the feelings of others and his understanding of the behavior of others and how this affects him; examine and experience the forces that operate in a group as well as his own effectiveness in assuming roles that are needed in building and maintaining a group; and relate the small group experiences to the process of change, motivation, leadership, organization and larger social systems. Outside reading and theory and skill sessions in class, hopefully will contribute to an understanding of group dynamics theory and practice as well as to individual development.

The course will meet for seven weeks, beginning Sept. 26 through Nov. 2, on Tues. and Thurs. from 4-6:30. The first two sessions will be for orientation and information sharing with the lab meeting for the remaining six. A number of openings are available and can be registered for in Rm. 121 at the School of Education. If you would like more information concerning the nature of the course, call the Center (5-0915).

Lynch, Senate Reps Establish 3rd World Election Procedures

By DON BISHOP

Procedures for the election of 15 Third World representatives to the Student Senate were established yesterday afternoon between representatives of the Senate and Acklyn Lynch of the Third World Alliance.

The action follows upon the decision of the Student Senate on last Wednesday to provide for the Third World student representation.

While the registration and election procedures were being drawn up yesterday there remained a threat that the reapportionment move would be challenged in the UMass student courts and possibly in US District Court. Ex-student senator Matt Tackeff has stated he will do this.

Meeting with Lynch yesterday were Patty Azack, Larry Ladd, John Hogan, and David Booker, all of the Senate. The most significant item agreed upon yesterday was to allow students to register to vote in the Senate elections at the New Africa House, instead of in their dorms.

Registration will begin today and run until the deadline: Tuesday Sept. 26. However the deadline for filing Senate nomination papers will be at 5 PM on Friday, Sept. 22. 25 signatures are needed for nomination, and only those students who have registered to vote at the New Africa House by the 22nd will be eligible to sign nomination papers.

Any undergraduate is eligible to hold a Third World seat or to register for Third World voting. By registering at New Africa House, the student limits his voting to that area rather than his own dormitory.

Registration sheets will also be circulated until Sept. 26 throughout campus dorms for the Sept. 28 Senate elections.

It should be pointed out that elections for dorm and area government representatives will be carried on as usual within the dorms. The Senate reapportionment measure is not setting up a new area government.

Acklyn Lynch commented after the meeting about the Senate's move. He stated that the Third World Alliance views the proposal "as a very progressive step in the University community." Members of the Alliance met Thursday and Saturday, and came out in favor of the motion.

Lynch feels that it provides "a genuine opportunity for the adequate representation of minority students on campus." He feels that with the history of the campus, and the recent drawing in of minority students, that "representation would never have come without a progressive step."

According to Lynch, there was a sense of frustration among minority students who participated in student government in the past. This was mainly due to the lack of a "supportive base", that will now be present by having the 15 Third World seats.

He feels that the minority representation "will provide for a healthy and a more active political environment", as minority students can more actively express their views on certain issues.

Debate Tonight

A candidate debate has been scheduled for tonight between at least two of the Democratic primary candidates in this 2nd Hampshire District. Democratic incumbent James R. Nolen and challenger James G. Collins have agreed to debate, starting at 7:00 p.m. in MacKimmie Lounge in Southwest. The other Democratic candidate, Edmund Scheinost, may possibly attend.

Business Seminars Explain Programs

By ROBERT SHEIER

A conference on community, jobs, and business development was held at UMass Friday, aimed more at telling businessmen, local town officials, and labor leaders about existing programs than announcing new ones.

The conference, sponsored by Rep. Silvio Conte of the First District (R-Mass.) was attended by regional administrators of six federal agencies, many state and local officials, and the administrator of the Small Business Administration (SBA).

"No one will be passing out grants, small business loans, or federal contracts here today," said Rep. Conte. "But we do have the chance to learn about applying for those grants and loans, and how to go about bidding on those contracts."

Seminars were held on business assistance, pollution abatement, government procurement, community development and revenue sharing, tax problems, and wage-price information, employment assistance, and export opportunities.

The regional director of the Veteran's Administration, William Connors, said young veterans are returning to a tight labor market, and that many of them have few skills.

He told the seminar on employment assistance that many training positions should be moved to private industry, citing small auto-body repair shops as a good area to develop apprenticeship programs for veterans.

The administrator of the Small Business Administration, Thomas S. Kleppe, told the conference the administration had increased its lending activity by 16 per cent in the state during the last fiscal year, from $35 million to $40.6 million.

Following the seminars, Conte said the conference had "planted the germ" for many new programs, but that the programs themselves depended on the local officials, businessmen, and union representatives attending the conference.

Nolen and challenger James G. Collins have agreed to debate, starting at 7:00 PM in MacKimmie Lounge in Southwest. The other democratic candidate Edmund Scheinost may possibly attend.

SWAP To Meet Tonight

SWAP, a student organization working for improved relations between students, faculty, and administration, is having its first meeting tonight at 7:00 in Campus Center 174.

The SWAP committee describes its organization as providing "a forum for discussion of University Problems at an off-campus setting, where issues pertaining to this campus are debated in order to attempt reforms and new solutions." The only organization of its type on the UMass campus, SWAP also claims to cut through the red tape of the campus administration and promote more one-to-one relationships between students and administration.

SWAP considers this conference the one weekend during the year when students, administration and faculty join together in conference off campus, without having to break through the barriers of office-holders within the campus.

Israelis Return Home For Holy Day

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

An Israeli army raiding force finished up their search-and-destroy mission against Arab guerrillas in Lebanon and returned home Sunday just before sundown-the beginning of Yom Kippur, the Jews' holiest holiday.

The Israeli military command in Tel Aviv termed the 32-hour operation a success, saying "an estimated 60 terrorists were killed" and 150 guerrilla houses and bunkers destroyed. Israeli losses were placed at three soldiers killed and six wounded.

A Lebanese communique said the Israelis lost 18 soldiers in fighting on Saturday. It also claimed that seven Israeli tanks and six halftrack combat vehicles were destroyed.

The communique issued in Beirut added that eight Lebanese soldiers were killed, 12 wounded, 20 missing and three taken prisoner.

It said preliminary reports on overall casualties after Saturday's operations indicated 61 persons killed, wounded or missing.

The Israeli communique said: "The Lebanese army, having intervened, also suffered losses." It gave no figures.

Sixteen Arab villages were searched during the operation, and Israeli air force jets bombed and rocketed another eight guerrilla encampments and two guerrilla headquarters complexes, the Israelis said.

Booty captured in the assault, said the communique, included Communist-made Katyusha rockets, landmines and ammunition, all of which were "demolished on the spot."

The Israeli air force knocked out two bridges across the Litani River, bombed eight guerrilla emplacements on the slopes of Mt. Hermon, and rocketed two guerrilla headquarter complexes, Israeli spokesmen said.

Israel's chief of staff, Lt. Gen. David Elazar, said the invasion operation had been a complete success. He claimed the raid destroyed infrastructure of guerrilla bases, and that far more Arab commandos would have been killed if they had not fled before the Israeli advance.

"I can assure you we will pursue and root out the terrorists wherever they may be," declared Prime Minister Golda Meir in an emotional radio speech marking the beginning of Yom Kippur.

Arab states that support terrorists "will not succeed in disrupting our national existence," she added.

A military correspondent of the state radio said Israel now expects the Lebanese army to assume control of the guerrilla-infested southern region, which would make further Israeli invasions unnecessary.

A pooled dispatch from two correspondents who accompanied the Israeli raiding party said this resistance came from a Lebanese army bunker seven miles inside Lebanon near the village of Beit Yahoun. The Lebanese opened up with recoilless rifle fire and then there was an exchange of artillery fire. Israeli tanks moved up and pounded the bunker and jets strafed it from above. The village was enveloped in smoke, but nearby Arab farmers continued working in their fields.

Associated Press correspondent Harry Dunphy reported later that there were huge craters at Beit Yahoun and telephone lines dangled limply beside the road. A Lebanese army jeep, apparently a victim of a direct hit by a tank shell, was a wreck.

Dunphy's dispatch said as many as 40 tanks and armored personnel carriers had poured through the gray and buff colored hills in the area-an indication that more than 100 combat vehicles were involved in the entire operation.

He reported Juwayya was the worst hit in Lebanon. Residents there claimed that civilians, women, children and even livestock were killed or wounded in the fighting.

Mid-East Peace Sought By U.N. General Assembly

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) — A report from Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim on the eve of a new General Assembly session promised Sunday that U.N. officials will keep trying for a Middle East peace settlement though even indirect Arab-Israeli talks seem unlikely now.

The report was the first since Waldheim took office Jan. 1 on the activities of Gunnar Jarring, for almost five years the secretary-general's special representative to promote settlement of the 1967 AArab-Israeli war.

Jarring, also Swedish ambassador to Moscow, is expected back here soon for new contacts with key Middle East foreign ministers who will be on hand for the assembly's 27th session starting Tuesday. They are Abba Eban of Israel, Mohammed Hassan el Zayyat of Egypt and Salah Abu Zeid of Jordan.

Waldheim's report, relating Jarring's intermittent soundings of those governments in the last nine months, had a pessimistic tone.

"In spite of our continued efforts," he said, "it has not been possible to make any substantial progress.

"As can be seen from published statements of the parties, an agreed basis for discussions under Ambassador Jarring's auspices does not seem to exist at the present time.

"Despite this situation, we shall continue our efforts."

Jarring's assignment under a Security Council resolution of Nov. 22, 1967, is to promote agreement on a settlement based on Israeli withdrawal from occupied Arab territories and Arab acceptance of Israel's existence.

...And That's A Lot Of Wheat

WASHINGTON (AP) — Baked into loaves and laid end to end, the 400 million bushels of U.S. wheat sold to the Soviet Union this year would make a bread line five million miles long, enough to wrap around the earth 200 times.

Nothing quite like it has ever burst so suddenly onto the farm scene. Last month's wheat price jumpt was the sharpest in 25 years, burdensome surpluses are fading and growers throughout the vast bread belt are talking about boosting production next year.

And therein lies a threat for the future.

Probably two-thirds of an estimated $1 billion or more worth of U.S. farm sales to the Soviets will be wheat. In sheer statistical form, the sale is staggering.

—In volume, it equals about one-fourth of this year's wheat crop; conservatively, according to officials, the sales will make 1972 wheat production worth $2.4 billion, about 10 per cent more than last year's crop value because of higher prices.

—Agriculture Secretary Earl L. Butz said it will create between 25,000 and 30,000 additional jobs for at least one year.

—If followed up by sustained farm sales to Moscow, could mean an era for American farms in world trade, which already is taking production from one out of four acres harvested.

Wheat is not the most valuable crop in terms of dollars or impact on the consumer. Corn is far larger in production and value. Soybeans are the glamor stocks of the farm belt, also larger in dollar value.

But wheat is grown commercially in at least 42 states and, since biblical times, has had the staff-of-life prestige shared by no other farm commodity.

Ironically, it was wheat from Russia-painstakingly carried to the plains of Kansas by Mennonite immigrants a century ago-that led to the situation today.

Kansas and other plains states, stretching from Texas to the Dakotas, account for most of the "winter" type, the kind planted in the fall and harvested the following summer.

The plains version has a hard kernel favored by bakers for bread-making because of its abundance and quality. Winter wheat also is the type mostly being sold to Russia.

Of a total wheat crop this year, winter wheat comprised about 1.2 billion bushels, 309 million of it produced in Kansas.

Winter wheat also is grown in the Eastern and Southeastern states, but it is "soft" because of higher rainfall in those areas. It is used for cookies, crackers, cake mixes and for mixing with hard wheat in bread-making.

In Brief . . .

UN Report Shows Imbalance In Food Production

ROME (AP) - The hungry countries of the world fell short of their goals in food production last year, while countries which had enough to eat produced surpluses, a U.N. report said Sunday.

Although the world's agricultural output rose 3 per cent, the increase was only 1 to 2 per cent in the underdeveloped nations, said the U.N. Food and Agriculture Organization. Their goal, set by the United Nations had been 4 per cent.

FAO said the number of undernourished in the world showed no noticeable change from the previous U.N. estimate of 300 million to 500 million.

Senate Ponders Busing Bill

WASHINGTON (AP) - The irresistible force is confronting the immovable object as the Senate ponders a House-passed bill to apply strict limits on busing for desegregation purposes.

A band of Senate supporters of the bill insists there is an irresistible demand for it in the country-at least in their sections.

But its foes, mostly civil-rights advocates, say they are fully determined to stop it and willing to use any tactics to do so.

3 American POW's Released

HANOI (AP) - An American mother joyfully clasped her prisoner-of-war son, and an American wife embraced her husband in a room hot with glaring television lights and emotion Sunday night in Hanoi.

It was a unique release ceremony for three American pilots who had been shot down over North Vietnam.

Olga Charles, 27, who had flown from San Diego, Calif., and had her hair washed and set in a downtown Hanoi beauty shop Sunday in anticipation of the release, fought through a wall of Vietnamese and European television technicians and cameramen to embrace her husband.

Navy Lt. Norris Charles, dressed neatly in a new, grey civilian suit, held her warmly.

Minnie Lee Gartley from Dunedin, Fla., who for the past four years had actively picketed Congress and the White House for an end to the war and the release of her Navy pilot son, Lt. Markham Gartley, put her arms around the tall blond man. "He's even better looking than I had remembered," she said.

Also released was Air Force Maj. Edward Elias, who until Saturday had expected his wife or his father to come and get him. In a statement before microphones, Elias said: "I have been told that for various reasons they could not make it, but I will be seeing them soon."

Freedom for American POWs has been a major political issue between supporters and opponents of U.S. policy in the Indochina war. President Nixon has set release of the prisoners as a precondition for a settlement of the conflict. Peace activists argue that the fate of POWs remains in jeopardy for as long as U.S. bombing of the North continues.

Each of the pilots made a statement into microphones before the official release. They said they had been fitted for new clothes and that they were in good health. They will stay with the two American women and the rest of a delegation of American peace activists until their return home later in the week.

The released prisoners-one of whom, Gartley, 28, had been imprisoned for four years-slid easily into freedom. After the 40-minute release ceremony at the People's Army quarters, they were escorted into waiting automobiles and drove out past a group of about 30 North Vietnamese civilians to a banquet at the Hoa Binh hotel.

In a statement before microphones prior to his release, Elias, 34, said, "I was a little disappointed not to see my relatives here tonight. However, I feel I will see them very soon. I sincerely hope and pray that this act of release will be a great step to the end of the war and for the future release of all POWs both here and in the south."

Charles, 27, said, "First I would like to express my appreciation for my release to my family. Secondly I would like to thank the Vietnamese people for the humane treatment and generosity they have shown me. Finally, I would like to say that I am a happy man but I cannot truly be happy until this was is terminated. By ending the war people with whom I have lived feel that much suffering and hardship will end and also this will assure their return home to their loved ones, and to their loved ones they want to return."

U.S. Jets Hit Depots

SAIGON (AP) - U.S. jets set fire to fuel, ammunition and storage facilities in raids in the Hanoi corridor and shot down the 169th MIG of the war, but stayed away from the North Vietnamese capital itself, the U.S. Command announced Sunday.

The closest the planes came to Hanoi in the attacks Saturday was 16 miles, the command reported. Eight targets were hit, at points ranging from 16 miles southeast of Hanoi to 60 miles northwest, the U.S. announcement said.

The U.S. Command also announced the loss of five American aircraft, but said all 10 crewmen were rescued. Two were lost south of Da Nang where enemy forces launched a new wave of attacks that threatened three towns.

A U.S. F4 Phantom and an OV10 spotter plane crashed after mechanical failures Sunday, and the four crewmen were rescued. The F4 went down in the South China Sea off Da Nang. The OV10 crashed southwest of Quang Tri city near the Laos border, spokesmen said.

An Air Force F4 Phantom was shot down by antiaircraft artillery fire over North Vietnam on Saturday. The two crewmen, Capts. Frederick R. Cunliffe of Shaker Heights, Ohio, and William A. Kangas of Hibbing, Minn., bailed out over the Tonkin Gulf 45 miles northeast of Dong Hoi. They were rescued in good condition by a whaleboat from the guided missile frigate Preble, the U.S. Navy said.

A U.S. adviser also was killed at Mo Duc, during a shelling attack Saturday, the command said.

Air Force F4 Phantoms attacked a fuel depot leading off the main pipeline from China 34 miles northeast of Hanoi. Pilots said they destroyed seven 5,000 gallon fuel tanks, heavily damaged 10 other tanks and destroyed numerous 55-gallon drums of fuel.

The Air Force said the North Vietnamese MIG 21 was shot down 45 miles northeast of Hanoi by F4 fighters escorting attack planes. It was the 58th MIG downed this year, the U.S. Command said.

Field reports said enemy troops had seized the southern half of a village three miles northeast of Mo Duc, and were holding civilians as hostages. One woman who tried to flee was shot.

An unknown number of civilians were reported wounded in crossfire.

McG: Rid America of Heroin

HUNTINGTON, W. Va. (AP) — President Nixon has failed to slow heroin addiction in the United States because he was unwilling to crack down on allies in the Southeast Asia war who are involved in the drug traffic, George McGovern said yesterday.

McGovern promised top priority to "ridding America of the heroin plague" as he left Washington for a 12-day campaign swing aimed principally at the populous Northeast.

Although his first scheduled stop was in traditionally Democratic West Virginia, his itinerary suggested he is keying his presidential bid to states where a big bloc of electoral votes is concentrated.

McGovern said he is challenging Nixon, who participates in a State Department conference today on the international drug traffic, "to explain how the North Vietnamese are a greater threat to our national security than the crime, violence and internal decay caused by narcotics."

Nixon has failed to prevent Southeast Asia from emerging as a major source of heroin supply, McGovern said, and continued:

"The reason that Richard Nixon has been unable to prevent this is that our allies in Laos, Thailand and South Vietnam are involved in the narcotics trade. The administration does not crack down on them because it needs air bases in Thailand, Lao mercenaries, and Vietnamese soldiers to fight its war."

"The administration's claims of impressive seizures, important arrests, and growing international cooperation simply cannot cover up its failures," McGovern said.

McGovern demanded also that President Nixon suspend Secretary of Agriculture Earl L. Butz and other officials who participated in arranging a grain sale to the Soviet Union, pending an investigation of allegations that big grain corporations were given an advantage.

McGovern has contended the administration withheld from the public information about the pending sale, but that some large grain exporters learned enough to enable them to buy up wheat at low prices.

Butz has called the accusations "a bald faced lie."

McGovern said in a telegram to Nixon "the evidence already in the record on the Russian grain deal suggests that it would be wise to suspend Secretary Butz and his grain trader staff until congressional and General Accounting Office investigations have been satisfactory concluded to restore farmer and taxpayer confidence."

McGovern's trip takes him to many of the same states he has visited in the past two weeks, but with a new face added to his road show.

Sen. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine, who lost in his bid against McGovern and others for the Democratic presidential nomination, is to campaign with McGovern at least two days this week. Last week Massachusetts Sen. Edward M. Kennedy appeared with McGovern for 3-1/2 days.

Missing from the entire first month of McGovern's fulltime campaign that started Labor Day will be a significant effort in the South, much of the Midwest and Rocky Mountain states.

Except for this trip to West Virginia, and stops in Billings, Mont., and his home state of South Dakota next weekend, McGovern is holding to his apparent selective strategy.

Nixon Seeks Italian Vote

MITCHELLVILLE, Md. (AP)-Stepping up the tempo of his low-profile reelection campaign, President Nixon made a surprise visit to an Italian-American picnic Sunday, and toured a Catholic-sponsored home for the elderly.

Nixon decided on short notice to fill in for daughter Tricia Cox, who couldn't keep a scheduled date at the Italian Fall Festival in this small Maryland community near Washington.

To the delight of a crowd which sponsors estimated at 10,000, the President said, "Every time I've been in Italy and every time I'm at an Italian picnic, I think I have some Italian blood."

The chief executive's appearance seems to underscore his drive for the Catholic vote, a bloc often identified with the Democratic party. Nixon linked arms with two members of the Order of Scalabrina Fathers as he worked his way through the crowd gathered on a steamy Sunday afternoon to taste pizza, Italian sausages and meatball sandwiches.

When he reached the bandstand, he had words of praise for Italian-Americans, telling the cheering crowd they have "a strong sense of patriotism.

"They are proud of their Italian background, but they are proud first of being Americans."

Nixon cited the Italians' love of their families and, before starting down a grassy hill to visit the Villa Rosa Nursing Home, he said all Americans should give the elderly "the respect they deserve."

The picnic and festival are held to raise funds for the nursing home, and Nixon had an aide donate several bills-the precise amount undisclosed.

American Party V.P. Knocks Opposition

BALTIMORE, Md. (AP) — Thomas J. Anderson, vice presidential candidate of the American Party, criticized President Nixon, George McGovern and long list of other politicians during weekend appearances in Maryland.

Anderson appeared at a news conference and testimonial dinner Saturday, and then preached a sermon Sunday at the Church of the Upper Room.

Some 250 persons paid $10 each for Saturday night's testimonial dinner, then chipped in an additional $3,000 in contributions and pledges as the affair ended.

Anderson levelled his strongest attacks on both Nixon and Democratic presidential nominee McGovern, but he also criticized former President Lyndon Johnson, the late Dwight Eisenhower and Massachusetts Sen. Edward T. Kennedy.

"Switching from Lyndon Johnson to Nixon is getting a divorce and then being awarded custody of your wife's parents," he said.

Declaring that the United States is bankrupt, he said that "bankrupts can't carry the rest of the world on their shoulders." As for Vice President Spiro T. Agnew, Anderson insisted that "Spiro Agnew has always been a leftist."

And as for McGovern, he said the South Dakota senator "makes me wish birth control would be retroactive."

He insisted McGovern's nomination was part of a national conspiracy to assure the reelection of Nixon.

Submarine Program Expansion Planned

WASHINGTON (AP) - Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., said Sunday the Defense Department plans a major expansion and revision of the Navy's Trident submarine program.

Proxmire said the new plans were approved by Deputy Secretary of Defense Kenneth Rush in an Aug. 30 program decision memorandum to the Navy.

They would increase from 10 to 16 the number of new Trident submarines which Congress will be asked to fund during the next five years, Proxmire reported.

"At the same time," he said in a statement, "these plans would scrap the proposed retrofit of Poseidon submarines with Trident 1 missiles previously planned for the late 1970s.

"The net effect of the new plans is to kill a sound missile retrofit program which has attracted widespread congressional support and to expand further a dubious submarine construction effort which the Senate nearly rejected a month ago."

You, the Student . . .

You, the Individual

Upon your registration as an undergraduate at the University, you immediately become a member of the Student Government Association. As an individual within that association, you have unique thoughts and feelings which may be as useful to your fellow members as they are to you. For together, you have a mutual struggle for survival within this community.

Or rather the concept of community. A resident only speaks of creating a community; it takes a concerned citizen to do the actual building. Your commitment to help build will bring us one step closer to transforming that concept into a reality.

Without that step, you weaken your right to representation and the means to participate in university decision-making.

The Student Government Association is composed of individuals. It takes an individual to make a commitment.

Puerto Rican Power Urged by Brooke

Sen. Edward W. Brooke, R—Mass., told Purto Rican community leaders in Springfield yesterday the most important answer to their problems is "political power."

Brooke said the beginning of that process came when Gov. Francis W. Sargent appointed Cristobal Rodriguez of 132 Abbe Ave. as the state's first Puerto Rican justice of the peace.

"I hope this is just the beginning for Puerto Ricans to be active in positions of power in the community," he told 25 persons at a luncheon in the North End.

Later, Brooke toured the Massachusetts building at the Eastern States Exposition as a part of a helicopter campaign swing through Massachusetts.

At a luncheon at the LaPalma Club at 3304 Main St., he urged Puerto Ricans "not to register to vote for me, but simply to register to vote. Political power is the most important power you can possibly have because it leads to green power."

On the welfare problem, he said he will "look closely at any discrimination or irregularities in the distribution and use of welfare funds."

Brooke said his main concern is making sure that Puerto Rican families do not stay on welfare for successive generations.

"I'm more concerned about the ability of Puerto Ricans and other minority groups to receive training and jobs so they can improve their own lives," he said. "Puerto Ricans are very proud people and I don't want to see Puerto Ricans live in a perpetual welfare system."

Brooke said facts and statistics show that it is not true, as some people believe, that "the welfare rolls consist of only lazy people who don't want work. The great majority of persons on welfare are children and mothers without husbands who in most instances are not able to work."

Brooke said poor living conditions in Puerto Rico force many Puerto Ricans to migrate to the United States, where they are unable to find jobs.

He said he would favor programs to raise the minimum wages to a "decent level" in Puerto Rico.

Is This The Answer?

By ROBERT L. SCHEIER

Last April, over 2,000 students jammed into the Student Union ballroom watched in anguish as the student strike tore itself apart over the issue of "Third World" participation.

Last Wednesday night, a scattering of senators reapportioned the student senate to guarantee 15 seats to members of the "Third World." Following the vote, a student senator walked out in protest.

The strike meeting was tense and chaotic, as philosophical arguments about the direction of the strike and procedural questions about who should speak next dissipated the energy of the strike in much head-shaking and muttering among disgusted onlookers.

The senate meeting, on the other hand; was poorly attended, even by senators, and the evening was full up to the vote itself.

At the strike, the issue was where blacks, Spanish speaking persons, and Chicanos fit into a mostly white, middle class strike. Anguished speakers shouted to themselves and the audience--"Why are there few black faces here tonight?"

The same question, phrased almost exactly the same way, echoed in the debate over the reapportionment. Supporters of the move argue black senators cannot function in a mostly white senate; opponents say black persons have just as much an opportunity to run for the senate as others.

The answer the strikers arrived at was racism--but not racism of the United States government or even the University of Massachusetts administration, but racism among the students at UMass.

Accordingly, the official objectives of the strike were broadened from the war in Vietnam to include "racism and sexism" on the UMass campus.

The same motive--the elimination of racism--was behind the senate's action in guaranteeing the Third World seats.

Beneath the questions of whether seats should now, as some say, be guaranteed to other minority groups and whether a black senator has any place in the UMass student senate is the fact of black-white relations at UMass.

A look into a dining commons. dormitory, or student activity shows that, for the most part, blacks and whites on this campus have not learned to live or work together. In this respect, UMass is like the "outside world," with as little success in changing the situation.

James Collins

Most people tend to ignore their state representatives. We rage and argue when the Massachusetts House kills abortion or tax reform, but usually don't bother to find out how our own local representative voted.

Tomorrow there will be a primary in the state. Each representative will be up for re-nomination. It's a chance to change things a bit, especially around Amherst where an ex-UMass student by the name of Jim Collins is running.

Collins, who is rated by the pros as having a good chance to win a seat in November is the closest to the "ideal" candidate the pioneer Valley has seen. Collins is in favor of tax reform, replacing the current system with a graduated and progressive income tax. That system would mean for example, that a family of five with an income of $10,000 would pay up to 60% less in state taxes. Any family earning up to $26,000 would pay less in taxes. Yet, the state could earn $200 to $400 million in new taxes each year.

On welfare Collins is for a federal guaranteed annual income to replace the present system, asking the federal and state governments to take the initiative to find jobs for all who can work, and having the government supply educational and support services needed to people in holding a job.

Abortion he feels to be a personal moral question, one not of the state's concern. He is firmly against the state legislating on personal moral matters.

Collins was, and is against the Montague Dump, and a firm believer in recycling and preserving the environment. He realizes what impact a serious ecological program would have upon society, and stresses that working people must not pay with their jobs for other's mistakes.

Most of all, Jim Collins is real. He has traveled door to door through the seven towns of this district, talking with the voters face to face about their problems. If elected to the House of Representatives he will be the people's man, serving our needs and interests.

A Better Senate

By JOHN HOGAN

This year will mark my 4th year as a member of the Undergraduate Student Senate. In that time, the Senate has sponsored some worthwhile projects: teacher/course descriptions and evaluations, open house projects, the transit service, the note-taking program, the attorney for students, etc. During the same time, it has evolved into a minor state of bureaucracy and partial elitism and double-talk. There have been comparatively few steps made to make the Senate into a real sounding board for the general and specific student groups.

Last Wednesday, the Senate finally took a real stand on this issue. It re-apportioned itself to include 15 seats to students who want to introduce the "new" voice of 3rd World feelings to organized student government. I say "new" because 3rd World presence has not been felt in the Senate during my four years. Black students have been elected to the Senate, along with 100 white students. The minority students are forced to a role where they must speak for the entire black race or the whole Latin American heritage if they wish to debate on the Senate floor. So the result is obvious: they resign, for the pressure far outweights the benefits. And I cannot say that I would not do the same if the roles were reversed.

The motion for the re-apportionment did not pass smoothly, or without opposition. It was not a black-white debate, neither was it a liberal-conservative one. It was rather a basic attack on the system as it currently exists.

The Senate has claimed to be a representative body since its creation in 1948. It has ceased to be that for a long time; the Senate does not argue about a specific dorm or commuter project. The Senators do not debate or think as a particular dorm Senator either. Rather, they think and act as a student, with various student concerns as the motivating force. The Senate does not dole out govt. contracts or give certain dorms bonuses for supporting administration projects. Rather, they try to look after the interests of the various factions of the student body. It is for the area governments to act as the House of Representatives and to speak to specific dorm needs. It is up to the Senate to relinquish enough authority and influence to allow them to do that. But this is a long-range goal, which the Senate will hopefully reach.

To return to the Senate's vote, we find that for one year the Senate has aligned itself in such a manner that people who feel that they can add a new perspective to student government now have a clearer avenue. They do not have to feel obligated to represent the white viewpoint of their dorm, if they happen to be of a national origin that is African, or Oriental. They can speak as a Cuban or Indian or Chicano. Or they can speak as a sympathetic white, for an undergraduate can be elected to one of these seats, as well as vote for the Senators, providing only that they register.

Finally, I want to explain the number. The number was chosen so as to assure serious intent on the part of the Senate. Early criticism will probly cry "tokenism" or "compromising." To this, I say "Bullshit." 15% is no token measure-15% is a real interest and a real attempt of change in what has been out-of-touch government. I have little doubt that some people on this campus will approach the Senate and ask that Senate seats be apportioned to pregnant Irish Hindus with Italian husbands. To these proposals, I can only say that I am 100% serious in my effort to promote good student government, and that they make an honest effort to understand this, rather than try to ridicule ideas. To ridicule is much easier than to try to be constructive.

This year should be a productive year in student government. I see interim, one year proposals as an effective means of stimulating reform and promoting real value in everyday life at UMass. If there is disagreement, why not find the Senate office in the CC? Or why not come to a Wednesday night meeting? If you take the time, you can be surprised.

'MY JURY'S BAD ENOUGH WITHOUT HOFFA TAMPERING WITH IT'

McGovern's Dilemma

By GABE IMPERATO and ED FOGARTY

You get the feeling that there is a large segment of the population that is looking for an excuse to vote for McGovern. The McGovern campaign is officially two weeks old and to date is still looking for a coherent strategy on which to gain points on the Nixon lead. This search has lead to indecision within the McGovern staff, and subsequently with potential McGovern voters.

The McGovern campaign to date has been one of exploiting moods and feelings within the country. It has been a restatement of popular feeling against the Viet-Nam War, of concern for reordering of priorities, and of a need for honesty, credibility and morality in government. This campaign style carried McGovern in his primary races, which could be best described as value-oriented. Now that McGovern is a presidential candidate the demands of his campaign require an adjustment of strategy. Values alone will not be enough to acquire the confidence the electorate needs to vote in McGovern. The values that McGovern has voiced fit well with America, he has demonstrated his philosophical credibility. But this is not the only requirement of the presidential role. He must also instill a confidence within the electorate of his political capabilities. Those undecided could be looking for just such an assurance.

At present the McGovern capaign is stalled in a mire of indecision about whether to emphasize a value-oriented campaign or a campaign to demonstrate confidence in his ability to handle the Presidency. McGovern's recent overtures to Mayor Daley and his barnstorming with Ed Kennedy seem to indicate an effort in the latter direction. However, he still has a way to go to instill in the electorate the confidence required to win an election. McGovern's abilities to handle the job are within the man, it is the voters that must be assured of this. This could be the excuse the undecided voters need to vote in the McGovern column. If the McGovern campaign does not instill this confidence, then many of those undecided may vote for Nixon by default.

Undecided voter beware!...a default vote for Nixon brings with it another four years of Nixon policies, Nixon perspectives and Nixon Agonistes.

Letters To The Editor

Time For A Change

To The Voters Of The University Community:

I'm Dick Wall, Democratic Candiate for the office of Hampshire County Treasurer. I am a Graduate Accountant, a life long resident of Hampshire County and presently a doctoral Candidate at UMass.

The office of Hampshire County Treasurer probably is not a vital force in our daily life. However, as citizens and voters I would ask that you consider the position at least on voting day. The County Treasurer's office spends 2 million dollars yearly in tax money. The Accounting system presently being used is precisely the one Bob Cratchett used when he was the accountant for the firm of Scrooge and Marley. No private business could afford the luxury of such an antiquated system.

The addition of one Bookkeeping machine in the Treasurers office could save the citizens of this County some $30,000 yearly and free the people in that office for the work that people do best - creative innovative work rather than brute clerical work. This is simply the beginning. The treasurer's office should provide a resource center available to all cities and towns of the County where information and expertise is available to assist the municipal governments to avail themselves of Federal and State grants and assistance. None of these things are being done at this time.

That is why I am seeking the office of Hampshire County Treasurer. I ask my friends in the Universiry Community to consider me at the polls, primary day, September 19 - Dick Wall, Democratic candidate for Hampshire County treasurer...But whether you vote for me or not, please vote. There are many candidates on the Democratic Primary ballot that need your help and support.

Dick Wall

Thank You

To The Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to personally thank those individuals who aided me in organizing what has unofficially been recorded as the most successful voter registration drive in the history of Massachusetts. The unofficial total was 759 registrants on September 12.

This letter would be far too long if I were to mention the names of everyone who helped, so I hope those individuals will forgive me and accept my gratitude. However there are some individuals who deserve special recognition and they are; Mrs. Estelle Matusko, the Amherst Town Clerk who was more than co-operative during the drive, Dick Howland the Attorney for Students whose advise was instrumental in the drive, Suzanne Devoe's hard work seemed to keep the whole effort from sinking at times and finally I want to thank John Stevens, the coordinator of the first voter registration drive on campus, for his helpful organizational hints.

Finally, I would like to urge that everyone approach the coming elections with the utmost seriousness. Status quo can no longer be accepted. Consider the candidates and inspect their records. In this immediate area, the student vote now has the power to sharply sway the outcome of all local elections.

The REAL Answer Is

To The Editor:

The answer to peanuts is 41, 10, and 7, respectively. The equations are:

$$S \cdot D = 8$$
$$M + 1 = 6D$$
$$M \div S = D + 24$$
$$M = 6S - 19$$
$$M \div 2S = 21 \qquad 3M = 6S + 63$$

Solving:

$$2M = 82$$
$$2S = 20$$
$$D = 7$$

$10 \div 7 = 3$
$42 \div 6 = 7$
$41 + 10 \div 7 + 10 + 20 + 14$

Racist Slur

To the Editor:

Bob Estelle's reply to Bill Foster's column on the use of the nickname "Redmen" for the UMass teams served to reinforce my initial impression of him, which was that he does not have the slightest idea of what he is talking about.

Be it understood, Mr. Estelle, that the term "Redman" is a racist slur. Nothing more or less. It represents the American Indian culture - and "fighting spirit" - no more adequately than "nigger" represents African culture, or "chink" represents Asian culture. The dropping of the term as a nickname for the athletic team is most emphatically not a denial of the heritage of Native Americans, but instead a long overdue move towards countering the racism which has been inflicted on them for some 350 years.

I believe that many Native Americans would be highly skeptical of your contention that "the days of these type of people (persons holding stereotyped images of Native Americans) are long gone". And not one of them would agree that the term "Redman" in any way represents the past of which they are rightfully proud.

David Miller

Honorable?

To The Editor:

When I read the piece by Ed Bryant in Thursday's Collegian I wasn't at all surprised to find myself mentioned, but I was chagrined to find myself referred to as someone with "The Honorable". I am in fact a member of the Undergraduate Student Senate of the U. of M.; however, I am not the honorable Peter Lewicke.

Give Us Ours

To the Editor:

This is a plea to the University of Massachusetts students for support in our quest for thirty seats in the senate for Franco-Americans on this campus. Although exact figures for percentage are unavailable, we feel sure that thirty seats is a modest demand. We realize that we are spread out all over campus, but this really can't be helped since we all have different interests. But we would like voting power in the senate. If you will simply consider the French Literature section in Goodell as a residential area, it will be easy to award us the thirty seats we deserve.

Paul H. Cormier

Editorial Points

Today we received another in a long series of Letters To The Editor concerning the changing of UMass team names, dropping the usage of the term Redmen. That doesn't seem to bother the cheerleaders, though. Their first cheer at the football game was a "Go, Redmen" cheer. Are they trying to start trouble, or what?

The Patriots could have used a cheer of some sort themselves yesterday. How can a team score 34 points against the Lions one week and 7 against the Bengals the next? Looks like another unpredictable season for the boys out in Foxboro.

What's all this in the news lately about the "New Republican Majority"? Can Dick really pull the big one off this November? We'll have to see this "New Majority" to believe it. Maybe it's like Tom Dewey's secret plan to beat Harry Truman.

****

Male Chauvinist of the Week award goes to Pope Paul who has officially refused to allow women to take part in any type of priestly duties. Wait till Ms. gets their hands on this one.

Looks like the new rule forcing many Juniors to live on Campus again this year has created a housing shortage. Well, at least it'll be a lot tougher for the Administration to ask for a rent increase next Spring. They have all the occupancy they can handle.

Trashy Coffee Shop

To The Editor:

I'm sitting outside of the coffee shop today because I can't stand to go in there, or the Hatch, anymore. Perhaps I'm being overly sensitive, for nobody else seems to mind the piles of garbage, cigarette butts and spilled drinks all over. It's not the garbage itself which bothers me; I've thrown away other people's refuse time and time again. But it makes me so damn sick inside to see everyone make a mess and just get up and walk away. Not a thought for anyone else. They only see the mess when it's in their way. Then they push it over, put it on another table, shove it onto the floor-never dispose of it properly. And the ones who complain about it the most turn around and leave their junk on top of it.

I mean, how stupid, how lazy and inconsiderate can people get? How can you students profess to be doing anything about ecology or brotherhood? And there aren't many exceptions to this mass carelessness-what do you do with your gum wrappers, cigarette ashes and butts, and burnt out matches?

A janitor just came by, and as I helped him pick up all the crap left strewn over the furniture here, we got into a conversation. And some of the things he told me made me so sick, I just wanted to cry. Like recently in the Blue Wall five or six people turned out all the lights and defecated on the tables. Defecated. Young adults, our hope for tomorrow. Please, please wake up and look at the world and the other people around you. But what's the use, even as I write this the guy across from me leaves his Coke can behind as he hurries away, obviously to something far more important.

Barbara Laflash

No Moe, Larry, Or Curly

To The Editor:

I, along with probably the rest of the campus, read in the Collegian for the last two days that the Three Stooges were to be shown in Mahar at 7 and 9:30 on Thursday night. I arrived at the auditorium with a few of my friends 15 minutes before the 9:30 show to get a good seat. When we arrived there were no tickets on sale and no signs of a movie. We along with 100 or 110 other loyal fans waited until after 9:30 when it became evident that our terrific trio was not going to be shown. What is the meaning of this Bullshit! Not only wasn't the movie shown (which was a huge disappointment) but the people running this program, didn't have the common courtesy of letting anyone know about it.

Purpose

Oh Jesus! Can you save me.
Then comes all of us.
I used to swim in the dark murky water.
It was cold and it reeked.
Freud's Mothers pulled me out.
The sun light blinded me.
I was shivering wet.
The oil stuck to my skin.
The questions will fall on you.
Crush you; take away your breath.
Go into the desert
where the hellish cold sun
Blinded and burned so many.
See their footprints on the warm dry sand.
Go and try to save the dying stragglers.
Give them cool clean water
To flood their parched lips.
Do this and you will learn.
And maybe.
You will see the derelict.
Friendless, lying in the cold dark night.
In the gutter. Filthy muddy gutter.
To remember seeing him on the beach,
The life guard.
And if you take him and show him the way.
Show him your hands.
That they don't grasp the knife
And never will,
Then you will know

POW's Mother Heads To Hanoi

DUNEDIN, Fla. (AP) — The United States government says Navy Lt. Markham Ligon Gartley bailed out of his crippled jet over North Vietnam on Aug. 10, 1968. His mother says it's been 1,499 days.

"I'm not a crier," Minnie Lee Gartley said in an interview as she was about to leave the United States for Hanoi to bring her son home. "I don't cry, I just determine what I can do about something.

"When Mark was shot down, I just made up my mind to fight and not give up. Sometimes I would get discouraged but then I would hear an encouraging word and I'd get another idea and away I'd go," she said.

Mark, 24, is one of three prisoners the North Vietnamese agreed to release. The others are Navy Lt. Norris Charles, 27, and Air Force Maj. Edward K. Elias, 34. Still in prison are 526 U.S. servicemen, according to Defense Department figures, and some 1,240 other Americans still are missing.

Mrs. Gartley went before Congress twice to plead for a settlement of the war based on a cease-fire between the United States and North Vietnam in return for a guarantee of safety for the prisoners and missing in action.

She has publicly attacked President Nixon's war policies, openly criticized military handling of the war, castigated the South Vietnamese government and marched for peace in nearly every major city in the country.

Last Wednesday night, along with Charles' wife Olga, she left for Hanoi accompanied by four peace activists to bring Mark and his two POW companions back to this country.

"My heart goes out particularly to those whose husbands, fathers and brothers aren't coming home," said Mrs. Gartley, 56, a high school history teacher.

"I know what it is to lose a loved one in the war. I will never stop my agitation for peace until all the prisoners are home, and all the missing are accounted for," she added.

For the first four months following Mark's imprisonment, Mrs. Gartley confined her struggles to her own conscience. She tried to keep her spirits and those of her husband who runs a summer fishing camp in Greenville, Maine and their younger son Jim, now 22, from sinking.

But shortly after his inauguration in January 1969, Nixon announced his Vietnamization policy. "Immediately, I saw that nothing in his plan would ever win this war for the United States. I realized right then that the prisoners would not be released, or the missing accounted for, until the war was over," Mrs. Gartley said.

"So I began to speak out...I refused to be silent despite the often-times painful opposition I encountered, even among other POW families," she said.

Council Asks World $ Reform

WASHINGTON (AP) - The world's richest countries should agree to accept dollars in balance-of-payments settlements without question until the international monetary system can be reformed, the influential Atlantic Council of the United States said Sunday.

The council, which includes a number of former high government officials, made the recommendation in a report on modernizing the world monetary system. It said that acceptance of dollars may be necessary because reform may take several years.

The report was prepared by the council's Monetary Committee, headed by former Treasury Secretary Henry Fowler. Other members of the panel include George W. Ball and Eugene V. Rostow, both former undersecretaries of state; and William McChesney Martin, former chairman of the Federal Reserve Board.

While the International Monetary Fund is working on the difficult problems of reforming the system, the United States should guarantee countries from losing on any further excess accumulation of dollars, the report said. This would be done by assuring countries that they would not lose by a future devaluation.

In the meantime, it recommended that the United States participate with other countries in keeping the current system of money-exchange rates at the present levels by intervening in the exchange markets if necessary.

The council, looking ahead to what should comprise the new monetary system, suggested that countries be required to devalue or revalue their currencies more promptly and in smaller amounts than in the past.

The report recommended the IMF be given more power to pressure countries into making exchange-rate changes, but it added that the ultimate discretion of devaluations or revaluations still should rest with national governments.

The council's report also attempted to deal with one of the stickiest problems remaining-how to get rid of the excess of about $54 billion piled up in foreign central banks or held by governments. This represents more than four times the amount of reserve assets of the United States.

The panel said countries holding dollars which they think are in excess of needed working balances should be allowed to deposit them with the IMF. In return, they would get a "currency deposit credit" from the IMF.

Then, in turn, the IMF would exchange the dollars for U.S. treasury obligations. These would be guaranteed in terms of special drawing rights, or "paper gold" against devaluation.

According to the council, this could help eliminate the excess dollars from the system.

According to the council, Special Drawing Rights known as "paper gold" would become the thing on which all currencies of the world would be valued. But the panel said that gold should remain as a part of reserves.

600 Somerville Teachers In Contempt Of Court?

SOMERVILLE, Mass. (AP) — More than 600 Somerville teachers have been ordered to appear in Middlesex Superior Court Monday to explain why they shouldn't be held in contempt of court for continuing their strike.

Meanwhile, another negotiating session was scheduled for Sunday in an attempt to resolve the contract impasse that has kept Somerville's schools closed since Sept. 8.

The teachers were ordered into court after they remained on strike in spite of a court injunction issued last week.

If the teachers fail to appear in court, said Judge Joseph S. Mitchell, Jr., he would issue warrants for their arrest.

"If they show up," he said, "it raises one problem. If they don't show up, it raises another problem."

He said he would probably try to see them in groups.

A mediator, Boston College Dean Donald White, was assigned to the case Thursday.

Teachers taught on the opening day of school, Sept. 7, but went on strike the next day when their contract expired.

Walsh Named Academic Adviser

Retired Fordham University President and Chairman of the Board Michael P. Walsh, S.J., has become adviser for Academic Affairs for the University of Massachusetts, President Robert Wood announced Friday.

"The Trustees and I are delighted that Father Walsh has accepted our offer," Wood said. "He will bring a wealth of talent to the University and its concerns."

The appointment marks the second time Wood has sought Reverend Walsh's counsel for the growing UMass. The former President of Boston College served on Wood's Committee on the Future University of Massachusetts, which studied the school for a year before presenting its report in December 1971.

"Father Walsh's leadership at Boston College and later at Fordham has established him as an educator of national stature," Wood declared. "His presence with us in these times that are crucial to the development not only of our own University, but of higher education in general, will be invaluable."

Walsh's assignment will focus on the evaluation and judgement of new educational policies and academic resources emerging within the multi-campus University.

"These are areas that concern us deeply," Wood said, "and I am sure that his guidance will significantly affect whatever steps this University will take."

A Trustee of the John Fitzgerald Kennedy Library in Cambridge, Walsh was graduated from Boston College High School in 1929, and from Boston College in 1934. He received his Ph.D. from Fordham in 1948.

He taught biology at Boston College from 1943 until 1858, while becoming chairman of the biology department in 1948. Boston College Trustees made him President of the institution in 1958, a position he held until his first retirement in 1968.

A year later, Trustees of Fordham asked him to become Chairman of their Board. He accepted, and assumed the Presidency shortly thereafter to restore the university's fiscal integrity. He retired from Fordham on the first of July.

Walsh is a trustee of Emmanuel College in Boston, Saint John's Seminary College in Brighton, and Loyola University, New Orleans, La.

"We will be fortunate to have Father Walsh's advice," Wood said, "on the important policy decisions the Trustees must make with regard to the development of our faculty and other resources within the University's three campuses."

Volunteers Go To Belchertown

The Belchertown Volunteers will begin thir weekly trips to Belchertown State School this Saturday, September 23rd. A tour of the buildings will be conducted.

The volunteers who are UMass students, both undergraduate and graduate, spend three hours on Saturday afternoons with the mentally retarded and physically handicapped residents of Belchertown. The volunteers can work with groups or on an individual basis with the residents who range in age from seven to seventy.

There are no special skills necessary to become a volunteer. The idea behind the Belchertown Volunteers is "People Helping People".

The Volunteers are an important and necessary group at Belchertown, where there are not enough staff members to give the residents the individual attention they require. They perform such tasks as taking residents out for walks; however without the volunteers to do this, the residents would remain in their buildings. Last year a picnic was held for a group at Quabbin Reservoir. This year similar activities are planned.

The work at Belchertown is purely voluntary, unlike the Boltwood-Belchertown project where one is committed to attend every week. However, once a student becomes a volunteer, it is hoped and strongly urged that he or she make an effort to go as often as possible.

While being a volunteer only means three hours a week, it means much more to the residents who await the arrival of the "green bus" from UMass each Saturday.

The Bus leaves at 12:45 from in front of Whitmore Administration Building at Haigis Mall. It returns to campus by 3:45.

Call Jay at 546-9801 or Audrey at 546-1475 for more information.

WMUA Looks At Primary

Tonight on WMUA's "Focus" program at 10 P.M., commentator Ken Mosakowski will offer an in-depth preview of tomorrow's statewide primary election.

A number of primary contests are expected to draw student voters to the polls tomorrow. In one of these, 40-year-old liberal Gerald F. O'Leary, a Boston city councilman, is pitted against "law-and-order" candidate John J. Droney, district attorney of Middlesex County, and 48-year-old John Pierce Lynch, register of deeds in Hampden County, for the Democratic nomination for the U.S. Senate. Droney, 61, is considered the frontrunner, but O'Leary has strong backing from McGovern supporters across the state.

Draft Counselor's Corner

If You're Classified 1-A, It's Time To Act

By GILBERT J. SALK

I want to write about 1-As and induction orders today, but first let me remind people that there will be a draft counselor training course for academic credit this semester, and that there is a severe shortage of trained counselors at the moment. More about both points at the end of this column.

Last week, I talked to five people who had received induction orders for October. They all had situations which should have qualified them for deferments, but, because they didn't know their rights, they got caught. Once you get an induction order, your options are considerably reduced.

So let's take some time to talk about how to not be screwed by the draft.

First, you should know that if you have a 1—A you are in a precarious position. If you have a lottery number of 95 or below, and you were born before 1953, having a 1-A means that you are going to get an induction order any day. It's as simple as that. The time to avoid being drafted is today. Visit a draft counselor, and spend an hour rapping about your options. Literally everybody has some legal alternative to being in the armed forces, providing that they exercise it.

It is vital that you realize that under current SSS regulations, you are only allowed 15 days to appeal an undesireable classification, and that the 15 days is counted from the date the board mails the classification notice, not from the date you receive it. That means that if you are otherwise draftable, you should be sure that your board has your current mailing address, because if a letter doesn't get to you, it's your problem, not theirs. Your appeal period can run out while the letter is still following you around or sitting in your folks' house waiting for you to come home for the weekend.

Any time that you lose a deferment which is the only thing standing between you and an induction order, your board is entitled to send you an induction notice 15 days after mailing your new 1-A. Dig it. You must act immediately, because after you get your invitation to join Uncle Sam on an international goodwill tour, the only way you can get a deferment is if something new, and beyond your ability to control, occurs which would entitle you to a new deferment.

You should immediately consult a draft counselor. If for some reason you can't get to one, write a fast letter to your board telling them that you wish to appeal your new classification. You don't have to say why. Keep a copy of the letter. Take the letter to the Post Office and tell the clerk that you want to send it by Certified Mail, return receipt requested. It will cost about 60 cents. The board will have to sign for the letter, and the post office will send the receipt to you. Staple it to your copy of the letter, and file it in a safe place. This is your proof that the board received your letter. (This procedure should be followed with all correspondence with your board. It is legal protection in case the board loses something you send them, or misfiles it. It is better to use this procedure than to personally deliver a letter to your board.)

You have not bought more time to see a draft counselor.

Brothers, please don't put it off. The Army will not go away just because you don't want to think about it. And the situation is never hopeless, but the earlier you act, the better off you'll be.

Now, about the counseling course...

You can take it for either 1 or 3 credits. It meets Tuesday nights, starting tomorrow, from 7-about 10:30, for four weeks. That will get you one credit. If you want to arrange to do at least three hours per week of draft counseling at the end of the seminar, you can get three credits. Today is the last day to register. Call 545-0871 to register or for more information. The class will meet in the Moore House Private Lounge. That's in Southwest, if you're new to the campus.

And there's an urgent need for draft counselors. If you have had any training or experience as a draft counselor, please contact me in the Draft Counseling Services office in 923 CC. We need help.

PEACE.

Record Amount Of Drugs Seized

WASHINGTON (AP)-The federal narcotics bureau head says there is a general heroin shortage of "unprecedent extent and duration" in all East Coast cities.

John E. Ingersoll, director of the Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs, said in a report released Sunday that the shortage is directly related to a crackdown on major drug trafficking organizations on both sides of the Atlantic.

—The bureau and foreign and domestic law enforcement agencies made a total of 7,771 arrests and won convictions in 96 per cent of the federal cases and 98 per cent in state cases.

—A total of 5,107 pounds of heroin, 675 pounds of cocaine, 154,609 pounds of marijuana, 8,275 pounds of hashish and 207 million dosage units of dangerous drugs were seized by the bureau.

Man Gets Bird Disease

LONDON (AP) - A parrot-lover who gave his pet the kiss of life almost killed himself, a team of scientists reported Sunday.

He was taken to the hospital with severe stomach pains and complaining he had eaten some bad food, the Public Health Laboratory Service reported in the British Medical Journal.

Doctors were baffled when their treatment produced no results. The man-who was not identified-grew worse, developing heart and lung trouble.

Then his wife remembered that just before his illness her husband had tried to revive his dying parrot by giving it mouth-to-mouth resuscitation. The parrot died, and its owner was meanwhile rapidly deteriorating.

The physicians treated him for "parrot disease"-psittacosis. He recovered.

And, the scientists added, so did his wife. She had contracted an illness like influenza from cleaning out the parrot's cage.

Tigers Close In On Sox

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Dick McAuliffe drove in four runs with a pair of homers Sunday, powering the Detroit Tigers to a 6-2 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers that lifted them within one percentage point of first place in the American League East.

It was the Tiger's fifth consecutive triumph, their longest such streak of the baseball season, and put them within a shade of first place when Boston lost to Cleveland.

McAuliffe connected with the bases empty in the second inning and cracked his seventh home run in the fourth following singles by Aurelio Rodriguez and Eddie Brinkman as the Tigers jumped on Jim Colborn for a 6-0 lead.

Detroit scored two runs in the first inning on Duke Sims' bases-loaded single following two walks and a single by Gates Brown.

Joe Coleman, 17-13, blanked the Brewers until the eighth, when they scored both their runs on Syd O'Brien's single, a double by Ron Theobald, a groundout by Ellie Rodriguez and Joe Lahoud's triple.

Havlichek Signs With Celts

BOSTON (AP) — John Havlicek signed Sunday with the Boston Celtics of the National Basketball Association, after holding out for one week, a team spokesman said.

Red Auerbach, Celtics president and general manager, would only say that the team captain and 10-year veteran had signed a multi-year contract and declined to disclose terms.

Havlicek, who plays both forward and guard, immediately joined his teammates practicing at the Massachusetts Maritime Academy in Buzzards Bay, where he passed his physical check "in perfect condition."

Havlicek is the first Celtic to pass the 17,000-point mark in career scoring. Last year he led the NBA in minutes played and was among the top 10 in points, assists and free-throw percentage.

The Celtics said Havlicek's holdout, the first time he has ever failed to sign before practice opened, was due to working out the details of "a very complicated, multi-year contract."

Cowboys Win

DALLAS (AP) — Mistake-riddled Dallas opened defense of its National Football League championship Sunday with a 28-6 victory over Scrappy Philadelphia on two touchdown passes by quarterback Craig Morton.

Eagle place-kicking specialist Tom Dempsey kicked field goals of 30 and 42 yards for a 6-0 Philadelphia lead that lasted until the bumbling Cowboy offense got untracked late in the first half.

The Cowboys were plagued by fumbles, penalties and dropped passes until Morton whipped a 37-yard touchdown shot to Ron Sellers with 2:53 left, giving Dallas a 7-6 halftime lead. Sellers made a juggling, diving catch of the ball behind defensive backs Nate Ramsey and Bill Bradley.

Dallas put the game out of reach in the third period when Morton, who inherited the number one quarterback job from injured Roger Staubach, hit Lance Alworth with a 13-yard scoring pass. A 31-yard pass to Sellers set up Calvin Hill's three-yard scoring run several minutes later.

Eagle rookie quarterback John Reaves entered the game in the third period after starter Pete Liske suffered a shoulder injury. Reaves hit Harold Jackson with a 59-yard pass to the Cowboy five-yard line.

Swedes Tie Canada

Team Canada, comprised of National Hockey League players beat Sweden 4-1 Saturday night.

Sweden took a 4-3 lead on three third-period goals, the last one by Inge Hammarstroem, before Esposito gained the tie for Team Canada.

Vic Hadfield of the New York Rangers scored in the first period, Don Awrey of Boston got a second period goal and Rick Martin of the Buffalo Sabres scored in the third for Team Canada, which was plagued by penalties.

Swedish defenseman Lars-Erik Sjoerberg was forced out of the game with a few minutes to go when knocked to the ice by Hadfield. Sjoerberg left bleeding heavily.

Pack Downs Browns

CLEVELAND (AP) — Rich McGeorge, who hadn't caught a pass in pre-season, snared two touchdown passes in the first half and rookie Chester Marcol kicked four field goals, propelling Green Bay to a 26-10 National Football League victory over Cleveland Sunday.

McGeorge, a third-year tight end from little Elon College in North Carolina, grabbed a 23-yard scoring pass with 2:39 gone in the game after rookie Willie Buchanon intercepted a Bill Nelsen aerial.

Buchanon grabbed it at the Browns' 33 and returned to the 22.

Scott Hunter moved the Packers 48 yards in the final 50 seconds of the half and hit McGeorge with a 2-yard scoring toss for a 17-10 halftime lead.

Lyle Ties Mark As Yanks Win

NEW YORK (AP) — Felipe Alou hit a two-run homer and relief ace Sparky Lyle tied the American League record with his 34th save as the New York Yankees defeated the Baltimore Orioles 2-1 Sunday.

The victory snapped a three game losing streak and enabled the Yankees to move within one game of third-place Baltimore in baseball's American League East. The Orioles started play 1-1/2 games behind pacesetting Boston while New York was 3-1/2 games out.

Alou hit the first pitch from Dave McNally, 13-16 into the lower left field stands after Bobby Murcer singled to open the fourth inning.

Winner Fritz Peterson, 16-14, allowed only three hits before being relieved by Lyle in the seventh. Lyle allowed three more hits as he tied the American League save mark set in 1970 by Minnesota's Ron Perranoski.

The Orioles took a 1-0 lead in the third on Andy Etchebarren's triple that scored Dave Johnson, who had singled. McNally flied to right fielder Charlie Spikes but Etchebarren was out trying to score.

Maine Upsets BU

The University of Maine capitalized on six Terrier mistakes to defeat Boston University 25-7 at Nickerson Field, Boston, last Friday night.

The Black Bears, who will visit Alumni Stadium on Saturday to play UMass, recovered five of six fumbles and intercepted a pass. Fumbles directly accounted for a touchdown and a field goal.

Maine showed a very balanced attack against the Boston team. Ron Cote and Rich Prior combined to complete 10 of 22 passes for 194 yards. The running attack picked up 193 yards and was paced by Mike Porter and Steve White, who gained 87 and 54 yards, respectively.

Dave Paul gathered in six passes for 84 yards, while Al Marquis grabbed 2 aerials for 70 more.

Cornell Blanks UMass, 3-0

By EARLE BARROLL

Consider the following:

Two collegiate football teams on a Saturday afternoon combined for 142 yards in penalties, eight interceptions, seven fumbles and numerous other mistakes.

About 2500 (that's including players, coaches, concession help, cheerleaders and the media) went through this arduous task on Saturday at Alumni Stadium as Cornell edged by UMass (in the last 32 seconds) 3-0 in what can only be termed a "pre" pre-season scrimmage.

Save for the Big Red's Bill Murray who booted his winning field goal from eight yards out after (what else?) a fumble recovery, the fans might have been treated to a double-blank, which would have been more apropos to say the least.

One coach expected what he saw...the other didn't.

Cornell's Jack Musick pointed out that his team has only practiced for a little over a week and a half and with the number of young players on the squad, he viewed this game as a great chance for an excellent practice.

"We just haven't had time to prepare," he said. "We started practice on August 31 and had only four days of double sessions."

The coach with the "O" had other thoughts.

"I'm extremely disappointed with the offense," Dick MacPherson said after the game. "I expected much more out of it, it's a veteran unit and it just has to get points on the board.

"We're making the same exact mistakes we made at this time last year at Cornell-offsides, motion calls, broken pass patterns-and we're going to have to clear this up before Maine gets here next Saturday."

Mac also credited the Cornell defense for taking away UMass' bread and butter plays. "They completely shut off our sweep and off tackle plays which have been our big plays."

The former Redmen never got inside the Cornell 20. Their offense resembled more of a stutter-step: four yards forward, 15 back, another 12 forward, and another five back.

Paul Metallo (who had a poor day with only 49 yards on 21 carries) said after the game that he felt the team moved the ball well. Agreed, but when you consider forward progress vs. penalties then the whole doesn't bear this out.

Quarterback Peil Pennington got his first opportunity to call the shots himself. "He did a real nice job," MacPherson lauded. "He handled the run well, but he did have trouble on calling the right play on long yardage situations after the penalties."

MacPherson heaped praise on his young and inexperienced defense and rightly so. Except for the deciding three-pointer (which in actuality the offense gave up) they threw a blank at Cornell.

This included a remarkable recovery on pass defense after the Big Red's Mark Allen riddled the sophomore laden secondary in the first quarter and a galant goal line stand with Cornell on the UMass four with first down in the second period.

"They played like a pretty coordinated group," Mac said. "They're young (seven sophs) but they certainly did a heck of a job."

Outside of the defense, the only other plus out of this contest was that UMass is still 0-0.

RUN FOR YOUR LIFE--And running for his life is what Piel Pennington found himself doing for a major part of a long Saturday afternoon. The Offense: "We Lost Our Poise"

By TOM FITZGERALD

Both UMass' Dick MacPherson and Cornell's Jack Musick would love to match their charges in a regular season game. But the gods and the Ivy League have deigned otherwise, and no Ivy team can play more than nine games.

It would have been the 11th game for UMass, but there's nothing wrong with that UMass has 11 booked for next year.

If Saturday's scrimmage was any indication, though, the gods and the Ivy League may have the right idea in keeping this one a scrimmage. The Big Red and the Ex-Red were a half-minute away from a stalemate, almost totally devoid of excitement, when Cornell's Bill Murray, a Canadian hockey player in disguise, flooded the scoreboard with three points.

"This is the worst our offense has looked since I've been here," MacPherson moaned. "We had 13 plays on our first series and nine on our second, and after that it was a mishmash.

"We lost our poise. We weren't blocking. Everytime we went wide they had a gang waiting for us. Mistakes breed mistakes, and once a few people made mistakes, everybody made them."

MacPherson's vexation with the offense was mollified somewhat by the surprising power of the defense, which includes seven sophomores. "This is the best our defense has looked, but it's too early to tell if we'll be better than we were last year on defense," he said.

Musick agreed. "For a young defense, they showed a lot of poise." Cornell quarterback Mark Allen, who has become the focus of the Cornell attack now that Ed Marinaro is a Minnesota Viking, added praise for the ability of the UMass linebackers to cut off the outside rush.

As far as Cornell's chances of repeating as Ivy co-champion are concerned, Allen was understandably non-committal. "Our offense is more diversified than last year, but we're young. We have three sophomores and a junior at slotback.

"The defense is solid but we need to have more consistency on offense to have a chance."

MacPherson said that Mark Palau will handle field goal duties as well as kick the extra points against Maine. Andy Dutkanicz may take over the punting on the basis of his performance in the scrimmage, the coach said.

Wilson Looks Good For Crusaders

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Wilson, Holy Cross' senior fullback who gained almost 1,000 yards last season, ran for a school record 274 Saturday and scored three touchdowns as Holy Cross defeated Rutgers 34-14 as the New England college football season got underway.

Scores of other games included: Bridgewater State 24, Boston State 13; Cortland State 17, Springfield 10; Maine Maritime 6, Curry 3; Plymouth State 19, Nichols 7; Southern Connecticut 31, Wesleyan 21.

In games Friday night, Boston College lost to Tulane, 10-7, while its neighbor, Boston University, was upset by Maine, 25-7.

Wilson accomplished his heroics with an injured leg.

"It was badly taped up," said Holy Cross Coach Ed Doherty.

"He couldn't get the full push off it. He got caught twice from behind. You don't see that happen very often...I'm looking forward to seeing him when he's right."

Sox Strafed, 9-2 Still In First

BOSTON (AP) - Cleveland's Gaylord Perry slowed down the red-hot Boston Red Sox 9-2 Sunday with his victory as Frank Duffy laced two key doubles and a single. Buddy Bell homered and Chris Chambliss delivered a pair of run-scoring singles.

The triumph broke a three game winning streak for the Red Sox, who started to play one game ahead of Detroit in baseball's American League East, and a six-game skid for the Indians.

Perry was nicked for an unearned run in the first inning on center fielder Bell's two-base muff of a fly ball and Rico Petrocelli's single.

Bell hit his eighth home run in the third inning.

The loss, coupled with Detroit's victory over Milwaukee, leaves the Red Sox in first place by the margin of .001.

Lions Roar, 30-16

By BOB ESTELLE

Former UMass quarterback Greg Landry combined with former Heisman Trophy winner Steve Owens to destroy the New York Giants' "rover" defense and give the Detroit Lions their first win of the season, 30-16.

After a scoreless first quarter, Errol Mann kicked a field goal from the 26 yard line, ending a drive started by Lem Barney's recovery of a fumble by Giant tight end Bob Tucker. Shortly afterward, Landry threw a 66 yard bomb to substitute tight end John Hilton to make the score 10-0.

The Giants then came back on a 42 yard field goal by Pete Gogolak but the Lions' strong running attack, lead by Owens and Altie Taylor, and a 33 yard pass from Landry to Hilton set up a 20 yard field goal by Mann.

But then Rocky Thompson returned Wayne Walker's kickoff 92 yards for the Giants to make the halftime score 13-10.

The only score in the third quarter came on an 8 yard pass from Landry to rookie Al Barnes, ending a 51 yard drive.

Landry's third TD pass came on the third play of the fourth quarter, an 11 yard pass to Ron Jesse which ended a drive from the Detroit 16 after Lion middle linebacker Mike Lucci intercepted a pass from Giant QB Norm Snead.

The Giants managed to score their second touchdown during the final quarter when Snead threw a 2 yard TD pass to Tucker but Gogolak missed the extra point.

Detroit got another field goal from Mann, a 38 yarder, during the final two minutes of the game.

Pats Lose To Bengals

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) - The Cincinnati Bengals unleashed a powerful running game with Ken Anderson at the controls and threw up a strong defense Sunday in mauling the New England Patriots 31-7 in a National Football League opener.

The Bengals combined the running of Fred Willis and Essex Johnson in taking a 10-7 halftime lead, then pulled away after the intermission while frustrating New England quarterback Jim Plunkett.

Johnson scored the Bengals' first touchdown on a 14-yard end sweep in the opening period after some key running by Willis.

Muhlmann booted a 38-yard field goal in the second period.

The Bengals, led by Johnson moved 46 yards for another touchdown at the outset of the second half. Jess Phillips capped the drive with a one-yard dive into the end zone.

In the final quarter, Lamar Parrish leaped high into the air to pick off a bouncing punt and sprinted 51 yards for Cincinnati's third touchdown. Just over a minute later, after a fumble recovery at the New England 16. Anderson rolled out and passed 11 yards to Bob Trumpy for the Bengals final touchdown.

Dems Debate Issues At MacKimmie

By BOB CALLAHAN

Three Democratic hopefuls, vying for two positions on the November ballot as candidates for Representative from the 2nd Hampshire District, discussed their views on district and state issues in a Primary eve debate held last evening at Mackimmie Lounge.

Incumbent representative James R. Nolen and his two Democratic opponents, James G. Collins and Edmund Scheinost, spoke on issues ranging from the proposed graduated income tax to the legalization of abortion and marijuana.

The three primary candidates in opening remarks before the debate, which was chaired by Student Senator Nick Apostola, all agreed to the need for a progressive and graduated income tax to help alleviate the tax burden placed upon those in the low and middle income bracket.

The issues of abortion, legalization of marijuana, and gay liberation, unlike most of the issues, did not draw the same response from all three candidates. Collins and Scheinost came out in favor of the three with several reservations while the incumbent, Nolen, argued against their legalization.

Both Collins and Scheinost called abortion "a personal thing," an issue to be decided between a woman and her physician. They also called for a "sane drug law" and agreed that complete medical studies must be completed before ever legalizing marijuana. Both candidates favor equal rights for gay people.

Disagreeing with the views of his two opponents, Nolen said that "by not legalizing abortion, marijuana, and gay rights we are not encouraging them." He said that their legalization may be a problem to the way that other people want to run their lives.

The recent decision by the Western Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group, WMPIRG, to oppose the rate hike asked for by the Western Mass. Electric Co. came up for discussion at the two hour debate with all three candidates in favor of the actions taken by WMPIRG.

Both Scheinost and Collins, in regards to the proposed rate hike felt that "the Department of Public utilities often tends to support the utilities that it was intended to control." In addition, Collins said that he feels that there "is too much power in corporate America."

Adding to the discussion on the electrical utilities proposed rate hike, representative Nolen agreed that WMPIRG was a good idea because it gave representation to the consumer who is usually not well represented in cases such as this. "The utility is well equipped to present their case and the consumer is not well represented, so the DPU doesn't always hear the other side," Nolen said.

Nolen, is an attorney from Ware, is a 14 year veteran of the House of Representatives.

James Collins, a former Student Senate President, graduated from UMass in 1968. Presently associated with Upward Bound, this marks his first attempt at public office.

Edmund Scheinost, presently employed as an activity program attendant at the Belchertown State School is in his 2nd five year term as a member of the South Hadley Planning Board.

Primary Today

As a reminder to all Massachusetts voters, today is the state primary election. Among the offices being conteded in this 2nd Hampshire District is that of state representative. Seeking the democratic nomination are James R. Nolen, James G. Collins, and Edmund Schoeinost. Running on the Republican slate are Norman E. Cowles, Nathanial Reed and William G. Whitlock.

Polling places will be as follows: for voters in Precinct 1 it will be at the Congregational Church. Precinct 2 (which includes most UMass students) will be at the Fire Station. Precinct 3 will be at Odd Fellows Hall. Precinct 4 will be at the Masonic Hall. Precinct 5 will be at the Old Junior High Gymnasium. Finally, Precinct 6 will be at Munson Library.

Elsewhere ...

Among the 840,000 voters state officials predict will cast ballots Tuesday are 18 to 20-year-olds voting in a state election for the first time.

Three Democrats are fighting for the right to challenge Sen. Edward W Brooke, R—Mass., in the November election, and Tuesday's vote is also crucial to strong challenges against two incumbent Congressmen and a sharp battle for a vacant seat in the U.S. House.

Brooke, the only black in the Senate, is regarded as a heavy favorite to win a second six-year term against whichever candidate Democrats nominate - Middlesex County Dist. Atty. John J. Droney, Boston City Councilor Gerald F. O'Leary, or Hampden County Register of Deeds John Pierce Lynch.

The already heated fight for the 5th Congressional District seat grew still hotter Monday with the arrest of two aides of one leading candidate in a building housing campaign headquarters of another.

Arrested were the brother and another campaign aide of John F. Kerry, 27, who gained national prominence last year for his leadership role in Vietnam Veterans Against the War. They were arrested by Lowell police in a building housing the headquarters of state Rep. Anthony R. DiFruscia, of Lawrence.

The two, along with state Rep. Paul J. Sheehy of Lowell, are regarded as top contenders in the 10-way race for the Democratic nomination. Four Republicans are seeking their party's nomination for the seat vacated in April by F. Bradford Morse, named undersecretary general of the United Nations in April.

Also facing a stiff challenge Tuesday is U.S. Rep. Louise Day Hicks, D—Mass., who gained national attention for her position against school busing in two unsuccessful Boston mayoral campaigns.

Her 9th District was expanded far into Boston suburbs in a redistricting last year, threatening her chances for nomination to a second term.

Regarded as her strongest challenger is state Sen. Robert L. Cawley, D—Boston, who headed the committee that recommended the redistricting plan. Running as an independent in November is Boston City Councilor John Joseph Moakley, who narrowly lost to Mrs. Hicks in 1970. Three Republicans are also seeking nomination.

Another incumbent congressman, Rep. Robert F. Drinan, is unopposed in the Democratic primary but four Republicans are seeking the nomination to oppose Drinan, a Roman Catholic priest and lawyer seeking a second term.

State Rep. Martin A. Linsky of Brookline, regarded as a liberal, is rated the strongest contender for the nomination. Also in contention are state Rep. Robert A. Belmonte of Framingham, like Linsky a member of the House GOP leadership, and two contenders regarded as more conservative, former Congressman Laurence Curtis of Newton and Avi Nelson of Brookline.

Five incumbents-two Republican and three Democratic-are unopposed in the primary and final elections. They are Republicans Silvio O. Conte of Pittsfield in the 1st Congressional District and Margaret M. Heckler of Wellesley in the 10th; and Democrats Edward P. Boland of Springfield in the 2nd, Harold P. Donahue of Worcester in the 3rd, and James A. Burke of Milton in the 11th.

The 12th Congressional District seat being vacated by Republican Rep. Hastings Keith of West Bridgewater has one Democrat and one Republican seeking nomination.

Two other Democratic congressmen, Reps. Torbert H. MacDonald of Malden in the 7th Congressional District and Michael J. Harrington in the 6th, are expected to survive primary challenges and the House Democratic Whip, Rep. Thomas P. O'Neill, of Cambridge, faced only a Socialist Workers Party candidate in the final election for the 8th District seat.

Independent voters are expected to play a more significant role in Tuesday's election than in any previous state primary. A new state law makes it easier for voters who give up their independent status by voting in a party primary to regain listing as an Independent almost immediately after the election.

Polls throughout the state will be open for at least 10 hours, under new state law. Local officials set voting hours, under another new state law. Local officials set voting hours, but all polling places must close at 8 p.m. Boston and most other major cities will have polling hours from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m.

In other contests, more than 800 persons are seeking nominations for seats in the state House and Senate. Liveliest contests are in districts where the incumbent is not seeking re-election.

There are also contests for nomination to the Governor's Council and for posts as county commissioner and other county jobs. The hottest county contest is in Middlesex County, where a "reform" slate seeks to oust incumbent officials.

SOS To Meet Wednesday

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

At the age of four, Jimmy was diagnosed as "borderline psychotic with problems of ego impairment." A psychiatrist recommended that he be placed in a residential program for disturbed children.

No openings were available. Meanwhile, Jimmy was refused admission to the public school, and was placed on a waiting list for treatment at a mental health facility.

One day, while with his mother at a supermarket, Jimmy approached a baby in a carriage. He opened a can of pepper and poured it into the infant's eyes, severely burning the corneas.

Charges were brought against Jimmy. He was taken to court and committed to an institution.

He finally had "services".

Jimmy is only one of many similar cases documented in a report on the Department of Mental Health that was released last week by the Task Force on Children.

Students Offering Support (SOS) an organization dedicated to pursuing reforms within DMH - will hold its first organizational meeting of the year in the Student Union tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. The exact location will be announced in tomorrow's Collegian.

An SOS spokesman said SOS provides students with a means of expressing support and obtaining funds for a class-action suit filed by parents of residents of the Belchertown State School for the retarded.

The suit filed last February in U.S. District Court in Boston charges that DMH has been negligent in the care of residents of the school.

UMass Professor Benjamin Ricci, the leading organizer of the suit, will address the meeting.

Ricci has long been a force in an effort to bring about reform in DMH and has been president of the Belchertown Friends Association for the last four years.

He has taught at the University since 1950 and is chairman of the exercise science department at UMass.

He got involved in working for the mentally retarded, he said in an interview, only a few hours after his 24-year-old son, Bobby, was born.

Bobby is presently a resident at the Belchertown State School and is one of the 28 plaintiffs named in the suit against the state.

He applied for his son's admission to Belchertown when Bobby was six years old. As he sees it, the action was the "hardest decision" he and his wife have had to make in their lives.

"There were no alternatives, Belchertown or nothing," he said.

A joint legislative commission studying the Belchertown State School stated in their March, 1971 report: "We are totally dissatisfied with the manner in which Belchertown is being administered. We are deeply impressed by the Department's (Mental Health) indifference to change."

Last week's report said DMH has failed to demonstrate any significant concern for the needs of children.

"The energies of the department go toward defending the present lack of services, by protecting officials to whom the public looks for leadership and help," stated the report.

SOS raised in support of the suit over $6,000 last year in a series of fund raising drives, including some $5,000 during last spring's free concert.

The $5,000 represented profits from concessions sold during the concert and direct contributions from those in attendance.

UMass Professor Ben Ricci will be the main speaker tomorrow in the Student Union as Students Offering Support (SOS) will hold its first organizational meeting of the year. Ricci is the leading organizer of a federal suit against the state. (MDC photo by Stephen Schuster.)

Cohen Calls Senate's SUG Moves 'Power Play'

By ROBERT SCHEIER

A new proposed constitution for the Student Union Governing Board which would change its name and include referendum and elections of SUG Board members has been called a student senate power play by current SUG Board chairman Barry Cohen.

Cohen says the current board has been working on measures with the same aim as the Senate motions--to make the board more accountable to students.

Currently, SUG Board members are appointed by the Student Senate. The board is charged with reviewing the operations of the Campus Center, but their actions can be nullified or delayed by the chancellor.

According to Cohen, the SUG board has been planning SUG board elections from all areas on campus and referendum procedures, but he claimed, "The Senate action has put a time crush on us."

The proposal changing the name of the board to the Campus Center-Student Union Policy Board and making the other changes was presented to the senate last week.

It is scheduled to be voted on tomorrow night.

According to Cohen, the current SUG board referendum plan would require only 10 per cent or about 2,000 students' signatures to hold a referendum on an issue. He said the senate proposal would require 25 per cent, or closer to 5,000 signatures.

He claimed that if 25 per cent of the students voted in the referendum, their decision would be binding on the board.

"We want to be accountable to the students instead of the senate," said Cohen. "I think the senate wants a central body--itself--on campus to control everything. This body, though, would have no checks or balances."

He said the SUG board had proposed establishing a referendum on SUG board actions last year that has not yet been acted on. "The senate is taking this action quite early," he said.

Some supporters of the senate motion to give the board new constitution have cited the continuing rise in the Campus Center fee. Cohen said the board had taken action to lower it.

"We have very little leeway," Cohen said. "The administration says if more money is needed for the Campus Center, the students should pay it. We don't think they should, so we passed an unbalanced budget for fiscal 1973," he added.

"We want the state to pay the $50,000 instead of the students," he said.

Police To Enforce "Ped" Law

Due to a large amount of complaints they have received from pedestrians in the last few days, the Campus Police will begin today to strictly enforce the "pedestrian crosswalk law". The law, which states in essence that drivers must stop for pedestrains crossing on marked crosswalk reads as follows:

"Operation of Vehicles for the Protection of Pedestrians - When traffic control signals are not in place or not in operation the driver of a vehicle shall yield the right of way, slowing down or stopping if need be so to yield, to a pedestrian crossing the roadway within a crosswalk marked in accordance with standards established by the department of public works if the pedestrian is on that half of the traveled part of the way on which the vehicle is traveling or if the pedestrian approaches from the opposite half of the traveled part of the way to within five feet of that half of the traveled part of the way on which said vehicle is traveling.

"No driver of a vehicle shall pass any other vehicle which has stopped at a marked crosswalk to permit a pedestrian to cross, nor shall any such operator enter a marked crosswalk to permit a pedestrian to cross, nor shall any such operator enter a marked crosswalk until there is a sufficient space beyond the crosswalk to accommodate the vehicle he is operating, notwithstanding that a traffic control signal may indicate that vehicles may indicate that vehicles may proceed.

"Whoever violates any provision of this section shall be punished by a fine of not more than fifty dollars."

Commuters Plan To Organize Thursday

"Truckin from Northampton to School...just keep truckin". These lyrics from the popular song by the Grateful Dead, slightly rearranged to suit purposes, described perfectly the plight of a well-known campus figure, the commuter. Approximately one-seventh of the student population here at UMass is comprised of this group. Money, transportation and a feeling of not being involved in the mainstream of student affairs are only a few of the problems that these travelers face.

Here on campus, an organization known as the "Commuter Assembly" exists in order to alleviate some of the problems faced by the daily commuter. Headed by president Paul Doran, the body consists of eleven members, which, in addition to Doran include, Robert Chiller as treasurer, a commuter senator and eight other members elected at large. The group functions much like other area student governments, said Doran, and, as the second largest on campus, is annually appropriated a fiscal budget; this year the sum is $15,376.

With such a substantial sum of money, and such a wide power base, the effectiveness of the Commuter Assembly could be paramount, but due to lack of involvement on both the part of the commuters and others, it has in past years, been thought of as farce rather than fact indicated Doran. This year though promises to be different, he added.

The assembly is being organized much earlier and already has some projects in mind. A cooperative babysitting service, which would lower sitting rates considerably, and a short term commuter loan fund are just a few of these, he said.

Additional suggestions, and a willingness to become involved in commuter services are vital to the functioning of the organization Doran expressed. Once supplied, they can make the assembly extremely effective, both for the commuter and the University, he added.

A general meeting, for the purpose of organizing will be held for all interested commuters on Thursday, September 21, at 5 P.M., in room 174 of the Campus Center, and elections for the Assembly will be held on Friday, the 28th. Nomination papers may be picked up outside the Student Activities office and must be in by September 22.

IRA Warning Issued

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP)-The outlawed Irish Republican Army announced Monday it will attack a major Belfast hospital if British troops encamped around it do not withdraw by midnight Tuesday.

The IRA ultimatum was issued as a press handout with instructions for it to be with held from publication until midnight Monday-24 hours before the threatened attack.

The statement said "hostilities" would then begin against the Royal Victoria Hospital, a center for dealing with both guerrilla and army wounded.

In The Nation And The World

UN General Assembly Convenes Today

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP)-Representatives of most of the world's nations will gather Tuesday for the 27th U.N. General Assembly, carrying with them old feuds and new ones which have developed in the past year.

Foreign Ministers Abba Eban of Israel and Mohammed Hassan el-Zayyat of Egypt, familiar foes in the assembly hall, will bring the newest Mideast crises-Palestinian terrorism and Israeli retaliation.

The Munich massacre of 11 members of the Israeli Olympic team and threats to Arab U.N. missions which followed have produced tighter than usual security precautions for this assembly.

President Nixon ordered about 40 members of the federal Executive Protective Service from Washington to guard the U.N. missions of 18 Arab countries, Israel and the West German observer.

The United Nations also beefed up its internal security by adding 10 men to the force of 125 guards.

Besides terrorism and the Mideast, other issues at this assembly will be U.S. troop presence in Korea, pollution, sea rights, membership for Bangladesh and several projects of the Soviet Union which the Chinese are sure to oppose.

This will be the first time mainland China has been here for the entire 13 weeks of an assembly session. Peking took its seat midway through the session last year.

The Chinese have made no proposals for the assembly this year, except for joining with 27 other nonaligned and Communist countries including the Soviet Union in the new attempt to oust the 43,000 American troops stationed in Korea. Socialist countries have tried unsuccessfully to get this proposal on the agenda before, but this time it is being put forward as a means of giving moral support to the inter-Korean talks by ridding the area of foreign influence.

The first confrontation between the United States and China on Korea will come Wednesday afternoon or Thursday in the 25-nation steering committee, which approves the agenda for the assembly.

Britain, as it did last year, will state the position of the former Korean War allies that the issue should not be debated at all in order to let North and South Korea carry on their current negotiations without outside interference. That argument won easily last year, but the other side claims to have picked up support this year.

Gunships Protecting Saigon

SAIGON (AP)-For the first time in the Indochina war, the United States is employing its biggest computerized gunships with television cameras to protect Saigon against anticipated enemy attacks in the weeks preceeding the U.S. presidential election, U.S. military sources disclosed Monday night.

Air Force AC130 gunships, armed with television cameras that can pierce the night skies, have been orbiting Saigon for the past three weeks, the informants said.

The four-engine gunships, armed with 40MM and 20MM cannon, are supported by ground television stations in the Saigon military region. When enemy movement is spotted, they open fire.

The sources said the gunships already have been in action against small groups of Viet Cong trying to infiltrate the capital and have been effective so far.

One source said the gunships had been called from bases in Thailand to patrol the Saigon corridor and added that U.S. officials were expecting the enemy might try to fire rockets into Saigon and carry out sapper attacks in the capital to "grab headlines."

The use of the giant gunships underscores the seriousness with which U.S. officials take the threat to Saigon, and their determination to preclude attacks that could embarrass President Nixon in his bid for re-election in November.

Senior U.S. Air Force officials also indicated that if Nixon is re-elected without a negotiated settlement having been reached, the air war against North Vietnam likely would intensify.

They said there were military complexes in Hanoi that could be wiped out by B52 heavy bombers in one day. These complexes now are being chipped away at by tactical fighter-bombers, they added.

U.S. tactical fighter-bombers carried out heavy raids across North Vietnam Sunday, launching more than 330 strikes, at the same time Hanoi was holding a ceremony for the release of three American pilots who had been captured, one more than four years ago. The POWs are scheduled to return to the United States later this week, one of them accompanied by his wife and another by his mother. The relatives were invited to Hanoi to escort their loved ones home.

One senior Air Force official confirmed that he had ordered American bombers to steer clear of Hanoi during the presence of the Americans there.

Uganda Claims Wins Over Tanzanian Forces

(AP)-Uganda's armed forces claimed Monday they recaptured three towns and pushed back an invasion force from Tanzania. President Idi Amin said the invaders were a misture of 1,500 Tanzanian troops and Ugandan guerrrillas aided by "British and Israeli mercenaries."

A military spokesman said Ugandan warplanes also destroyed an enemy base in Tanzania.

Amin told African diplomats in Kampalz, the Ugandan capital, that 200 invaders were killed and 50 captured in the fighting near Lake Victoria's western shore. He said the Ugandans involved were supporters of former President Milton Obote, whom Amin overthrew in a January 1971 military coup.

Tanzania stuck to its denial that its own troops were involved. Reports reaching London and other capitals said Amin's government apparently was fighting an army mutiny in the southwestern part of the country or an incursion of Ugandan exiles based in neighboring Tanzania.

Radio Uganda reported one of three captured guerrillas brought before Amin said the Tanzanian government was arming exiled members of Obote's Langi tribe and their neighbors, the Acholi, at camps near the Tanzanian towns of Bukoba and Tabora.

The radio said the guerrilla-identified as a former Ugandan army captain named Oyile-confirmed the invaders were expecting help from British troops and the operations' purpose was to restore Obote to power.

Oyile said the assumption was that Obote would reverse Amin's decision to expel 50,000 to 60,000 Asians with British passports by early November, the broadcast said.

Administration Promises No Cuts In Social Security

WASHINGTON (AP) - Two Nixon administration officials Monday promised that Social Security payments will not be cut to comply with a federal ceiling on spending.

However, Treasury Secretary George P. Shultz and Budget Director Caspar Weinberger said that if federal budget cutting is needed, defense is "not sacrosanct."

Testifying before the House Ways and Means Committee, they said President Nixon would shy away from an inflexible, across-the-board budget cut if Congress approves his proposed $250-billion ceiling on federal spending during the current fiscal year.

Prison Computer Experts Saving Commonwealth Money

WALPOLE, Mass. (AP) - Inmate computer experts at Walpole State Prison have saved Massachusetts $900,000 in computer programs done for government agencies since 1968 while they have effectively rehabilitated themselves, a Correction Department spokesman said.

Honeywell, Inc., at the suggestion of an inmate, began teaching computer programming to inmates at Walpole in 1967. Since then, 63 prisoners involved in the course have been paroled and only three have returned to prison.

State Correction Commissioner John O. Boone said this inmate return rate of 4.5 per cent compares to a national average return rate approaching 70 per cent.

"Red Tide" Outbreak Threatens Clams

BOSTON (AP) - The "red tide" is a type of ocean algae that multiplies rapidly, collecting in clams and paralyzing humans that eat them.

The highly poisonous growth, known technically as gonyaulix tamarensi, is now sweeping the coasts of Maine, New Hampshire and Massachusetts, forcing the states to ban human consumption of clams.

The growth is microscopic plankton that are always in the water, according to the U.S. Department of Health, Education and welfare. But during the summer, conditions in the ocean and atmosphere sometimes combine to create a perfect quick growing environment.

POWs Reunited With Relatives

HANOI (AP)-A motorcade of 1950-model Russian Volga sedans rushing through the darkened streets of Hanoi, a hurried walk through a dark courtyard of the headquarters of the People's army, soldiers in pith helmets standing quietly by.

Up a flight of steep wooden steps past a crush of television photographers, and then, almost alone in a simply furnished dusty room.

It was journey's end for two determined American women who started out a week ago from Dunedin, Fla., and San Diego, Calif., on a trip halfway around the world to personally bring home their released prisoners of war Navy pilots.

Minnie Lee Gartley was first through the door Sunday, patting her graying hair, her eyes alive with expectation. Past two soldiers at the door, a cameraman, and there he was-her tall blond son, Navy Lt. Markham L. Gartley.

"Better looking than I remembered him after five years apart," she said.

Gartley blinked. The he felt his mother's strong arms around his neck.

Keyed up for a week, he said later: "It was almost unreal, not quite a traumatic as I expected."

Slim, pretty Olga Charles had already dashed by and embraced her husband, Navy Lt. Norris Charles. They had not seen each other for 10 months, and Mrs. Charles would not reveal what he whispered in her ear in this first moment.

Standing nearby was Air Force Maj. Edward Elias who up to the previous evening had thought either his wife or father would make the trip. Cora Weiss from New York who has helped to arrange his release walked up to him.

"Welcome back," she smiled at him.

The official reception was ready to begin and it was only a special concession by military authorities that had allowed the women to meet first briefly with their loved ones.

Mrs. Gartley and Mrs. Charles stood quietly behind their men as each stepped forward to the microphone and made brief statements, then pandemonium as Mrs. Charles shoved through the press and television crews to cuddle her husband, and Mrs. Gartley found her son at the edge of the room.

Then it was pictures, and released men looking more like the stereotype of Madison Avenue advertising men in their neat newly made gray suits than prisoners of war enjoying their first moments of freedom.

Back to the motorcade, past a small group of Vietnamese civilians who cheered at the gate. Then a banquet in Hoa Binh Hotel and a long talk into the night with members of American peace group who came over to escort them home, and with a few journalists.

But not for the Charles, who excused themselves early. Mrs. Charles had a tape to play to her husband from their 3-year-old daughter and so they walked hand in hand up the twisting stairway of the old hotel to the "Honeymoon Suite."

Britain To Help In MidEast

LONDON (AP) - Britain offered Monday to play an intermediary's role between the Arabs and the Israelis in organizing a full-scale peace conference on the Middle East.

The offer was made by the foreign secretary, Sir Alec Douglas-Home, at the start of talks with Egypt's new foreign minister, Mohammed Hassan el-Zayyat.

At a luncheon honoring Zayyat and attended by envoys of Libya, Lebanon and Saudi Arabia, Douglas-Home also said the complete withdrawal of Soviet military personnel from Egypt provides a new chance to look at the possibilities of a peace settlement.

Douglas-Home said he favors a dialogue between Egypt and Israel and that Egypt has made it clear any such dialogue should be through an intermediary. Ideally, he went on, the intermediary should be the U.N. SPECIAL ENVOY, Gunnar V. Jarring.

If new talks through Jarring cannot be organized, he said, he would not rule out the alternative of peace conference.

"The difficulties confronting a conference even before it actually began would be plenty," he said. "But if Britain could help in any way and if both sides were agreeable we should be ready to do whatever we could."

Earlier Zayyat departed from his prepared text to tell the luncheon party: "I share your condemnation of terrorism and of terrorism by states."

Political observers said his remark, although coupled with a swipe at Israel, was apparently the first statement by an Egyptian leader critical of terrorist acts since the Munich massacre.

Oil Quotas Increased

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon took steps Monday to increase by 35 per cent the daily level of oil imports, singling out for a special boost the foreign fuel used extensively for home heating in the populous Northeastern states.

Officials said he acted because of shrinking petroleum stockpiles and because domestic production has not kept pace with soaring demand.

Nixon issued a proclamation, which, government specialists said, would:

—Increase by 624,000 barrels during the last three months of 1972 the daily import allowance for all types of petroleum products. The level has been 1,780,000 barrels daily.

—Nearly double the imports of No. 2 heating fuel during the same period. Instead of the current 45,000 barrels daily; importers could bring in up to 83,000 a day.

His actions apply to portions of the country east of the Rocky Mountains. The impact will be felt especially in New England where congressmen and elected officials have urged that heating oil imports be sharply increased.

There was no immediate comments from domestic producers.

Elmer Bennett, general counsel of the Office of Emergency Preparedness which recommended the presidential action, said he expects that the increased imports of fuel oil "would be greeted by some enthusiasm among residents of New England and such states as New York and New Jersey.

Quinn Charges Commissioner With Conflict of Interest

BOSTON (AP)-Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn charged Monday that state Human Services Secretary Peter C. Goldmark Jr. had violated three sections of the state's "conflict of interest law."

He said the violations were punishable by administrative action, not criminal prosecution, and called on Gov. Francis W. Sargent to fire Goldmark. Sargent replied he had no intention of firing Goldmark from his $37,500-a-year job.

And Goldmark, in a letter to Sargent, said he rejected Quinn's contention that he intentionally violated the law.

The exchange of charges came over a planned-but never consumated-agreement to supplement the salary of Public Health Commissioner William J. Bicknell by five grants totalling $15,000 a year from area medical schools and other institutions.

The health commissioner's pay is set by state law at $30,422. Bicknell, formerly a federal health official in California, set $45,000 as his "financial requirement for coming east and accepting "the state job, Quinn said in his report.

To bridge the gap and attract Bicknell, Goldmark sought and received from five institutions a promise to $3,000 each toward Bicknell's salary.

McG Drafts Ecology Proposals

WASHINGTON (AP) - Presidential candidate George McGovern is preparing proposals which if adopted would more than double federal environmental spending.

Such an increase is implied in one proposal alone-full funding of environment programs already authorized by Congress.

In addition, McGovern is embracing policies to restrain energy demand; divert highway funds into mass transit; and stabilize population.

Another proposal under consideration would require labeling energy-using devices to show their efficiency as an aid to energy-conservation.

McGovern has proposed 1976 as the target for reaching zero population growth, and has favored universal dispensation of contraceptives "at public cost where that is necessary."

Here is a summary of McGovern's known environmental positions so far, compared with those of President Nixon's administration:

—Environmental funding: Nixon has boasted some $2.4 billion in environmental spending this fiscal year, but McGovern said in August that this was some $2.8 billion short of the funding authorized by Congress.

—Energy policy: The administration is pressing to increase energy production but has taken few steps to reduce demand. McGovern has urged curbing demand by changing energy pricing and discouraging demand-promoting advertising.

Campaign '72

The Democratic candidate's environment policies soon will be spelled out in a "white paper." But his top environment adviser, Robert N. Rickles, who is drafting the paper, made clear in an interview which way McGovern was heading.

Ted Van Dyke, director of issues and research for the McGovern campaign, commented:

"Mr. Rickles speaks only for himself. The proposals may be his own but have not been submitted to the McGovern campaign, much less accepted."

Rickles said in the interview that he committed himself to helping McGovern last November and has discussed environmental policy with McGovern "at some length."

Cuts in defense spending would, in McGovern's calculations, permit expanded domestic programs including faster environmental cleanup.

McGovern already has proposed guaranteed jobs, and income supports during the transition from a wartime to a peacetime economy, and Rickles said the same supports would aid any workers displaced by environmental enforcement.

He said McGovern may offer financial aid also, perhaps through federal loans, to small industries adapting to environmental standards.

Nixon Says Drug Fight Successful

WASHINGTON (AP) - Taking issue with George McGovern, President Nixon reported initial victories Monday in the war on illegal drugs. He said he will cut off U.S. aid to any country whose leaders contribute to America's narcotics problem.

Nixon did not mention the Democratic presidential nominee by name in addressing U.S. diplomats assembled from around the world for a three-day drug conference.

But his remarks clashed with McGovern's allegation Sunday that Nixon's anti-narcotics campaign has failed. The Democratic candidate said the administration has not cracked down on Southeast Asian allies who, McGovern said, are involved in the narcotics trade.

Nixon particularly cited France, Paraguay, Laos, Thailand and Turkey for what he called "fine initial progress" in cooperating with U.S. officials in attacking illegal drug traffic.

And he told the U.S. narcotics control officers from American embassies in 55 countries "to convey this personal message from me:

"Any government whose leaders participate in or protect the activities of those who contribute to our drug problem should know that the President of the United States is required by statute to suspend all American economic and military assistance to such a regime.

"I shall not hesitate to comply fully and promptly with that statute."

Student NEA Endorses McGovern-Shriver Ticket

WASHINGTON - The Student National Education Association, the nation's largest individual member association of college students, today endorsed the McGovern-Shriver ticket. This is the first time the 80,000-member organization has backed a presidential candidate.

Tom Creighton, President of the student NEA, which is affiliated with the 1.2 million member National Education Association, announced the endorsement at a news conference here today at the Statler Hilton Hotel. "McGovern has often stood alone in his battles to represent our viewpoints," said Creighton. "His record shows his commitment to our country's youths and their concerns."

Somerville Schools Should Reopen Today

SOMERVILLE, Mass. (AP)- Classes for 13,500 public school students in this Boston suburb are expected to reopen Tuesday following agreement on Monday between school officals and teachers on a new labor contract.

The settlement, which came an hour before teachers were to answer contempt of court citations, ended a seven-day shut-down of the city's 26 public schools, the first strike against schools in Somerville's history.

Agreement on the contract which calls for a 5 per cent pay hike this year and a 5.5 per cent raise in 1973 came after a marathon 18-hour negotiating session between representatives of the teachers and the School Committee. It was the first time the two groups had met face to face in negotiations.

Part of the agreement is an understanding that a full, 180-day school year will be held this year in Somerville, a requirement of state law.

Also included in the contract which was ratified by a 2-1 vote of the 500 striking teachers is an agreement that a special committee of teachers and administrators will be formed to study a controversial policy of the School Committee increasing the daily teaching schedule from six to seven periods.

A sum of $150,000 in school funds is to be set aside for the study which must begin in Oct. 15 and end by Dec. 15. Teachers have opposed the change in their teaching day, one which became operational on the first day of school this fall.

That day-Sept. 7-was also the last day of the old contract and has been the only day classes were held this school year in Somerville.

In addition to monetary settlements, the teachers are given one Wednesday afternoon off each month to meet with parents and prepare programs.

Middlesex Superior Court Judge Joseph S. Mitchell has ordered the striking teachers to appear in his court Monday morning and show cause why they should not be held in contempt for violating restraining orders he issued last week.

Settlement of the strike was announced about one hour before the scheduled court appearances. Mitchell, who had threatened to arrest the striking teachers if they didn't go back to the classroom, said the end of the strike also closed the contempt cases against the teachers.

Action Lab Needs Volunteers

Action Lab, a student organization designed to encourage closer student-community relations through student work in nearby communities begins its third year with an organizational meeting on Wednesday, September 20 at 7:00 p.m. in C.C. 917.

After two years of tutorial work at the Hampshire County House of Corrections, Action Lab expands this year to include programs at the Westfield Detention Center and the North End (Springfield) Drug Abuse Program. University credit (pending approval) may be offered to students participating in any of the three programs.

The main program will be at the Westfield Detention Center, a center for youths between the ages of 9 and 17 who have been labeled juvenile delinquents. There is a great need for programs to be instituted at the center, and Action Lab will be visiting two nights a week, Tuesday and Thursday. The program will be on a group rather than individual basis, thus, enabling the youths to take part in group activities. The topics will be varied and may include sports, arts and crafts, counseling, tutoring, and special programs such as movies, guest speakers, etc.

The North End Drug Abuse Program is in the initial stages of operation in Springfield. The program needs researchers, counselors, teachers, and liaison workers with the local jails. Students with a fluency in Spanish would be preferred but it is not mandatory. Scheduling is flexible and can be suited to the students free time. This is an excellent opportunity for a student to participate in a social service agency in its early, non-bureaucratic stage.

Hampshire County House of Corrections is in a different category: that of a longstanding institution. At Hampshire County, Spanish-speaking tutors are needed to teach English and arrange special programs for Spanish-speaking inmates. At present there are no bi-lingual workers at the jail and tutors would provide the inmates with a contact outside the prison walls.

Action Lab needs people with diverse skills: arranging special programs, arts and crafts, Spanish language skills, etc., are but a few. Above and beyond any particular categories, we're seeking people who feel they have something to contribute to the needs of nearby communities. The program is very flexible and every member will help to formulate where the program is going and what it is seeking to accomplish. If Action Lab interests you, drop by on Wednesday night and find out a little more about who we are.

Money Bill Approved

WASHINGTON (AP)-A $4.2-billion bill for foreign aid and related programs-with a $1-billion increase almost equally divided between Nixon doctrine military aid and peaceful development loans-was approved today by the House Appropriations Committee.

While just over $1 billion higher than last year, the funds approved for foreign aid, the Peace Corps and international banks for the fiscal year starting last July 1 is $967.9 billion below President Nixon's requests.

Who Shall Rule?

The Undergraduate Student Senates have come up with a plan for the reorganization of the Student Union-Campus Center Governing Board. Their stated purpose is to make SUG Board more accountable to students' desires.

Under the proposed revision, a Campus Center-Student Union Policy Board would review and approve the operating budget of the Complex and establish policies regarding agreements, licenses, or contracts into which the complex's staff may enter.

Final review and veto power over Policy Board actions would be granted to the Board of Trustees through the Chancellor. The Chancellor may veto, accept, propose amendments to, or require reconsideration of the Policy Board actions under the new plan.

14 graduate and undergraduate students appointed by their respective senates along with seven students elected by the area governments would make up the Policy Board. Recall power over appointed students would remain with the senate presidents.

The reorganization plan also allows for a system whereby the Senate could impose amendments to Policy Board actions. Student Government Association referendums would also be binding on the group.

SUG Board will probably oppose this plan with good reason. For a long time they have been an entity apart from the rest of student government. Also, they claim that they have their own plans for becoming more accountable to students.

Before adopting the above plan at tomorrow's meeting the Student Senate should listen to rebuttal from the SUG Board and fully consider whether or not it wants to be involved in the management of the CC-Student Union Complex.

This issue should not turn into a power struggle between the groups.

Names To Remember

Well folks, this is another election year. Each voter is faced with his or her decision on whom to vote for in this year's upcoming presidential election. But hardly anyone realizes that today is primary day across this vast state of ours. As a matter of fact, such vital issues as abortion, legalization of marijuana, and varying ecology measures will be decided by those people elected to our state, local, and county positions. Very few people realize that the future of the Belchertown State Hospital and the Montague Dump proposal lie in today's primaries. However, if those issues don't concern you, think about the future of the quality of education at UMass, or any other state school. In fact, the results of this primary affect you more immediately than even the most crucial presidential race.

Now that I've suggested the importance of voting in today's primary, I'd like to tell you about the who candidates who best exemplify student wants and needs. The first, State Representative candidate Jim Collins, is probably a familiar figure to most Grad. students because of his former position in 1968 as Student Senate President. Aside from that, Collins is presently the director of the local Upward Bound program, and is an active McGovern supporter. Unlike most local candidates, Collins is running an issue-based campaign, focusing on such issues as state tax reforms and strict ecology measures.

On the issue of tax reform, Collins favors the institution of a graduated and progressive state income tax. In an issue paper which Collins has been circulating, he states that "Such a tax would mean that a family of five with a joint income of 10,000 dollars would, by conservative estimate, pay up to 60% less in state income taxes." He also states that "a family earning up to 26,000 dollars would pay less in taxes, yet the state could raise between 200 and 400 million dollars in new monies each year. He also advocates increased state aid to local school systems, with continued control of the schools within the community.

Collins is strongly opposed to the Montague Dump proposal to use waste materials as land fill, which would increasingly pollute the environment of the area. He ardently supports government control to halt industrial polluters.

Concerning the issues of marijuana and abortion reform, Collins supports the individual's right to control his or her own life and he feels that the government should only serve as a moderator to insure the safety of the individual or individuals concerned.

The second candidate I wish to discuss is George Como, a candidate for County Commissioner. Unlike most state or local positions, the County Commissioner's job is basically administrative, rather than legislative.

Como, a former student at Holyoke Community College and dear old UMass, presently works at the University Administrative Data Processing Department. He is in favor of decentralizing state government and strengthening county government, which he feels could be more responsive to the individuals within the county. Como feels that various issues such as law enforcement, sewage treatment, and waste disposal should be considered county functions.

Como is also in favor of strict protection of consumer rights and the creation of a county Industrial Commission to attract more industry and improve those industries already within the county.

Both of these candidates are running in today's Democratic primary, and both face strong opposition. Both of them need the student vote. If your policies and ideas of government are in conjunction with those stated in this article, and you are a registered voter in Amherst, then you have no other choice than to get out and vote for Jim Collins for State Representative and George Como for County Commissioner.

Time To Face Facts

Race is the great iceberg issue on this campus. No other issue arouses greater passions or misunderstanding. The reaction of some to the Student Senate decision guaranteeing Third World representation is yet another example of the phenomena.

Institutional racism is a process by which an organization, intentionally or unintentionally, functions to the disadvantage of Third World (primarily Black and Chicano) people. The Student Senate is a good example of that kind of racism. It functions to the disadvantage of minority people in two areas: (2) participation, and (b) funding.

If you have ever attended a Student Senate meeting, the lack of minority representation is self-evident. The Senate seems somehow secure in its posture as representative of the whole student body, even though it rarely has more than two or three black faces in the room. The Senate can only legitimately claim to represent the white majority.

There are several reasons for this de facto segregation. First, the Senate is not a priority for black leadership, since it doesn't directly relate to the needs of black people. The primary responsibility of black leadership is to the black community. The issue for that community is survival in a white institution, not playing white men's games in a white man's debating society. Second, the election process functions to discriminate against black people. The minority population has been so scattered within the university that there is no election district that has a black majority. Thus, few black candidates run or get elected. Those who do win have been elected with considerable white support and are not directly accountable to the black community.

Black representation on university committees varies considerably, but the white liberal Senate leadership does indeed try to guarantee significant minority representation on most crucial committees. The Chancellor Search Committee was composed of six students, two of whom were black. The Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Search Committee is composed of nine undergraduates, four of whom are black.

Two problems arise out of this system of appointments. First, the black community is dependent on white liberals to protect black interests. These white liberals are under no genuine obligation or pressure, but respond merely out of benevolence or other good liberal motives. Second, the Senate leadership relies almost exclusively on "who they know" in the minority community. Whether the individuals so appointed represent the interests of the minority community is more a matter of speculation than certainty.

The second example of institutional racism is in the area of Student Activities Tax Fund funding. Here the process is much more subtle. On the surface, black groups that seek SATF funds go through the same bureaucratic hassles as any other group and the Senate decision is equally fair or unfair. Occasionally, when a black group is up for consideration, a vocal, racial confrontation will flare up, but that is the exception. Such confrontations are only symptomatic anyway. They demonstrate the high level of hostility that both blacks and whites are repressing. The white repression ranges from blatant racism to mere resentment that there are now black groups that are speaking out on their own terms (which is a far subtler white racism.) The black repression stems from anger at having to shuffle and jive before white folks in order to get the tools to deal with their own oppression. Here again, they are on the receiving end of white benevolence or paternalism.

But this repression itself does not directly disadvantage the minority community. What does do so is the Senate's presumption that it is qualified to judge how to meet the needs of Third World people. The fact of the matter is that a hundred white people are not qualified. Yet we go through the ritual of pretense. Some of the most inane and ignorant questions are posed to black groups seeking funds. Needless to say, the black leaders are frequently insulted by the questions, and the senators rarely understand the answers. The Senate doesn't know and shouldn't pretend to. It is dealing with experiences it will never share and a culture it can only superficially understand.

The Senate's ignorance and paternalism leads it to fund any black group that comes down the pike. A group of five black hustlers with a good rap could jive their way through the Senate budgeting process, whether their proposal had any merit or not.

Neither blacks or whites exclusively share the blame for the situation outlined here. If fault is to be found, it lies with all of us. White people have been complacent, while black people have not organized to wrench whites from that complacency.

In any case, these are very real problems that we ignore at our peril. The liberal bubble will soon burst. History tells us that black folks can't depend on white benevolence to protect their own interests, yet that is what is happening, when anything is happening, in student government.

No amount of pious rhetoric and liberal "understanding" will overcome it. Hopefully, the Senate action will jar us from our complacency and create an institutional situation in which we all must directly confront the issue. The action, in any event, is the best thing the Senate has done in years. Who can ignore the problem now?

Letters To The Editor

Rules Of Fair Play

To The Editor:

I was dismayed and somewhat depressed by the arguments set down in a Letter To The Editor in Wednesday's Collegian, where the author attempted to defend the actions taken by the Black September terrorist group in Munich two weeks ago.

Apparently, the author felt the actions of the Arab guerrilla group were justified, or at the very least, understandable. I do not. My conscience tells me that the actions taken by the guerrillas were those of desperate madmen.

Aside from dismissing the author's arguments as illogically incoherent, I would first like to set him straight on a few points.

First, I defy the author of that Sept. 13 article, or any other capable person, to document for me a case where Palestinian guerrillas were tortured and/or treated inhumanely in any Israeli prison, or produce even a shred of evidence to that effect. The accusation was slanderous and decidedly warped.

The letter also suggests that the actions taken by the commandos were executed within the rules of "fair play" because the athletes were "soldiers" in the Israeli Army.

Admittedly, the Israeli Olympians were soldiers in as much as every Israeli man and woman must serve between the ages of 18-21 (the population of Israel being 1/20 that of the surrounding Arab states.) The athletes were, however, noncombatants, unarmed, and unequipped for combat. Furthermore, they were participating in a non-political, non-militaristic international event. (Ask boxer Captain Jesse Valdez if he packed a rod to face the Russian.) Their murder, in my opinion, was a brutal and inexcusable act of treachery befitting of savages.

The fact that the Israeli government was not prepared to exchange the hostages for the 200 political prisoners held in that country was in no way an indication that the Israelis "didn't care" to save the lives of their fellow Jews. That slighting accusation contained a taste of what the author might call "propaganda". In hindsight, Israeli and Munich officials acknowledged that they believed the hostages to be doomed men from the start, that is, it was likely they would be killed whether the demands were met or not. This may partially explain why the Munich police felt that they had nothing to lose by attempting to intercept the terrorists at the airfield.

Lastly, the author of that article humors me by suggesting that Israel has once again succeeded in swaying international public opinion to her side when in fact she has all too often been condemned by the international community for taking retaliatory actions to avenge or avoid such abhorrent guerrilla attacks.

Curiously enough, the distortion of facts and conclusions in that letter tended to discredit his defense of the guerrilla cause instead of drawing sympathy toward it.

The Big Ten

To The Editor:

A little bit late in coming, seeing that ripoffs have occurred already, etc., etc., but here are what I have found to be a possible TEN COMMANDMENTS OF ROOM MATES AND OTHER UMIES.

1. Respect the sleep of your room mate so that yours may also be respected.
2. Never give improvement courses or facsimile of such while your room mate is at study or hobby.
3. Use your own food, drink, and drugs if you have them, your room mate's only by permission or consent, remembering to return all used equipment.
4. Share thy pizza (and other commodities), especially on weekends.
5. Keep your opinions to yourself unless in discussion of such, and such must never be in group against a single person (while that person is present).
6. Use your shaving cream only on your face or legs as the case may be, except in extreme cases where consent for declaration of war has been given by both sides.
7. Respect your room mate's philosophy about coeducational cohabitational weekend evening activities. (bang - bang?)
8. Use your headphones, or tone down any music or noise contrivance (including the mouth) whenever your room mate is stricken with fever or flu, or any inspiration to study.
9. Never display your petty superiority over your room mate - if you are superior you need not display such (unless your room mate likes to crack the old aggies, then give that person a copy of these ten commandments.)
10. Thou shalt not rip off thy room mate, his friends, or their friends.

Anybody have any more ideas? Problems? Send 'em to 804-C2 Brown. Commandments are always up for revisions, and who knows - at UMass these might even be the wrong ten..

Once Again, Redmen

To The Editor:

This is written as a reply to David Miller's letter of yesterday. I feel his letter made about as much sense, if he wishes to put it that way, as mine. As far as knowing what one is talking about, where in hell did he get his information?

What I saw in Mr. Miller's letter seemed to be just his opinions to which he is, of course, entitled. But, Mr. Miller, let me tell you something.

My main objection to this subject is not the fact that the name "Redmen" has been dropped, but with the way it was done. Realize that the student body (or even the Student Senate) had no say in this change, the same also goes for the faculty, alumni, or Athletic Council. "Liberals" talk about democracy but tell me, was democracy served when Frank McInerney (our new Athletic Director) and the Board of Trustees approved of this change without the student body's knowledge of any proposed change until after it was too late?

There is really no point in anyone arguing about the pros or cons of this issue because it is too late to do anything about it. Frank McInerney has already taken a stand approving the change so all that can be done is have the Search Committee find a suitable replacement.

For those of you that prefer "Redmen" over "Statesman" or any other replacement, remember that several UMass teams still have "Redmen" or some kind of Indian emblem on team uniforms. That is, unless the Athletic Department is willing to replace these uniforms with new ones. Remember, uniforms cost money.

Again, I'm not objecting to the change as much as the way the change was brought about plus the added expense to replace uniforms that can no longer be used because either "Redmen" or some Indian symbol are on them. People are objecting to the amount of money being spent on athletics. Well, all this change has done is to add to the amount that has to be spent on athletics. Just keep this in the back of your mind.

Editorial Points

If everyone who's written a Letter to the Editor concerning the reapportionment of the Student Senate gets their way, the Senate will have about 700,000 people in it.

Today's primary day. It would be nice if all you people could get out and vote. Believe it or not, your vote does mean something.

It is now September 19, and as of last night the Red Sox were in first place by .001 percentage points. But don't complain, fans, at least there's still something going on. Think of where they were last year at this time.

OCS, Yes

(This is presented in original form)

Dear Sir,

In reply to your letter dated 2 Sept 1972, I am submitting to you the following information, which I sincerely hope will answer your questions.

First: There is no minimum height or visual requirement for OCS.

The requirements are as follows:

1 Be at least 18 years old but not more than 27.
2 Pass the army qualification test.
3 Pass the army physical exam.

These three requirements are for enlisting for the OCS program. The number of years You would have to enlist for is three years but after completing Basic training and OCS which takes seven months you are droped to a two year commitment. So actually you would only serve two years and seven months. Unless you deside to remain in.

In regard to your question on Intelligence and the Monetary School Of Languages, this you have to put in for while prosessing for OCS. But please understand that we can not garentee that you will get this. That is up to the needs of the army and your quilifacations. For example; When you are prosessing for OCS You will be asked to give three prefrences of which one has to be a compat arms. It will look some thin like thie:

Job preference: 1 Intelligence 2 Signal 3 Infantry

Now the army will give you one of thess preferances. What they do is, say there are ten openings in intelligince and twelve have asked for it. Well the ten best quilified will get it, and the other five would get there second choice. So it really depends on You and what openings there are.

I hope your questions have been answerd satisfactory and if you have any more questions please feel free to call us at 6888504 or stop in or write again.

Very truly,
SSG Paul Bennett

Introducing U.M.P.A.C.

To The Editor:

In this election year we are faced with an important decision. Should we wait for the candidates to end the war in Vietnam? If your answer is no or you aren't sure, then what is the alternative for you? A new organization is being formed by people who are tired of waiting, it is called UMPAC, UMass Peace Action Coalition, and is open to anyone who opposes the war in Southeast Asia regardless of any other political opinions you may have.

The organizational objective of UMPAC is to sponsor and build peaceful local actions and publicize the national demonstrations on October 26 and November 18, with the aim of bringing your message to our government in an open manner. This task will not be easy in this election year, but if you are willing to put in any amount of time at all then join us in our efforts.

A meeting will be held in room 803 in the Campus Center at 7:30 on Monday Sept. 18th. I hope to see you there.

Minority Privilege

To The Editor:

Unless I've missed the whole show, I don't see how anyone could possibly argue for the reserving outright of fifteen seats for "Third World" representatives in this year's Student Senate. That our Student Government Association (SGA) president, and daily newspaper can both support such a proposal reveals the gaping lack of judgment of some UMass student leaders.

Mark Freyermuth, in a letter to "The Collegian" of September 15, aptly demonstrates the implications of this new proposal. Any group of students with similar skin color, religious preference, disability, or clearly defined absurdity may be apportioned a number of representatives according to its size within the constituency -- in this case, the UMass undergraduate population. Regardless of whether the group displays or desires any cohesiveness.

Now, our representatives on the Student Senate, in their holy omnipotence, have decided that the poor spades on campus aren't getting properly represented, so whitey will step in and lend a hand. Thanks but no thanks.

Presently, senators are selected to represent dormitories or residential units, in a ratio of about 100:1. This system is similar to state and federal districting procedures, and is well precedented, though not particularly desirable.

In fact, it would probably work as well to assign representation on the basis of people's cums, or their major, or what town their parents live in. But around here the Student Senate has decided to do it by residency.

So it seems peculiar that a group mysteriously known as the "Third World" is given representation on the basis of their inate physical or cultural characteristics. To do so smacks of a quota system that we should be able to avoid at UMass, even if the Nixon administration can't (see editorial, Worcester Sunday Telegram, September 17, 1972, "Doubletalk on 'Quotas'").

If the Blacks, Chicanos and Spanish-speaking undergrads on campus (arbitrarily dubbed "Third World" by the Student Senate) want unified representation, all they have to do is live together. The New Africa House should be apportioned a number of senators consistent with the percentage of university undergrads living there.

Meanwhile, I'm thinking of starting a dormitory for all White Anglo-Saxon Protestants who want quality representation!

Students To Serve As Outreach Aides

Mayor Theodore D. Mann of Newton, Massachusetts, in cooperation with the Center for Outreach Programs at the University of Massachusetts, recently announced the first appointment of three University of Massachusetts student interns to serve as full-time aides through December.

The students, all political science majors at the University of Massachusetts are: Robert R. Slone, son of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney L. Sloane, 16 Tahanto Rd., Worcester, Mass., currently a senior. Daniel O. Marcus, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Marcus, 65 Fernandes Circle, Randolph, Mass., also a senior. And Thomas P. O'Reilly Jr. son of Mrs. Jennette O'Reilly, 27 Keith Terrace, Stoughton, Mass., a junior.

The Outreach Program, in its first year of operation, has as its main objective providing students with community experience in their related major fields. Mayor Mann has the distinction of being the first Mayor in the state to participate with Outreach. It is hoped that the success of this pioneer program will lead to similar statewide internships in the future.

Mayor Mann's aim in initiating the municipal government aspect of the program is to provide the students with on the job experience in such areas as departmental inter-relationships, and relationships between the legislative body, school, and Executive Department.

Hub Police Suspected In Payoff

BOSTON (AP)-The names of two high-ranking police officials were on suspected payoff lists turned over to the Boston Police Department Monday for a department investigation of itself, published reports said.

The Boston Evening Globe said Monday that not one, but two, lists of the names of police officers were found among records seized in a raid by Suffolk County Dist. Atty. Garrett H. Byrne's investigators on an alleged bookie operation.

One list of suspected payoffs to eight superior officers and 50 patrolmen contained the names of policemen, sums of money and telephone numbers, the report said.

The other is a Christmas list, seized in the same raid last spring but not mentioned until today, showing alleged holiday gifts to policemen, the Globe said.

The report said the information on the lists was turned over to the police by Byrne when he met with Superintendent-in-Chief William I. Taylor, acting commissioner, and Supt. James J. Buchanan, both of whom were above suspicion.

HOLYOKE, Mass. (AP)-One Holyoke city employe was reported in serious condition while four others were hospitalized in fair to good condition Monday following a chlorine gas accident at a water chlorinating station.

Inspectors are trying to determine the cause of a chlorine leak that occurred while two Water Department workers were changing large chlorine tanks, replacing one that had run out.

Acting Fire Chief William Long said a rupture in tubing connecting the tank to the city's water supply led to the chlorine turning into gas, and the toxic fumes burned the two water workers, as well as three firemen.

The seriously injured man was Stanley Windoloski, a foreman. He was reported under treatment at Holyoke Hospital's intensive care unit.

A one-half mile residential area was evacuated for 45 minutes before firemen could seal the leak. Long said the gas formed in small, low clouds and could have been potentially dangerous to residents.

BOSTON (AP)-State Rep. Ralph Sirianni, D-Winthrop, charged Department of Public Health employes with "flagrant abuse" of telephone service.

Sirianni said in a statement that the department's telephone bill has risen to more than $12,000 per month.

He said his office has discovered "pattern use...to such remote places as Daytona Beach, Fla., and various points on the West Coast...with charges for such service being credited against the commonwealth."

In letters to Public Health Commissioner William Bicknell, Sirianni said he requested that the department investigate its use of telephone service.

Math Colloquia To Begin Thursday

Michael Arbib will lead off this year's junior colloquium for undergraduates math majors on Thursday with a talk entitled "How To Do Algebra and Still Call it Computer Science." The junior colloquium is designed to provide an opportunity for students to encounter faculty in a setting outside the classroom. It consists of a coffee hour followed by an organized presentation. These feature speakers on mathematical topics as well as movies and an occasional discussion of career opportunities.

Ordinarily colloquia are held on Tuesdays at 3:30. However the first two this semester are scheduled for Thursdays. Next Thursday, the 28th, Leonard Gillman will speak on "A Friendly Look At The Integral." Michael Arbib's talk will be this Thursday at 4:00 in the Colloquium Room of Arnold House, preceded by a coffee hour at 3:30 in the Math Lounge, Arnold.

Open to anyone with a good camera on his shoulders.

A challenge: Picture this. You only go around once in life. And you've got to reach for all the gusto you can. You can't settle for less. Because you don't get a second chance. This is our philosophy at the Jos. Schlitz Brewing Co. This is what we want you to find. And picture for us. And if your photo is judged the best on your campus, it will be printed in this paper. With your name, too. And you will be awarded $100. Not too shabby.

You will be competing against students at your campus only. All photos should be black and white. And by the way, if you are a professional photographer this offer is not for you, since you already have $100. Please, please get and send us written permission from every recognizable person you use in your photo. Otherwise, your picture will be disqualified. Hampshire College To Blow Giant Bubble

A giant bubble is soon to appear on the Hampshire College campus. Called an "air structure," the nylon fabric dome will be supported only by air pressure from large fans. It will be used to cover four new tennis courts and will have both heat and light to provide a versatile and much-needed space for indoor sports and recreation.

Measuring 118 by 206 feet at its base, the inflated bubble will rise to a height of 44 feet. The walls are green-colored up to about 10 feet so tennis players will have better visibility; the remainder of the dome is white. A total of six new tennis courts are being built adjacent to the half-dozen existing courts on the west side of campus, and they have the same all-weather, slow-bounce surface.

Various activities are possible in this enclosed recreational/athletic area because the tennis nets may be removed to leave clear floor space. Other equipment is being purchased so that volleyball and basketball may be played. In addition, there will be mats for wrestling and tumbling, gymnastic equipment, and trampoline.

During winter months, it is expected that two of the covered courts will normally be set up for tennis. The remaining space may be used for any athletic or recreational purposes students may choose, including dances or meetings. For summer use the bubble will be removed, giving a total of twelve outdoor tennis courts.

Completion of the courts and air structure is due in mid- to late October, so it will be ready for use when colder weather arrives.

Although originally planned as a temporary or interim facility for sports and recreation until a more permanent structure is built, the dome has a life expentancy of 10 to 15 years before fabric replacement is needed. Therefore, the covered courts are being built in coordination with a new recreation and athletic center planned for the area east of the tennis courts.

Hampshire's new air structure-covered indoor tennis courts and recreation space complements the athletic facilities of other Valley institutions. It will allow Hampshire to become more of a partner in the sharing of limited recreational resources by offering a unique place for people from area colleges and communities to exercise and relax.

The tennis courts are being built by Boston Tennis Court Co., and Air-Tech is supplying the air structure. Total contract value for the project is $127,500.

3 Win Novice Chess Tourney

Eighty-three chess players, about half of them UMass students, competed in the First UMass Novice Chess Championship last Saturday. The winners, each with a perfect 5-0 score, were Aviad Broshi, an assistant math professor at UMass; Bob Finch, a UMass student; and David McCarthy, an Amherst College student. Each co-champion will receive a trophy or a year's membership in the U.S. Chess Federation, as he chooses.

Originally the tournament was to be held in Rooms 804 and 808 of the Campus Center, but the unexpectedly high turnout forced the Chess Club to ask for more space. Fortunately the Campus Center Scheduling Dept. was able to release 803, 805, and 809, to the tournament. Chess tournaments across the country have been attracting unprecedented numbers of players ever since Bobby Fischer won the world championship. Last week's Chess Club meeting drew about 60 people, more than twice as many as an average meeting last semester.

The club hopes this trend will continue at its next event, the First Hampshire County Novice Chess Championship, to be held this coming Saturday in the Old Junior High School Gymnasium in Amherst (behind Gnomon Copy Center). UMass students are welcome to play in this tournament. The entry fee is $2. Registration is 9:00 A.M. to 9:30 A.M. Saturday morning, but advance entries will be accepted at either of this week's Chess Club meetings (see below). That tournament will be much like the one at UMass, with one difference. "Many players didn't like having to wait until every first-round game was finished before they could play their second-round game," explained Jim Lane, who directed the tournament at UMass. Next week a speedier pairing system will be used.

On Sunday, after the tournament, several members of the club met to discuss fall activities. Besides the novice tournaments, there will be an open tournament with at least $200 in prizes on campus over the Sept. 30-Oct. 1 weekend. Sometime in October, the club will hold a one-night-a-week club championship. As an experiment, the club will start its own rating system to rank members, beginning with its next meeting tonight in C.C. Room 165. Another meeting will be held on Wednesday in C.C. 804-8. Both will start at 7:30 P.M. and are open to anyone who wants to come, student or nonstudent.

Courthouse Found Safe

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP)-Work resumed at the Middlesex County Superior Courthouse Monday after the 18th and 19th floors were found to be structurally sound.

Three hundred construction workers evacuated the building Friday afternoon after a hairline crack was found on the 18th floor, a county spokesman said.

A spokesman at the site Monday said, "The architect and structural engineer have been here since 6 a.m., and everything is back to normal."

Architect Edward J. Tedesco, of Winchester, who said he inspected the upper levels, added, "It was determined that the floors are not structurally deficient and that there is absolutely no cause for concern as to the structural integrity of the building."

Carpets At MSU New Attraction

CARPETBAGGER, AWAY! They're trying to get more residents for the residence halls of Michigan State University by remodeling the student digs, according to a feature in the Michigan State News. And the climax of the effort came this summer with the installation of 45,000 yards of carpeting in dormitories, at a cost of more than $500,000.

The deadening of noise which results should be an attraction to former residents who have complained of commotion in the corridors.

It remains to be seen whether the new carpeting will bag the people needed to keep the halls open, the paper indicated.

WEEKEND COLLEGE for upper class credit is being offered at Portland (Ore.) State U., according to its Vanguard newspaper. Starting this Fall, those students unable to attend classes during the week because of job conflicts will be able to finish up on weekends. Students requiring certain class credits to graduate may also be able to catch up.

The weekend program is funded by the Division of Continuing Education.

FREEDOM OF THE PRESS? The Auburn (Ala) Plainsman indicates parenthetically in its masthead that its "Subscription rate by mail is $4.25 for a full year (this includes 4 per cent state tax)."

It is amazing to some that such a blatant restriction on the dissemination of news should go unattended. If ever there were a cause for the campus press to fight, this is it: that newspapers should be taxed.

CONVERSATION PIECE: add to the list of clever names students give to their publications "The Real Thing" magazine of Wayne State College (Nebr.)

But it proved to be not so real, since its obituary was reported for the third edition of the biennial Directory of the College Student Press in America.

• • • •

CATCHING UP - we missed it when it appeared on page 6 of the March 19, 1971 edition of the Louisiana State Daily Reveille: the headline read, Research has found that dirt eaters are common."

Which should help the ecology-minded.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Cancer enjoys feeding people. Many great chefs were born under that zodiacal sign. The United States is a Cancer nation and has been known to feed the world. Famed cooking expert, Mike Roy, co-authored a book with me, "Cooking With Astrology." He has Cancer on the Ascendant of his horoscope and was born under the zodiacal sign of Cancer. If invited to dine by a Cancer native, you can feel fortunate.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Accent is on hopes and wishes. You fulfill them by being versatile, accepting social invitations. Laugh at your own foibles. Display humor. One who can mean much to you now is a close observer. Smile!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Deal with those in positions of authority. Skip middlemen. Go directly to source. Act in confident, authoritative manner. Aquarius and Leo individuals could figure prominently. Don't sell yourself short.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Emphasis is on travel and the learning process. Be receptive, but in an aggressive manner. Means open yourself to knowledge, experience. Read and write. Get ideas across. Develop concepts. Deal with Virgo.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Concern with the occult or what is hidden comes to fore. You find out why family member acts in special way. Don't force your views. You get what you want if you are patient, understanding.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Your powers of perceptiveness surge to forefront. Heed inner feelings. Find reasons "why." Reject the superficial. One close to you reacts in unusual manner. Get to heart of matter in straightforward manner.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Adhere to principles. Basic work, health plans should be reinforced. You make gain of solid nature. Specifically, what was regarded as routing becomes of more importance. Your efforts result in recognition.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Children are very much in picture. You can bridge any generation gap. Key is to listen without condemning. Don't judge or cast first stone. Take chance on your own creative resources. Don't depend too much on others.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): What was restrictive may now be opened. You get needed room if you demand, insist and reveal that you have allies. Means exude confidence even it you have to bluff. Older individual is testing your mettle.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Spotlight is on how you reconcile difference of opinion within family circle. Tendency is to want to travel. But there are reasons to attend to matters at home. Cancer individual could play key role.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): By expanding, you make money. Means refuse to be limited, restricted for no good reason. One who sings blues should be ignored. You now can express, imprint style and get paid for doing what pleases.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Lunar cycle is high; get going in more independent manner. Lead way. You have more going for you than might be imagined. Key is to be thorough, patient and confident. Wear bright colors. Make personal appearances.

At 30 A Man Learns, Even Muhammad Ali

DEER LAKE, Pa.,-On a wooded hill here about 25 miles north of Reading, an oiled dirt road led up to where two acres of trees had been leveled. In the clearing, Muhammad Ali stood outside a low log cabin, his gym. Not far away was a larger log cabin near a wooden stable with four horses. Behind the gym another log cabin was being built near the long, yellow and white mobile home where he is living.

"I always wanted to have a real training camp in the mountains," he was saying. "Real logs, hard beds, coal stoves." He has been here preparing for his 12-round bout with Floyd Patterson next Wednesday at Madison Square Garden.

"No fighter's ever built a real camp like this," he said. "When you picture a training camp for a fighter, you picture this. Going up a hill, a dirt road, trees and woods. This is what I always thought of when I was a kid. Not hotels. No going into a fancy hotel lobby, with chandeliers and pies and cakes. That's not a training camp. This gym cost me $65,000 to build. It'll cost me $150,000 by the time everything's finished, the other buildings and all. I'm buying three more house trailers, too. They're beautiful, like penthouse suites. Cost me $8,000. I'll have four. I'll be able to sleep 20 people here. But it's worth it."

Ali says that training expenses for his title extravaganza with Joe Frazier last year amounted to $250,000. "I'm saving money this way," he said. "I don't know why I didn't do this years ago. I should have done this after I won the title. I could have done this as easy as buying cars, as easy as buying that bus I had. But a man learns. This is an investment."

Suddenly, at age 30, Ali has begun to think about his financial future. "No more cars, no more Rolls-Royces," he said. "I got two Rolls-Royces, they cost me about $63,000, but I'm going to make them pay off. I'm going to run them until they can't run anymore. The money I spent on them would have bought a $300,000 housing project. The houses would have paid themselves off and my kids would have had security for life."

He and his wife, Belinda, have four children-three daughters and a son. He talks of six more children.

"It ain't too late to start saving, because I can earn for 10 more years if I have to. I thought about 10 years from now. I said to myself, 'Man, if I don't watch it, I'll be broke.' I get $100,000 for a fight, I buy something costing $8,000, something else cost $24,000 and the 100 goes like hell. It costs me $10,000 a month to live. I can't keep that up. I'm going to quit it from here. I own what I have and I'm going to keep what I have."

He is aware of the financial problems that beset two other famous black boxers, Joe Louis and Sugar Ray Robinson. "I think about them two all the time," he said. "I'm going to make my wife make her own clothes. She don't have to, but I'm going to make her do it. I read about this man Lamar Hunt, the football man, how he's got only two or three suits and drives on old Plymouth, but he's worth millions. He flies second-class on planes, him and his whole family. He says, 'Why spend money on something when you can't get it back.' And he's right."

Ali, also known as Cassius Clay, has been guaranteed $250,000 for the Patterson bout, which will put his career earnings at about $7-million before taxes.

"I put aside 75 per cent of my purses now," he said. "I can't touch it for 20 years. I signed a note. I might take home $100,000 from the Patterson fight. I'll put $75,000 in the bank, which is a lot of money if you handle it right. Put it in there and don't touch it. I'll have a million dollars cash soon. I'll take the $60,000-a-year interest and I'll live.

"I don't want nobody whispering, 'See that waitress, that's Muhammad Ali's daughter.' That's pitiful when you think about it. Muhammad Ali made all that money and his daughter's working for $125 a week. But it ain't gonna happen. I'm going to be the first black fighter you can look at and say, 'There's a wise, wealthy man with property, camps, businesses and $2-million in the bank."

He picked up his 4-month-old son, Abn Muhammad Ali, and kissed him.

"He's not going to be a boxer, he's going to carry a briefcase," Ali said. "But from now on I've got to watch it. I'm going to save some money for him now. I'm determined that people can't look at me and say, "Ain't it a shame, he made $2.5-million with Frazier.' They don't say taxes took so much, or expenses took so much-'He made $500,000 with Quarry, he made $250,000 with Ellis, and now he's a yard guard.' But it ain't gonna happen with me."

O's Baffle Sox 5-2

BOSTON (AP)-Brooks Robinson cracked three hits, driving home one run and scoring two others Monday night as Baltimore topped Boston 5-2 to tighten up baseball's American League East Championship race.

The loss dropped the Red Sox into second place in the East, one-half game behind the idle Detroit Tigers who took over the lead. Baltimore is third, one game behind the idle New York Yankees remained fourth, 2-1/2 games out.

The Red Sox nipped Oriole starter Pat Dobson for a run in the second on Doug Griffin's sacrifice fly before Robinson started the Baltimore comeback.

He double leading off the fourth and scored on Dave Johnson's triple, tying the score.

In the sixth, the Orioles took the lead. Terry Cowley walked and raced to third on Robinson's single. Rookie catcher Johnny Oates followed with a double for one run and Dobson delivered a two-out single, delivering Robinson with another.

The Orioles padded their lead with two more runs in the seventh. Paul Blair opened with a double and with one out, Boog Powell beat out an infield single. Then Don Baylor drive in a run with a pinch single and Robinson's third hit of the night made it 5-1.

The Red Sox knocked out Dobson in the bottom of the seventh, scoring a run on hits by Carlton Fisk and Dwight Evans and an error by Bobby Grich. But Doyle Alexander come on to get pinch hitter Cecil Cooper to line into a rally killing double play.

Floyd Awaits Ali

NEW YORK (AP) Floyd Patterson rested Monday and hoped that Muhammad Ali was a big favorite for their fight Wednesday night, while Ali continued to train and said he "expected the fight to go all the way."

Patterson, who ended his training Saturday for the scheduled 12-round fight between two former heavyweight champions at Madison Square Garden, said:

"I hope Clay Ali is a 10-1 favorite. The bigger underdog I am the better chance I have to win. The bigger favorite he is, the more confidence he has, and the more confidence he has the more overconfident he will get."

Ali was such a favorite that there was no betting line on the fight. Ali continued working out at his camp at Deer Lake, Pa., sparring a total of 19 rounds Saturday, Sunday and Monday.

Ali weighed 219 pounds Monday and expected to go into the fight at 217. Patterson could weight as low as 190.

Ali weighed 210-1/2 when he stopped Patterson in 12 rounds at Las Vegas, Nev., Nov. 22, 1965. Patterson weighed 196-3/4.

Patterson, 37, will take a nine-fight winning streak into the ring against Ali, who has won six straight.

Many of a college coach's toughest games are played not on a playing field but in the living room of a high school athlete and his parents, or in the local steak house where the coach pulls out brochures and picks up the tab. The recruiting game is never over until the talent shows up for registration.

Recruiting for UMass requires certain assurances to the prospect. The hockey coach might say, "The rink is a problem. We don't have one. But the fans are great." The basketball coach might say, "The court is a problem. We do have one. But the fans are great."

Taking stock of new freshmen gives overdue emphasis to such deceptive credentials as all-star high school ratings, usually determined by coaches and sportswriters biased toward their local favorites. It's easy to forget that the best athletes sometimes come from oblivion. Julius Erving hardly dominated his high school team. This year's football captain, Clarence Brooks, was not even recruited by UMass, but came anyway.

An added feature to the latest hordes of confused freshmen is that, out of the questionable beneficence of the NCAA, they are this year eligible for varsity football and basketball. Other varsity sports could use freshmen last year. Although Dick MacPherson's football team will not use freshmen, other members of the Class of '76 may be measured for varsity uniforms before they've frayed the edges of their first syllabi.

The MacPherson regime, steadfastly opposed to the rule change, had a fine recruiting season in its second year. The captain of Boston's All-Scholastic team, Winchester fullback Bob Wolfe, is here. So is Jerry Mondalto, who in his senior year at Amesbury High scored 22 touchdowns as a halfback and batted .506 as a shortstop. Another offensive threat was found in the 152-pound presence of Bill Gel Somino, who runs the 40 in 4.75 and who was Rhode Island's scoring champion.

Minnechaug Regional's pass combination of quarterback Gary Pabis (6'4, 200-lb.) and tight end Ned Deane (6'3, 219lb.), both of whom were All-Western Mass. selections, came as a tandem. Two other prizes were defensive end Walt Garwacki of Chicopee and North Yarmouth (Me.) Academy and Bedford safety Steve Wood.

Although the football staff has concentrated on in-state prospects as never before, future teams of the Fighting Unredmen may benefit from the services of such imports as all-state linebackers Joe Andrews of Providence, R.I., and Neil Desmarais of Rochester, N.H., and tackle Tom Harris of Liverpool, N.Y.

Basketball coach Jack Leaman is not so adamant as MacPherson against using freshmen on the varsity, and the reason is a 5'9 backcourt whiz from Philadelphia named Michael Stokes. An All-City choice at West Philly High, where he averaged 22 points a game, Stokes chose UMass over the Big Five of Philadelphia, Syracuse and East Carolina out of the possibility of a varsity start as a freshman.

"They didn't promise me I'd start as a freshman here," he says, "but they said I had a chance. Another thing that impressed me was that so many of the athletes here graduate."

UMass also successfully wooed 6'6 forward Glenn Cooper of Newtown, L.I., and 6'10 center Tom Ryan of Monroe, Conn., both of whom arrive with glittering point and rebound averages.

New soccer coach, British import Gerry Redmond, who incidentally refuses to change his name even though it is dangerously close to that hated epithet, has a Brazilian named Luiz Ambar, who may be the best ever at UMass. Ambar picked UMass over UCLA, Dartmouth and Brown.

UMass also landed Hopkins Academy fullback Gary Cook, halfback Eric Bohr of Sparta, N.J., Amherst forward Dave Penza, and Ludlow fullback Dan Ouellette, whose brother Dave is the UMass Co-captain.

Hockey coach Jack Canniff calls Neil Drawbridge of Wachusett Regional "the best player in Central Mass. last year." Other top prospects include forwards Steve Mason of Auburn and Bridgeton (Me.) Academy and Billy Harris of Westfield and Trinity Pawling (N.Y.) Prep. UMass, however, was outbid by Boston College for numerous Boston area stars.

The best pitching prospect in New England, at least in the eyes of baseball coach Dick Bergquist, is 6'5, 220-lb. righthander Craig Allegrazza of Milford. Coached in high school by former UMass catcher Tony Chinappi, Allegrazza was drafted by the Pittsburgh Pirates but has rejected, for the time being, the blandishments of pro ball.

SPORTS

Lacrosse has its share of fresh talent in midfielder/attackman Andy Scheffer of Plymouth, N.H., goalie Bob Durland of Baldwinsville, N.Y., defenseman Fred Malouf of Needham and midfielders Chris Olson of Huntington, L.I., and Andy Howard of Sudbury.

UMass' burgeoning fortunes in wrestling will be aided by two Massachusetts state champions from Concord, Gerry O'Doherty at 165-lb. and Brian Duffy at 118. Coach Homer Barr was especially pleased to land two Pennsylvania products, Robby Fair of Lower Merion, Pa., at 118 and Larry Reynolds, a transfer from Bloomsburg State, at 126. Another well regarded transfer is Steve Benson, a 158-pounder from New York Maritime.

A pair of Williston Academy products, Tom Maguire of Foxboro and Mike Conlin of Worcester, may break into the varsity track and cross-country picture this year. Another possibility is Peter Byron, one of New Jersey's top half-milers. Fred Kruse of Salem, N.H., in the high jump and high hurdles and Kurt Stegerwald of Cheshire, Ct., in the high hurdles also bear fine credentials.

The swim team will have Wayne DeLoria of Chicopee in the breast-stroke, but there are unknown quantities in golf and tennis, because UMass did not recruit in those sports. And the gymnastics picture has been clouded by the untimely departure of Erik and Kitty Kjeldsen, the Arthur and Kathryn Murray of UMass sports.

As usual, there are quite a few big fish who escape the UMass recruiting nets. Perhaps the most slippery was footballer Don Macek, an All-American lineman from Manchester, N.H. Even his fellow statesman, Greg Landry, was enlisted to talk with Macek as UMass tried everything short of abduction. Macek is now a student at, where else, Boston College.

SUG Seeks Negotiations

In response to a motion placed before the Undergraduate Student Senates last week which proposed a reorganization of the Student Union Governing Board and its incorporation into the S.G.A., SUG Board last night voted to appoint a committee to negotiate and discuss its differences with the SGA.

It is hoped by the SUG Board that some fruitful dialogue between the two governing bodies could avoid an immediate showdown by postponing the vote on the Senate motion at tonight's senate meeting. A letter was drafted and sent to SGA President Larry Ladd and Senate Speaker John Hogan to that effect.

Under the Senate proposal, SUG Board would cease to be a separate, autonomous governing board and would be stripped of its present constitution and bylaws. SUG Board's present function is to formulate student union-campus center policy.

The Senate motion maintains that SUG's twenty-one members, who were appointed by the Senates are not accountable to students.

On the other hand, SUG Board next week plans to discuss and vote on a proposal presented at last night's meeting which would amend its constitution by changing its member selection procedure to a general election system in the hope of becoming more representative of the student community. According to SUG Board spokesman Lisa Mandell, the board would be one more step removed from students if it came under the SGA's wing.

A provision would also be instituted whereby any action of the board could be subject to a decision by referendum within twenty academic days, provided that a petition be submitted to the board signed by 10% of the eligible student body. The Senate proposal would require 25%. "We'd rather be directly accountable to students," sad Ms. Mandell.

This motion, however, by no means came as a reaction to last week's Senate motion, she added. Board election procedures have been under consideration for some time she said.

Ladd and Hogan appeared before last night's SUG meeting to elaborate on the Senate motion, frequently coming under heated questioning. Ladd said that concern was focused on the SUG Board because some senators over the past summer were disturbed by the $62.50 Campus Center fee. He also charged that students never had the option for a referendum on the fee when the SUG Board was in session, and consequently proposed that all undergraduate appointments to the Board be recalled, and that SUG Board become a standing committee of the Student Senates.

"Structural pitfalls" could be eliminated, said Ladd, by establishing a screening panel for appointments to the Board, composed of people with expertise within certain committee issues who would interview candidates and judge their qualifications. Based upon their recommendations, the SGA president would make the final appointments, an idea which SUG Board member Guy Ross branded as rubber stamp policy.

SUG Board members were generally in favor of a general election procedure which, along with being more democratic, which they said would motivate the prospective Board member to be more dedicated.

Droney, Hicks Triumphant

BOSTON (AP) — Middlesex County Dist. Atty. John J. Droney lost Boston but won a three-way contest for the Democratic U.S. Senate nomination in the Massachusetts primary election Tuesday.

U.S. Rep. Louise Day Hicks, a Democrat, won renomination in the 9th Congressional District, swamping five opponents, and Democrat John F. Kerry pulled into a substantial early lead in a bitter 10-way race for the 5th District congressional nomination.

Droney, Boston City Councillor Gerald F. O'Leary and Hampden County Register of Deeds John Pierce Lynch of Springfield were vying for the Democratic nomination to oppose GOP Sen. Edward W. Brooke in November.

Brooke was unopposed in the primary.

With 1,382 of 2,042 precincts reporting, Droney had 103,496 votes, O'Leary had 95,688 and Lynch had 65,929.

In the congressional races, Mrs. Hicks, seeking a second term, pulled into a substantial 2-1 lead over her closest opponents.

She was challenged by state Sen. Robert L. Cawley of Boston, Boston School Committeeman James W. Hennigan and three blacks, Hubert E. Jones of Newton, Melvin B. Miller and Enoch O'D. Woodhouse, both of Boston.

In the 5th District, 10 Democrats and four Republicans were seeking to run for a vacant seat that had been held for nearly a century by the Republicans.

Among those trailing Kerry, a former leader of the Vietnam Veterans Against the War, were state Reps. Anthony R. DiFruscia of Lawrence, Paul J. Sheehy and John J. Desmond of Lowell and former Lawrence Mayor Daniel P. Kiley.

With 28 of 154 precincts reporting, Kerry had 7,710 votes while DiFruscia, his nearest rival, had 2,208.

Former state Rep. Paul Cronin of Andover won the GOP nomination in the 5th District. Among those who lost to him were Lowell Mayor Ellen A. Sampson.

In the 4th Congressional District, Republican state Rep. Martin A. Linsky held a narrow lead over Avi N. Nelson of Brookline, a scientist and the son of a prominent rabbi. The winner will meet Rep. Robert F. Drinan in the general election.

Trailing in that race were state Rep. Robert F. Belmonte of Framingham and former Congressmen Laurence Curtis of Newton.

Drinan had no primary opposition.

In the 7th Congressional District, Rep. Torbert H. MacDonald of Malden easily won renomination.

Four Republicans seeking the 7th District nomination were Joan M. Aliberti of Malden, Harry G. Chickles of Wakefield, Gordon F. Hughes of Melrose and Vincent Galvin of Winchester. Mrs. Aliberti took an early lead.

In the 6th District, Rep. Michael J. Harrington also won renomination, easily defeating Ronald Kowalski of Lynn, a Boston State College teacher.

In Boston, at least six representatives apparently lost their seats and at least one senator was upset Tuesday as voters cast ballots for legislative and executive council seats.

The office of House Speaker David M. Bartley said Tuesday night it had received word from at least eight incumbent Democratic members of the House who said they had been defeated in the primary.

The eight listed by Bartley's office were Reps. Joseph A. Langone III, Mimie B. Pitaro, Francis K. Dwyer, Franklin Holgate, James F. Hart and Carter Kimbrel, all of Boston, William J. Callahan of Malden and Joseph Del Grosso of Revere.

Holgate and Kimbrel are two of the three black members of the House and Pitaro is a Roman Catholic priest.

Senate President Kevin B. Harrington, meanwhile, reported that Sen. James J. Carrigan, D-Lynn, had apparently been upset by a margin of about 200 votes by Rep. Walter J. Boverini, D-Lynn.

Local Primary Results

In the local state primary contests, the following were the results received as of 12 midnight last night.,

In the democratic race for representative in the Second Hampshire District without the town of Hadley reporting the leader and apparent winner was incumbent representative James Nolen with 2513 votes. In second position was James Collins with 2275 votes and third Edmund Scheinost with 2040.

Although the Hadley vote will not be really released until tomorrow morning it appears that it will be Nolen and Colling on the ballot in November.

On the Republican side for representative in this district, the two names on the ballot will be William Whitlock and Nataniel Reed. Out of the running, even without the Hadley count was Norman Cowles. Whitlock has 1162 to 868 for Reed and 382 for Cowles.

Other winners locally were John Breguet and George Como for County Commissioner. (two spots) and William O'Conner for County Treasurer. For Governor's Council in the Eighth District the winner was Edward O'Brian.

John Olver ran unopposed.

The SUG Board Hassle

By ROBERT L. SCHEIER

The student senate is scheduled to consider changes tonight it has proposed in the Student Union-Campus Center Governing (SUG) board.

Supporters of the changes claim they will increase the board's accountability to students, while current SUG board members claim is a power play by the student senate.

The current SUG board, at its meeting last night, presented its own set of changes in its constitution including referendums, recall, and election of SUG board members, instead of their appointment, as is currently the case.

On many points, the SUG board and student senate proposals run along the same lines, but the groups remain deadlocked over several issues, including which group has the right to amend the SUG board constitution.

The SUG board--if it still exists in its present form--is scheduled to vote on its changes next week.

The purpose of the board is to insure the complex is responsive to the needs of the University Community.

Here are the changes proposed by the two groups on some key issues:

CONSTITUTION CHANGES: Currently, the SUG board has the right to amend its own constitution by a two-thirds vote, upon the approval of the Chancellor. Under the senate proposal, the constitution could be amended by a two-thirds vote of both the undergraduate and graduate senates, meeting seperately.

Under the new SUG board proposal, Constitutional changes were not mentioned but board members have expressed their desire to retain the power to make such changes.

REFERENDUM ON AND CHANGES BOARD ACTIONS: There is currently no provision in the SUG Board constitution for student referendums on its actions. The senate proposal would allow the SUG Board's policy board to conduct a referendum on any issue within its authority.

In addition, under the senate proposal, either senate may propose an amendment to SUG Board actions before they automatically go into effect after eight days.

Under the new SUG Board proposal, any action can be put to a referendum following the presentation to the board of a petition signed by 10 per cent of eligible students, passed by a 2/3 vote of either Senate, and a two thirds vote of the board.

MEMBERSHIP: The SUG board is currently made up of 22 voting members, 21 of whom are appointed by both senates. The University Alumni association appoints the other.

In addition, there are 13 non-voting members, including members of the administration and a faculty member appointed by the Faculty-Senate.

Under the senate proposal, voting membership would consist of 14 graduate and undergraduate members who would be appointed, in addition to seven undergraduates elected to the board by their areas. Other voting members would include a representative appointed by the University Alumni Association, and three professional staff members appointed by the Co-ordinator of Student Activities and the director of the Campus Center complex.

The SUG board proposes 21 voting members, all elected by their respective areas.

Senate Challenge Faces Court Fight

By A.J. BASTARACHE

A Collegian article late last week cited Matt Tackeff as saying he would probably work through the university judiciary to challenge a Student Senate vote guaranteeing 15 seats to members of the UMass Third World community. Later, John Hogan, the bill's sponsor, commented briefly on judiciary procedure, but admitted he had no idea of how the challenge would fare at the hands of the judiciary, since he was not familiar with them.

Senator Hogan's unfamiliarity is not surprising, since most students are not familiar with judiciary's functions or potential.

Academic regulations for UMass initially state that the judicial system serves as a board of appeals for students faced with disciplinary action, with progressively "higher" boards available. Separate interviews with Student Attorney Genral Bert Emmons and Chief Justice Larry Smith indicated the judiciaries' scope is wider and considerabley more personal.

Complaints before the board range from annoyances like water bombs dropped from high-rise windows, past the shoplifting misdemeanors in and around campus, and on to issues of constitutionality of Student Senate proceedings.

House Judiciaries, the most basic levels of the system, would probably handle the water bomb bombasts. Shoplifting cases are handled by the Non-Residential Judiciary, which consequently handles nearly four times the workload of its peers, the East and West Judiciaries and the Greek Judiciary.

If, or when, Matt Tackeff gathers twenty-four supporters to initiate a petition challenging the constitutionality of the Third World representation bill, such a case would appear before the General Court of Justice. Tackeff could obtain non-partisan help from Bert Emmons' committee of advocat in order to originate a petition, but Emmons, as Attorney General, is required to defend the Senate.

Emmons feels that evidence could be presented in one evening, and a week of deliberation might be sufficient.

If the General Court concurs with Tackeff's challenge, it has the power to declare an election that has taken place as null, and to order new elections. Concerning judicial power, Larry Smith cites student government by-laws and says "The Student Judiciary is no more important nor less important than the Student Senate..."

The Student Judiciary is trying to widen its domain. Last year, an off-campus liquor establishment voluntarily has a student tried by the board, and although the defendant was found innocent, the store-owner was pleased by the legal proceedings, and expects to continue to use the student court systems.

Smith says the judicial decisions and arvitrations are "basically educational, not vindictive", and both Smith and Emmons mentioned that the court's actions keep students' names out of Northampton police files.

Academic regulations insist that court records be destroyed within four years, or one year after all affected students receive a degree, whichever comes first.

A recruitment drive for new members will begin next week, with a Collegian advertisement and several announcements on WMUA. Larry Ladd heads the Selection Committee which will interview undergraduates. Hypothetical cases taken from files will be used to test an individual's fairness and logic, and decisions are reached in about a day.

Vacancies from last year have left a nearly all-white, male court.

When asked what compensation a justice receives for services, Smith said "self-satisfaction". When pressed, he managed to produce a special parking permit providing him mobility for his duties. Since his car is out of action, his morbility is more practically provided by a well-worn pair of combat boots.

First Meeting of S.O.S. Tonight

By ROBERT P. MEDEIROS

Students Offering Support (SOS) will hold its first organizational meeting of the year in the Suffolk Room in the Student Union tonight at 7:30 p.m.

An SOS spokesman said the organization is dedicated to pursuing reforms within the state Department of Mental Health.

The spokesman said the department continues to "show a lack of leadership and a basic disregard for the needs of persons under its care."

He said Berkshire County mental health officials will close down the Berkshire Mental Health Center in Pittsfield today in order to travel to Boston to air their grievances to department officials.

The officials have demanded also to meet with Mental Health Commissioner Dr. Milton Greenblatt before Oct. 15 to get answers on budget cuts and a hiring freeze they say are crippling the center.

Stephen E. Clarke, president of the Berkshire Mental Health Association, said the cutbacks have "crippled the delivery of services for the mentally ill, emotionally disturbed, the mentally retarded and the drug abuser."

He added that the center is now operating at 60 per cent staff strength.

The SOS spokesman said the Berkshire association is threatening a clss action suit against Dr. Greenblatt unless the

He said SOS provides students with a means of expressing support and obtaining funds for a class-action suit filed by parents of residents of the Belchertown State School for the retarded.

The suit filed last February in U.S. District Court in Boston charges that the Department of Mental Health has been negligent in the car of residents at the school.

SOS raised over $6,000 last year for the suit in a series of fund raising drives, including some $5,000 during last spring's free

The $5,000 represented profits from concessions sold during the concert and direct contributions from those in attendance.

UMass Professor Benjamin Ricci will be the fratured speaker at tonight's meeting and will show slides depicting conditions at the school.

Ricci is the leading organizer of the suit against the state and has been president of the Belchertown Friends Association for the last four years.

The SOS spokesman said conditions at the Belchertown school have shown "no considerable change" since a joint legislative commission studied the school over two years ago.

The commission stated in their March, 1971 report: "We are totally dissatisfied with the manner in which Belchertown is being administered. We are deeply impressed by the department's (Mental Health) indifference to change."

Only last week, the Task Force on Children out of School released a report saying that DMH is characterized by "inepitude, misfeasance and misguided priorities."

The report said the department has failed to demonstrate any significant concern for the needs of children.

"The energies of the department go toward defending the present lack of services, by protecting officials to whom the public looks for leadership and help," stated the report.

Alternative Schools Course

A new School of Education modular credit course on ALTERNATIVE PUBLIC SCHOOLS is being offered during the 1972-1973 semester. Undergraduate and graduate students may contract for any amount of modular credits earned by participation in classes or projects or a combination of both. Discrimination Suit Expected vs. 20th Washington

Is Washington Tower a bastion of sexual discrimination? (MDC Photo by J. Throckworten Gildersleeves III.)

By JIM DEMPSEY

Seven individuals are expected to file a suit against the twentieth floor Washington on charges of sexual discrimination at a dorm party this past weekend.

According to Student Attorney General Bert Emmons, under the Civil Liberties Act barring discrimination on grounds of race, creed, color and sex, "You can hold any kind of party you want, but if someone is discriminated against, he can bring charges against you through the Student Judiciary and people could be expelled from school."

This past Saturday afternoon, giant block letters spelling our PARTY could be seen across the campus in the windows of the twentieth floor of Washington tower. This was to advertise the first of the three or four parties they sponsor each year.

At ground level there were a few handbills posted setting the time, place, and admission prices. As in past years, the guys were charged and the ladies were admitted free, and both were tempted to come to the party by the words, "and all the beer you can drink." Until this weekend the 20th floor never encountered any problems because of their discrimination policy.

Altogether, maybe 200 or so people went to the party, wandered in and out, or stayed well into the morning hours, enjoying what some say was "the best floor party they'd ever been to."

But not all were so happy. Seven individuals from Kennedy Middle and Washington Lower were quite displeased by the "blantant discrimination" they found when they arrived at the party. There was a sign at the admission table: guys - $2.00 and girls - free.

"Don't you know that there was a rule passed last year in Southwest barring such discrimination?" protested Gary Arsenault. According to this rule any dorm that employs sexual discrimination can possibly have its dorm funds cut off. This rule came about last year as the result of action taken after a similar party was held in another dorm.

Jim Speredelozzi accused them of being "sexist". "Why," he asked, "is there no charge for girls?" They then called on the Upper Washington Assistant Head of Residence to lodge their complaint. Nothing could be done at that moment to remedy the situation, but a meeting was promised for Monday evening to air their grievance.

At the meeting it was explained that the twentieth floor had no desire to make a profit - they simply wanted to have a good time. Any money taken in was automatically used to buy more beer. Someone had to be charged for the beer and they did not want to charge the girls, "for they were our guests."

One person from the floor pointed out that "If we charged the girls $2.00, we'd just have twenty guys standing around talking to themselves. The whole purpose of the party was for the guys to meet girls they'd never seen before and get to know them - a mixer."

Because they live in an all-male dorm, they charged the guys from the other dorms to discourage them from coming. They said, "There had to be an unequal economic balance to establish an equal sexual balance." They just don't want guys from other dorms coming to their parties. "If the guys in the other dorms just understood this," said one person from the twentieth floor, "there would be no need for discrimination."

Assistant Head of Residence for Upper Washington, Gary LaFleur added that "in an all-male dorm there's a great need for women. They wanted to meet girls and have a good time, not have 400 beer-guzzling guys over drinking their beer and tearing down their rooms. Discrimination in itself, by itself is never wrong. When all the factors involved are considered, this is discrimination for a good reason."

Bob Bolen felt very differently though. He saw it as being a matter of "buying women...treating them like animals". He and Jim Speredelozzi considered the free charge to be an insult to women. They felt that there were probably many women on campus who were offended by it.

Those women who attended the party said they did not feel insulted. They had enjoyed the party.

Private invitations to every young lady on campus was offered as a solution but rebuffed as another form of discrimination against males. Private invitations to personal female friends was offered as a remedy, but this precluded the opportunity to meet new girls.

As it stands now, Jim Speredelozzi et al are planning to bring their case to the attention of the Student Senate and work for an end to this sexual discrimination at parties. They have threatened to get a court injunction to stop the next such sexually discriminating party they hear of.

The all-male upper Washington dorm is working towards a better way to cope with the sexual oppression imposed on them by the University. Said LaFleur, "None of us want to live in an all-male dorm - to make 200 guys live on top of each other is sexist." They're working to make their dorm coed.

American Killed As Tanzania Retreats

(AP)-A former American Peace Corps volunteer has been killed and nine other U.S. citizens have been arrested in Uganda since the East African nation began fighting off an invasion launched from Tanzania, the State Department announced Tuesday.

At the same time, the Ugandan government claimed its forces have "completely routed" the invading force. It said the enemy's weapons and vehicles have been captured and that the invading soldiers are stealing bicycles, discarding their uniforms and looting property as they retreat into Tanzania.

The State Department identified the former Peace Corpsman as Louis Morton of Houston, Tex.

Dispatches received in London said more than 60 foreigners have been arrested in Uganda since fighting began Sunday.

A State Department spokesman in Washington said Morton and another former Peace Corps volunteer, Robert Freed of Madison, Wis., were enroute from Mbarara to Kampala on Sunday, "apparently unaware of the fighting in the area."

The two were stopped twice on the road, but allowed to continue. Despite this permission, they were shot at. Morton died. Freed was slightly injured and picked up by soldiers. He was taken to Kampala, the spokesman said.

The other nine Americans being held include Peace Corps workers, missionaries and Associated Press correspondent Andrew Torchia.

Tanzania, which denies any part in the invasion, said it would retaliate for three Ugandan air attacks on the northern Tanzanian town of Bukoba Monday and Tuesday.

Nine persons were killed in the Monday strike.

Radio Uganda has suggested the invasion is being backed from a guerrilla base near Bukoba, 30 miles south of Uganda's border.

Radio Uganda and President Idi Amin have identified the attackers as "a combination of 1,500 Tanzanian soldiers and Ugandan rebel guerrillas aided by a British and Israeli mercenaries." Amin says the Ugandan revels are supporters of the man he ousted as president last year, Dr. Milton Obote.

The U.S. State Department advised The Associated Press that the U.S. Embassy in Uganda has received assurances that Torchia, who is based in Kenya, will be delivered to the U.S. ambassador in Kampala.

Ten British newsmen, a West German journalist, two Swedish journalists and 50 Britons are also being held.

The British Foreign Office said it had been told by Uganda that the Britons were being held because Uganda "is in a war situation."

Ugandan authorities estimate an invasion force of 1,500 crossed into Uganda from Tanzania Sunday. Radio Uganda quoted Amin as saying 230 of the invaders had been killed and 50 taken prisoner, while nine Ugandans were reported dead.

A military spokesman charged that President Julius Nyerere of Tanzania and Obote launched the invasion as an attempt to interrupt Uganda's plan to expel its non-citizen Asians by Nov. 8.

But the spokesman said the invasion "will never in any way interrupt the move to expel the Asians" and warned them not to delay in leaving the country.

His comments followed reports that few of the 4,000 British Asians called to the British High Commission since Sunday for entry permits have turned out.

Uganda has accused the British of wanting to use the invasion as an excuse for sending troops to Uganda and halting the expulsions. Britain denied the accusation.

Agnew Theorizes

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. (AP) - Vice President Spiro T. Agnew said Tuesday it is his personal theory that someone encouraged the Watergate wiretappers to invade Democratic headquarters and "set up" their arrest to embarrass the Republican party.

He said he had no evidence, called his guess "just another speculation," and at one point termed it "the same kind of wild fancy" the Democrats have been uttering.

Protest at Texas Air Base

LAREDO, Tex. (AP) - A group of black airmen locked themselves inside a mess hall at Laredo Air Force Base for eight hours today to protest alleged mistreatment on and off base.

Base officials said the men voluntarily agreed to leave the building after lengthy discussions with their commander. Details were not available.

N.E. Oil Shortage Predicted

PITTSFIELD, Mass. (AP) - President Nixon's increase in the oil import quota is inadequate, said Rep. Silvio O. Conte, R—Mass., Monday.

Conte, who has led a New England delegation effort to double oil imports and to abolish the quota system, predicted home heating oil shortages late this winter, despite the President's action.

Suicide at JFK's Grave

WASHINGTON (AP) - As tourists looked on at President John F. Kennedy's gravesite, a 23-year-old Temperance, Mich., man knelt in prayerful gesture and plunged a kitchen knife into his chest Monday, U.S. Park Police reported.

The man, identified as Gale Ott, died at Arlington Hospital nearly seven hours after the incident, police said.

They said Ott unexpectedly appeared Sunday at the home of a friend, identified as Wayne T. Kadera, whom he had not seen since they were discharged in 1970 after an Army duty tour in Germany.

Kadera told police that Ott told him he was having some personal problems and later asked to visit the Kennedy gravesite, police said.

Ellsberg FilesDamage Suit

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Daniel Ellsberg and Anthony Russo filed a $1-million damage suit today, charging the government with illegal wiretapping in the Pentagon papers case. They were joined by 17 of their attorneys and consultants.

The suit names the heads of eight departments and agencies and former Atty. Gen. John Mitchell.

Investigation Reports Lavelle Responsible for Bombing Raids

DENVER (AP)-Three of four senators investigating unauthorized bombing strikes against North Vietnam said Tuesday that former 7th Air Force commanding Gen. John D. Lavelle apparently was the highest officer involved in ordering the raids.

However, Armed Services Committee Chairman John Stennis, D-Miss., said he did not know when his group would issue its final report to the Senate on the bombing case or the nomination of Gen. Creighton W. Abrams as Army chief of staff.

The preliminary opinions that Lavelle was the apparent top source of orders for unauthorized air raids came following a two-hour, closed-door hearing with Maj. Gen. Alton Slay, Lavelle's former deputy chief of staff for operations.

In Washington meanwhile, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff the Lavelle affair has been overplayed, but has not hurt the military.

It was the first time Adm. Thomas Moorer, the nations. top military man, commented in public regarding the affair.

In Lavelle's appearance before the Armed Services Committee, the former Seventh Air Force commander seemed to think Moorer had implied approval.

"I would say one does not operate on the basis of implied approval. I never authorized Gen. Lavelle or anyone else to operate contrary to instructions," Moorer said.

Stennis was the only one of the four senators who refuse to comment directly on the ultimate responsibility for the raids.

Dominick said that, according to the testimony of Slay and others, he felt that the higher authorities never were told of Lavelle's new rules for engaging the enemy. He said such orders were "only passed down to wing commanders and subordinate officers."

Hughes said there was "no evidence implicating anyone else" higher up the chain of command.

7th Fleet Supports S. Viet Troops In The North

SAIGON (AP) — The U.S. 7th Fleet joined in support of South Vietnamese troops Tuesday along the northern coast in a drive aimed at checking North Vietnamese assaults that have overrun one district town and three hamlets in the last four days.

Hundreds of South Vietnamese reinforcements were reported to have embarked on a new sweep in Quang Ngai Province to save Mo Duc, the largest of 10 districts with a population of more than 100,000.

Field reports said the government forces were encountering stiff resistance.

Jet fighter-bombers from a 7th Fleet carrier joined the battle, and the Navy also dispatched a destroyer off Quang Ngai to shell North Vietnamese and Viet Cong positions around Mo Duc.

Earlier, military spokesmen reported that the district town of Ba To near Mo Duc in southern Quang Ngai Province and three hamlets in Binh

There was no firm count on casualties but scores of South Vietnamese were reported killed, wounded or missing.

The Saigon command claimed more than 350 enemy had been killed unday and Monday, many of them by air strikes.

Quang Ngai City, the provincial capital, is 75 miles south of Da Nang.

Elsewhere in South Vietnam, fighting continued at scattered points but there were no major battles reported.

Thunder showers reduced U.S. tactical air strikes over North Vietnam Monday to 230 and confined most of the raids to secondary targets in the southern sector of the country, far from the Hanoi-Haiphong industrial complex, the U.S. Command reported.

The command announced in a delayed report that a Navy A6 Intruder jet crashed from unknown causes Sunday northeast of Hanoi and its two crewmen are missing.

According to command records, 99 U.S. jets have been lost in North Vietnam since the start of the enemy offensive last March 30 and the resumption of full-scale bombing a week later. A total of 106 crewmen are listed by the command as missing in the North during the same period, and about a third of them are believed to have been captured.

North Vietnam claimed in a broadcast dispatch Tuesday that U.S. air power, "far from saving the Saigon army from disintegration," has suffered heavy blows in the last five months.

Bomb Kills Israeli Diplomat

(AP) An Israeli diplomat was killed Tuesday by a booby-trapped parcel delivered to his embassy in London.

British postal authorities in a sorting office found four more packets containing explosives Tuesday night, all addressed to officials at the Israeli Embassy. The explosives were defused.

The Israeli Embassy in Paris also received two explosive parcels, but they were dismantled.

The booby-trap mailings came on the heels of the Israeli raid into Lebanon which was aimed at destroying Palestinian guerrilla bases. The Israeli government vowed that those responsible for the death of the London diplomat "will meet their just desserts."

Soon after the morning explosion in the London embassy, the Lebanese Embassy there said it received an anonymous telephone call warning: "You will be next." The Lebanese government has been trying to curb guerrilla activities inside Lebanon.

Foreign Minister Abba Eban of Israel said in Jerusalem the slain diplomat, Dr. Ami Shachori, 44, an agricultural attache, "has fallen at the hand of persons whose sole aim is to sow destruction and to harm all that is dear to man and culture."

Shachori's replacement, Kaddar Theodor, was wounded in the blast.

Scotland Yard launched an international hunt for the assassins, and suspicion centered mainly on the Black September group of Palestinian guerrillas who murdered 11 members of the Israeli Olympic team in Munich.

Both the London and Paris bombs were postmarked in Holland, officials said. The bombs were mailed in similar large, bulky envelopes.

West German security officials were believed checking whether the London bombing was connected to threats by Arabs in West Germany 17 days ago that death packages would be mailed to German Jews and Israeli diplomats.

Diplomatic sources in Beirut said Syria may be holding Maj. Richard Barrdtt, an assistant military attache of the U.S. Embassy in Amman, Jordan, in hopes of winning freedom for five Syrian officers captured by Israel in June.

Barrdtt, 36, of Laramie, Wyo., was arrested Sept. 9 while on his way from Jordan through Syria to Beirut. Officials of the U.S. Embassy in Beirut reported his arrest Monday.

The officials said no reason was given for his arrest and that they didn't know where in Syria he was being held.

The United States has no diplomatic relations with Syria and the case is being handled by the Italian Embassy in Damascus which is in charge of U.S. affairs.

Syria Arrests U.S. Officer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP)-The Syrian government has arrested a U.S. military officer and diplomatic sources said today it may be hoping to exchange him for five Syrian officers captured by Israel.

Maj. Richard Barrett, of Laramie, Wyo., was arrested Sept. 9 while on his way from Jordan through Syria to Beirut. He is assistant military attache in the U.S. Embassy in Amman.

Officials of the American Embassy in Beirut said no reason was given for the arrest. They said they did not know where in Syria Barrett was being held or the conditions of his detention.

The United States has no diplomatic relations with Syria and the case is being handled by the Italian Embassy in Damascus, which is in charge of U.S. affairs.

The officials said inquiries by the Italians have met with no explanation from the Syrians.

Other diplomatic sources said the Syrians may be waiting for the United States to offer to bring about the release of the imprisoned Syrians in exchange for Barrett.

The five Syrians-one general and four colonels-were captured during an Israeli raid on Lebanon last June. International efforts to secure their release have been fruitless.

Barrett was appointed to his post three weeks ago and was coming to Beirut to accompany his wife and child back to Amman. He was studying Arabic at the Foreign Service Language Institute at the embassy here.

27th UN Assembly Opens With Plea For Peace

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) — The 27th General Assembly opened Tuesday with a plea from its Polish president for peace in Vietnam and a U.N. commission's recommendation that American troops remain in South Korea under U.N. auspices.

Stanislaw Trepczynski, deputy foreign minister of Poland, said in his inaugural address that he is pleased with detente in Europe but dismayed at continued war and tension in Vietnam and the Middle East.

Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim has tried to bring the Vietnam war issue into the United Nations in search of a solution. But China, the Soviet Union and other Communist nations have blocked his efforts.

The assembly's opening session, which adjourned after 74 minutes, was interrupted briefly by a young man in the gallery who threw down anti-Soviet leaflets and shouted: "Let my people go! Where is your humanity."

The tracts demanded action on behalf of "the Jewish people of the Soviet Union...held for ransom by the new barbarians." The youth was hustled out by security guards.

McGovern For Private School Tax Credits

MILWAUKEE, Wis. (AP) — Democratic presidential candidate George McGovern moved Tuesday to prompt a Nixon administration campaign ploy by coming out for a tax credit for parents of pupils in Catholic and private schools.

"Parochial schools are cultural agencies as well as educational institutions" and are important in "keeping alive the diversity that has made our country great," McGovern said at Chicago's largest Catholic school.

McGovern's endorsement of a tax break to help alleviate the financial burden of families with children in non-public schools came more than a year after President Nixon first publicly called for some form of federal help to keep alive the parochial school systems.

Although Nixon has made two major speeches on the subject and the White House has given testimony in support of pending tax-break legislation, Nixon has never personally spelled out his own formula.

McGovern ran immediately into opposition from the National Education Association, which has traditionally fought federal aid for parochial schools. NEA President Catharine Barrett sent McGovern a telegram saying the group vigorously protests the suggestion and thinks "such aid would to be unconstitutional in view of recent court decisions."

Mayor Richard J. Daley did not meet with McGovern during his Chicago visit Tuesday, which was taken by some observers as a mild snub. However, Daley gave McGovern a warm welcome a week ago, addressing him before a big rally as "Mr. President".

In Milwaukee, where an early afternoon rain might have been responsible for keeping a downtown rally crowd to about 2,000 according to newsmen's estimates, McGovern did have better luck with City Hall.

Mayor Henry Maier, who did not appear with McGovern at the candidate's earlier Milwaukee visit, spoke at the rally and praised McGovern.

McGovern Tuesday also had some seemingly bitter words for the national public-opinion polls that have shown him trailing President Nixon by 34 points. He said here "We're going to make those pollsters eat those polls before the election is over."

In calling for federal assistance to Catholic and other non-public schools, McGovern said he supports the income tax credit plan now pending before the House Ways and Means Committee. Nixon administration officials have already testified in support of the measure.

The bill, which is generally given virtually no chance of passage this year, would allow parents to deduct $200 per year from their income tax bill for every child they have enrolled in a Catholic or other non-public school.

But the constitutionality of that form of federal support to Catholic schools has not been tested by the U.S. Supreme Court and, McGovern said during a television interview in Milwaukee, he would halt his support of the plan if the courts were to strike it down.

Agnew Says FBI to Investigate Wheat Sales

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. (AP) - Vice President Spiro T. Agnew said Tuesday the FBI has been ordered to investigate the $750-million sale of U.S. wheat to the Soviet Union.

Agnew accused Democrats of trying to use the wheat deal as "another Watergate," referring to the break-in at Democratic headquarters. He said President Nixon ordered the investigation to answer the questions being raised.

Disclosure of the FBI probe came in an Agnew news conference as former Asst. Secretary of Agriculture Clarence D. Palby, now an executive with Continental Grain Co., testified in Washington that his firm sold about 188 million bushels to the Soviets in early July before it was generally known that Moscow would buy such large quantities.

George McGovern, the Democratic presidential nominee, has accused the administration of feeding tips to big grain companies, allowing them to profiteer at farmers' expense.

"The Federal Bureau of Investigation has a business-fraud and business-practices unit that has been asked by the President to look throughly into this matter," Agnew said, "to investigate the profits of these big grain exporters that you refer to, to see whether anyone has taken any undue profit, due to any misinformation or improperly revealed information on the part of the federal government."

Agnew said "that investigation is in progress." But a spokesman at FBI headquarters in Washington said no request for such an investigation had been received by the bureau, but said such a plea would go first through the Justice Department.

The sales, for cash, were negotiated secretly between the Russians and Continental, Palmby said. The total represented nearly one half of the 400 million bushels of wheat eventually sold to the Soviets this summer.

But Palmby described as "an outright lie" allegations that he took advance information on a grain credit arrangement with the Soviets to Continental when he joined the company on June 8. He denied also that his company reaped windfall profits from export-subsidy manipulations.

overthrow the state or national government by force (and who, if they are willing to go to that extreme, would probably, in many cases, happily sign any kind of loyalty oath). It would also select out those who are deeply opposed to coercion of any kind, those who are opposed to signing an oath which may require them to use force, and others who, because of one reason or another, find such an oath reprehensible. In such cases it will restrict the type of people with whom we may come in contact, learn from, and share ideas with.

It is my strong feeling that some form of opposition to the oath must be started, and that there is a distinct need for those who are opposed to it to come together to share their feelings and ideas and work out some plan of action. I urge all who are concerned to attend Monday's meeting.

Southwest Colloquia Expanding

By LINDA CRAVEN

This semester, thirty to fifty colloquia are expected to be offered in the Southwest Residential College, according to Walter Silva, Head of Southwest Academic Affairs.

Silva explained in an interview that a colloquium is a one-credit course taught by an undergraduate or graduate student, faculty, or staff member exhibiting some special interest or talent in an area not specifically taught by the University. Subject matter was varied so widely in the past as to include such topics as photography, macrame, or Zen, he said.

Several changes creating more rigid standards in the formation and operation colloquia will be initiated this semester, explained Silva.

Each student will be required to attend a minimum of sixteen hours of class time, according to Silva. Also there will be more specialized supervision of the colloquia by Southwest Academic Affairs, he added. In previous years, indicated Silva, there was virtually none.

Each colloquium will be sponsored by a member of the faculty, said Silva, his job will be to attest to the competence of the student teacher and to the validity of the course. Silva hoped that the sponsor will attend the classes periodically.

To initiate a colloquium, it is necessary to pick up a proposal form at the Southwest Academic Affairs office, located in the lobby of John Adams tower. Proposals are now being considered, and a complete list of the colloquia being offered will be available, hopefully by Wednesday, September 27, Silva said.

Students from all residential areas on campus are welcome to participate in the Southwest colloquia program. However, warned Silva, Southwest residents will have priority in the event of overloaded courses.

Silva is available for further information and may be contacted at 545-2803.

Gary Burton Scheduled For October Concert

By CHRISTINA ROSSOMANDO

Jazz performer Gary Burton has been tentatively scheduled to perform in a benefit concert for the Westfield Detention Center October 14 in the Worester Dining Commons. The concert will be the second sponsored by the Orchard Hill Music and Lecture series this semester.

At their organizational meeting Monday evening in Dickinson House, the Orchard Hill group outlined its plans for a Third World and People's Music and Lecture Series which would bring artists in the areas of jazz, folk, and blues to Orchard Hill. A series of coffee houses on the Hill is also under consideration.

Joey Baron, spokesman for the group, explained, "The Orchard Hill Music and Lecture Series will not be Madison Avenue rock 'n roll. The emphasis will not be on getting big name talent. We hope to cater to community sensativities, not commericalism."

Baron cited money as the group's main concern at this time. The group plans to seek funds from several sources, he said, including the Orchard Hill Area Government and the four Hill dormitories. It is hoped that most series events can be offered to the UMass community free of charge.

Jazz pianist Jaki Byard attracted over five hundred people at a Saturday evening concert in the lounge of Noah Webster House September 7. This first concert was funded through a loan from the Fine Arts Council.

Although the series has, in the past catered to a jazz oriented group, this semester an effort to appeal to the three distinct audiences of folk, blues and jazz is being made. In addition, a number of speakers are being contacted as possible guest lecturers for the series.

Other plans still tentative at this time include appearances by Larry Corryell and Weather Report and Bill Evans. The proposed coffee houses will feature talent from the UMass community and surrounding areas. The group is also looking into the possibility of establishing an Orchard Hill music library.

The Orchard Hill Music and Lecture Series was stated last year after the Orchard Hill Jazz Festival and concert by Alice Coltrane. The group meets on Monday nights in Dickinson House and is seeking representatives from the four Orchard Hill dormitories to work in all aspects of the program.

Mass. Bans Shellfish Imports

BOSTON (AP) - The Massachusetts Department of Public Health has banned importation of soft shell clams and mussels as shell stock "from any state or country."

The prohibition was announced last night as Public Health Commissioner William J. Bicknell commented that "the digging of clams is going to be closed in Massachusetts for a hell of a long time, I think."

The department said at the same time it has learned of another two cases of illness resulting from clams affected by "red tide" algae along the northern New England coast.

The newest cases, involving a Tauton couple who suffered mild illness last week, raised the total to 25.

The tide of marine organisms became visible north of Cape Ann last Thursday and later spread north to the Cape Elizabeth, Maine area. Officials in that state and in New Hampshire closed affected coastlines to clamming.

In Connecticut, Gov. Thomas J. Meskill prohibited sale in that state of recently processed soft shell clams from northern New England and all mussels and clams from Maine and Massachusetts.

The state has set up shellfish monitoring stations on the Long Island Sound shore in the Norwalk-Darien area, Southport, Milford, Niantic and Noank.

"There have been no reported cases of shellfish poisoning in Connecticut and we intend on keeping that record intact," the governor said.

SUG Board Debated

troversial resolution last year giving itself hiring and firing privileges in matters related to Campus Center policy, a move which created differences with the administration.

The administration also suspended SUG's constitution after it purposely passed an unbalanced budget to draw attention to its ineffectualness as an independent governing body. The Board had assessed students $60 fee while passing a $65/student budget. SUG Board felt that the additional $50,000 needed for fiscal 1973 should not have to be paid by students. The Board of Trustees got around that by assessing students $62.50.

So the SUG Board's negotiating committee set up last night will also attempt to hash out existing differences with the administration.

3rd World Students Welcomed

We the Third World Alliance wish to welcome all of our Brothers and Sisters back into the Amherst Third World Community. And to say also that we hope the days you spent at home were filled with love and pride and moved you to a greater awareness of some of the things you'll have to be about in the real world.

The days coming are going to become increasingly heavy as the contradictions between various groups and class' erupt. At this time, not later when the problems have become intolerable, it is necessary for all third world people to begin to assess their present situation and determine what conditions are necessary for a productive stay in Amherst.

There are two methods of achieving conditions conducive to productive student worker lifestyle. The first is to become as involved with the political goals of your people and the struggle entailed in crystalization of their goals. The second is to become involved in the politics of the University as a representative of the Third World Community.

We urge all third world people at this time to take the seats now open in the student senate. Elections are Thursday Sept. 21, 1972. For further information contact Bro. Bill Hasson, New Africa House. 545-2751.

UMASS SPORTS SHALL REMAIN NAMELESS UNTIL . . .

Suggestions should be submitted by Sept. 21 at the Student Senate office

S.O.S.

Tonight at 7:30 in the Suffolk Room of the Student Union an organization called Students Offering Support will hold an organizational meeting, its first of the year.

SOS is dedicated to pursuing reforms within the Department of Mental Health. Chief among these reforms is the need for change at the Belchertown State School. Last February, twenty-eight parents of Belchertown residents filed a suit in the U.S. District Court in Boston, charging that the state has been negligent in the care of residents of the school.

But court action of any kind is a costly affair, and the class action suit is no different. It is feared that the twenty-eight parents will not be able to meet the costs of the action much longer. Even though approximately $6,000 was raised for the cause on this campus last year, help is still needed.

That's where SOS comes in. It is a viable means of expressing support for the suit, and also a way in which students can work together to raise money for the suit. It's not often that an opportunity comes along where people can band together and fight an injustice. This is an opportunity to do just that. If the suit is lost through lack of financial support, inhuman conditions at Belchertown will continue to be the norm. So take a few minutes and go to the meeting tonight. Be the voice of a child who is unable to cry out for himself.

Campaign Against 'Them'

I don't know if politics everywhere are like politics where I come from, but if they are it's easy to see why this country is where it's at and why it's going to stay that way.

East Boston is an island floating right off the coast of Boston proper. It's connected to the city by two tunnels and a bridge. The population is largely of Italian descent. At the moment, its two representatives are a young guy in his late twenties by the name of Gus Serra and a squat, balding priest in his early fifties by the name of Mimie Pitaro. Both are in their first term, Serra having won his seat by only two votes, and both are up for reelection this year.

Their chief opposition comes from the two people they ousted two years ago, chief of which is a man by the name of George DiLorenzo. He was the victim of the two vote loss.

The campaign so far has centered on an issue that's on everyone's mind this year: bussing. When the state anti-discrimination law came to a vote earlier this year, Serra voted against it, Pitaro for it. Although bussing won't affect East Boston, the campaign has centered around smear tactics against Pitaro. These tactics play on the worst fears of the people, especially the fear that their kids might have to go to school with "one of them", which translates into a black.

DiLorenzo's campaign in particular has been something to see. He has a loudspeaker mounted atop a car, which he uses to trumpet the fact, by implication, that the priest is gonna make your kids go to school with "one of them". He never mentions who "they" are, but the implication is definitely enough.

He recently held a meeting of his supporters where he laid down his basic policy line. Since I don't have exact quotes, I'll paraphrase what he said. It went like this:

If we allow this thing (bussing) to happen, said DiLorenzo, who do you think your children are going to invite to their birthday parties? (He didn't say who, but everyone knew he meant "them"). People in the audience were making comments in the middle of the whole thing, applauding their candidate on. DiLorenzo was just getting warmed up. Who do you think, he said, your children are going to start dating when the time comes? Who are they going to ask to the Senior Prom? WHEN THE TIME COMES FOR FRIENDSHIP RINGS, WHO DO YOU THINK THEIR FRIENDS ARE GOING TO BE? The unspoken answer was again in every instance "them".

He also mentioned a new low rent elderly housing project, being built in the area saying that the people who were going to get the spaces in it were not the elderly of East Boston, but the elderly of Roxbury and the South End. For those of you not familiar with these two sections, it might be nice to know that most of the residents of these two sections of Boston are black, also known for campaign purposes as "them".

The campaign goes on. Only two of the three candidates can make it through the primary, making the outlook for Pitaro even dimmer.

Father Pitaro has stayed pretty cool through the whole thing, as his record speaks for itself. He's answered the roll for every meeting of the legislaure in the past year, giving East Boston it's most worthy representation in years, if not in the whole history of the place. He hardly even mentions the fact that DiLorenzo himself voted for a similar anti-discrimination measure when he was in office (DiLorenzo claims that the measure he voted for said nothing about bussing). A recent column on the editorial pages of the Boston Globe called Pitaro one of the most impressive newcomers to the legislature in a long time. It also accused DiLorenzo of misleading the people with some dangerous half truths in his campaign. The Globe knows where of it speaks.

There's a lesson to be learned from the whole mess. First, East Boston is not isolated from the rest of the United States. This could be almost anywhere. Points two and three concern the effects of it. The second point is that the nation that elects the George DiLorenzos and Richard Nixons is not about to change. Even a miracle in the form of the election of George McGovern won't indicate that the nation is about to effect the fundamental changes that are needed. Third, this campus and youth as a whole shouldn't look on the situation with disdain; we're very much a part of it. Witness the great Strike of the Spring of '72. As soon as such issues as racism and sexism were tied in with the issue of ending the war in Southeast Asia, the "liberals" of the campus folded up and claimed that these shouldn't be included with their holy issue. They were as racist (without saying they were) as George DiLorenzo will ever be.

What we're doing in this country is treating the wrong symptoms. We legislate, but don't try to change people's heads. Let's stop talking about solving the problem and get to the cause. Realize that by making hate illegal you're not going to stop it, and then we'll have a beginning.

Let It Bleed

Gresham's is a bar off of WilloughbyAvenue in Brooklyn. It attracts all the various types of people who inhabit that troubled borough. On a Sunday afternoon in May, as I was walking out of Gresham's, I paused before the television to watch the ancient Willie Mays, who was playing in his first game as a Met, hit a game-winning home run. Caught up in New York consciousness, I left the bar jubilant, walking up Willoughby Ave. with something damn close to a skip in my stride. I was anxious to share my joy with someone when I spied Anne Feldman, Judy Skillings, and Al Lowenstein entering Horn & Hardart's for another lousy political campaign meal. I ran up to them and told them the wonderful news. Al considered it for perhaps a half-second before responding, " big deal". Willie Mays, he informed me, had hit home runs before.

The incident occurred to me today because I was not in Brooklyn, where I should have been. Having spent three months of my young life there in an attempt to send Al Lowenstein to Congress, I probably owe it to myself; I certainly owe it to him. Yesterday, after a summer of hard work and painstaking litigation, Lowenstein and company were involved in a special election. They were trying to win an election they already won once, in which they were defrauded by the regular Democratic machine in Brooklyn. Everyone who worked on the campaign this spring was asked to come back for whatever length of time possible. That length of time in my case was nothing. I did not return to Brooklyn, even for this past weekend, because of an addiction I share with too many other Americans. While my friends in Brooklyn were attempting a qualitative improvement of the Congress of the United States, I was thinking about football.

At first I planned to leave Amherst on Friday, thereby giving Lowenstein For Congress my services for the last four days of the campaign. Then I remembered that I had to go to Foxboro to see the Patriots play. Having spent the summer covering the Patriots for our own summer school newspaper, The Crier, I had as many people I wanted to see in Foxboro as in Brooklyn. Instead of walking through the dirty neighborhoods of Fort Greene and Bushwick asking people to vote on Tuesday, I stood in the sunshine of slumless Foxboro asking Jim Plunkett if he'd seen Leigh Montville. Both of them were in Foxboro earning a living, Plunkett as a modern day Christain being thrown to the Bengals, Montville as a sportswriter looking for subtleties in the Patriots' disaster. What in hell was I doing there?

After visiting my little sister to wish her a happy seventh birthday, I went to the Natick exit of the Turnpike on Monday morning, where I spent three hours cursing people whose priorities did not include helping another person get where he was going. Three hours later, disgusted and still in Natick, I caught a ride back to Wellesley, where I wished my sister a happy birthday again. There was still a chance to catch a bus, to New York as easily as Amherst, but I stayed in Wellesley to watch the Vikings play the Redskins, still keeping in the back of my mind the possibility of going to Brooklyn on Tuesday morning. I was rooting for the Redskins to beat the Vikings, thereby helping Greg Landry's Lions and harming the hated Dallas Cowboys. Great minds always look at the Big Picture.

After the Vikings messed up, the Redskins took a comfortable lead. Relaxing, I started thinking about real life again, when it occurred to me that I might have a football game. I have not called Brooklyn in the two weeks since they requested I do so, but I called Pierpont immediately to see if the Heads had a game Tuesday night. No game until Wednesday, I was assured, but practice would be held Tuesay night after dinner. Still unsatisfied with my pass patterns, I decided I'd better make practice.

Yesterday morning I voted in Wellesley. After voting for Gerald O'Leary, for whom I shall not vote against Edward Brooke in November, I voted for several people of whom I had never heard, because I was having fun pulling down the levers. My duty as a citizen in a great Western Democracy completed, I boarded a bus to come back to college, where I play football, watch Edward G. Robinson movies, write about Little Latin Larry for Poor Richard's, and generally conduct myself as a solid citizen.

You will not see me wearing a hair shirt, nor do I admire Arthur Bremer for acting out of his convictions. Perhaps Lowenstein can win without my help, as did the Washington Redskins. I just wish I could show as much concern for those who block progress as for those who block punts. Sorry, Al, I ran out on you. Hoa binh.

Searching For A Name

By TOM FITZGERALD

Unseen and unseeing, the restless wraith wanders through the valley, doomed to pass the years in hopeless misery. His thirst unslaked, his hunger unappeased, the spirit pauses by a dust-shrouded memory of a murmuring brook. "O Metawampe," the brook used to whisper, "how long will the great wrong remain unavenged? How long must you bear the burden placed on you by the great insult to your forefathers?"

"As long as they make mockery of my people, I cannot find respite," he would reply. No longer comforted by the babbling friend, long since become barren, he now wanders on until, one day, the name of his people is never again used by those who would debase it.

Perhaps it was a vision like this that moved the UMass administration to drop the nickname "Redmen" in favor of a supposedly less racially offensive monicker. Metawampe is still standing back of the Student Union, ready for his next jock strap and maybe a fresh coat of paint. And the cheerleaders, understandably reluctant to change their routine, still chanted, "Let's go, Redmen" during Saturday's scrimmage. Furthermore, the basketball, baseball, and hockey teams will continue to wear "Redmen" labels or insignia this year.

Though the memory lingers, the Redmen are no more. The words "Braves" and "Squaws" have been sanded off the johns in the Student Unions. Maybe the Fighting Redmen Marching Band will now be called the Fighting Marching Band.

So the wandering wraith can come and have a beer with the rest of us while we try to come up with a new name. There isn't much time; tomorrow is the deadline for suggestions to the Student Senate office.

As far as Indian nicknames go, Stanford and Dartmouth have already dropped theirs, but UMass can take comfort in that it has finally beaten the St. John's Redmen in something. That is, in the quest for the Golden Fleece of ethnic sensitivity. A phone call to that school's student government gets the response: "No, we haven't got anything going here about dropping the name 'Redmen,' but you know, that's a great idea. I hadn't thought of all that stuff about the name, but it's really true. Maybe we can get something going like that here."

Any day now, we can expect to get word on the St. John's Band, either as a take-off on the Grateful Dead's "Uncle John's Band" or as an abbreviation for St. John's Bandwagon.

Of course, the UMass administration didn't really come up with this idea on its own. Last April, the Student Senate resolved that the nickname connoted a stereotype of violence and savagery and created a "false picture of American history."

So the trick is to find a nickname that won't offend anyone. "Homo Sapiens" was suggested to an athletic department spokesman; he realized, without even being told by the Student Senate, that the shortened version, "Homoes," might be used derisively.

By the same token, "Pinkmen" would offend conservatives, and "Whitemen" would offend albinoes. If we resorted to the Massachusetts "Commonwealths" picture the headline, "Commies Invade Eagles."

Does a nickname have to imply violence, like Spartan, Trojan and Thunderchicken? The answer, of course, is no. Often a nickname signifies nothing more than a key facet of the local culture or environment, e.g. Nebraska Cornhuskers, Pennsylvania Quakers, West Virginia Mountaineers and Hawaii Rainbows.

Hopefully, the selection committee will not sink to the banal and cost UMass the distinction of being the only original Yankee Conference school to have a non-animal nickname. There are already Rams, Huskies, Black Bears, Wildcats and Catamounts running around this conference. They'll soon be joined by Terriers and–all you Turkish students get ready–Crusaders.

Not that all animal names are trite. Don't forget the Canisius Griffins, the Southern Illinois Salukis, the Maryland Terrapins, the Delaware Blue Hens, the Oregon Ducks, the Arkansas Razorbacks, the New Mexico Lobos, the South Carolina Gamecocks and the Texas Christian Horned Frogs.

On the other hand, why should we use a name that means anything to other people? For years, visiting fans at Georgetown University have chanted, "What the hell's a Hoya?" For that matter, what the hell's a Tarheel, or a Hoosier?

Various names will be suggested as reminders of Massachusetts' history, such as "Minutemen." But why not something more contemporary? Like the Massachusetts No-Faults.

If we want a name that will suggest sheer destructive power, maybe we should steal a line from A Clockwork Orange and call our jocks the Massachusetts Droogs. If Anthony Burgess only got $500 for the film rights to the book, we should be able to get the rights to the name for, say, two tickets to the next G-rated picture at the Hadley Drive-In. Picture 5000 fans in the Cage, chanting, "Let's go, Droogies, Droggies, let's go," while the teams warms up wearing derbies and long fake snouts, and the band plays "Singing in the Rain."

Meanwhile, the restless spirits of the Washington Redskin, the Cleveland Indian, the Atlanta Brave, the Florida State Seminole and the St. John's Redman are still wandering.

Finding A New AD

By BILL BALLOU

The last place you would expect to find Frank McInerney is a sweaty, steamy lockerroom.

You can't quite picture this man standing in the center of a group of emotional, excited, young men, all of whom have diverted their total attentions to listen to this person extoll the virtues of the screen pass, drag bunt, wrist shot or Fosbury Flop.

Frank McInerney isn't a coach.

Frank McInerney is an Athletic Director. And it's an Athletic Director, not another coach, that the Athletic program at UMass

For all the old movies, and all the alumni dreams of smashing football victories, and all the student dreams of seeing UCLA play basketball in the Cage are simply not realistic appraisals of a difficult situation. And without a smidgen of doubt, Frank McInerney has walked into a difficult situation.

Look at the decrepit Cage, look at the non-existent rink, look at the budget cuts every coach in Boyden has to face, look at the touchy situation concerning the need basis for scholarships, look at the misconstructed tennis courts. Look anywhere on the athletic scene at this school. Then start looking around this school for someone you think can solve some of these problems. I guarantee you'll end up looking at McInerney.

I first read about him being chosen AD in the Boston Sunday Globe back in July sometime. I had in my mind an idea of who might pop up as the eventual choice, but my first reaction to the name Frank McInerney was quite simply: Who?

In fact, McInerney tells this one on himself: "When I finally leave this job and people look back over the years they'll probably talk about the McGuirk Years and such, but when they come to me they'll say 'McInerney Who?' ".

Don't let the "Who" fool you. This man's been in administration a good while, he knows how to get things done. He knows how to organize, he knows what efficiency is. He knows, most importantly, how to treat people as though they were indeed human beings and not just pawns to be moved around in his all-important administrative chess game.

This is all first impression. After all, Frank McInerney has been here only since Sept. 1 and all he can give is a first impression. But the first is the most important impression of all. A bad one and he could be digging himself out of a hole for years.

It would be foolish to try and compare McInerney with Warren McGuirk, and pointless. They are different men for different times. McGuirk has left lasting impressions and lasting representations of his accomplishments. He also has left lasting enemies as well as friends. I'm sure his successor will do the same, although in different areas.

The first time I talked to him, a multitude of different impressions ran through my mind. "Too smooth", I thought, "obviously a bullshit artist". And, in a sense he is. The polite word is Public Relations, and that is what the selection committee that chose him had in mind. He says that, "This university needs all the good public relations it can get."

When he started talking about the philosophy of this and the considerations of that, I figured I was in the wrong office. But when, after a coaches meeting on Monday, I heard a well-known Boyden cynic say "You know, that was the first intelligent meeting we've had in twenty years. The man's got a brain.", I figured maybe he was for real.

He's got his faults. Right now he is still finding his way around and at times seems somewhat evasive, and hard to pin down. Time will tell how open this administration will be.

He has a tendency to be late for appointments. And NOBODY keeps the Collegian waiting. But on the same note, even though he was a half-hour late he actually came to the Collegian office to talk to some people. It has been a long time since an AD has graced those venerable rooms.

It is way too early to make any real judgments about this man. Coaching wise, I've always been impressed with the caliber of person at Boyden. Administration wise, the story is slightly different.

But this cynical journalist, who thought Eddie Kasko would be fired in June and the Rangers would win the Stanley Cup is making a positive prediction for a change.

Frank McInerney will do a good job.

YanCon Picks

Amherst, Mass. - Defensive back Brian Herosian of the University of Connecticut and Massachusetts quarterback Peil Pennington were the only unanimous choices on a twenty-two man mythical All Yankee Conference Football Team selected after balloting league coaches in a pre-season poll.

Defending league co-champions, Connecticut and Massachusetts, both placed five men on the squad while Rhode Island and Vermont had four players selected.

While several coaches agreed that a few sophomores might appear on a team that will be selected at the end of the season, only juniors and seniors were named on the pre-season squad.

Football, 1972 Style

Varsity

By EARLE BARROLL

"We expect to be a better football team. The only way we measure success, i.e. better, is by more victories than last year."

Dick MacPherson has set the tone for the football season to come with this phraseology out of the Lombardian tradition. Basically his gridders must win at least five (4-4-1 last season), but somehow you get the feeling that the coach wants more.

You wonder after this past Saturday's offensive catastrophe if the is rational. 3-0 losses pre-season or not are not the most impressive of credentials for making statements like the one above. But the season must go on.

If you would have compared what the pre-season experts forecasted about UMass in comparison with what the team on the field performed like...then you would have found something a little bit strange.

It happened completely contrary to what was expected.

And this is why MacPherson makes statements like the one above. As he says, "All thoughts of last Saturday are gone. Right now our focus is on this Saturday's game with Maine."

What is MacPherson's second coming all about?

For openers, the YanCon coaches unanimously voted Mac's gridders as the team to beat this year in the conference. In the first pre-season New England wire-service voting they were fourth behind Boston College, Dartmouth and Harvard.

The favorite? "Fine, if we win it," MacPherson said. "We're awful pleased with the confidence the other coaches have put in our team...and we're gonna let them know it."

With the season but a couple of days away, MacPherson was adamant not to look ahead. "All this stuff about pre-season predictions and the like are behind us now. It would be unfair to the team and the team would be unfair to us if we didn't think about Maine at this time...We'll take them week by week."

If 3-0 is not an indication then what do the experts say? They say that UMass is an offensive explosion. They say that UMass is young, inexperienced and vulnerable on defense.

Point one revolves around a quarterback named Peil Pennington, a halfback named Paul Metallo, a fullback named Dick Cummings and two ends named Steve Schubert and Tim Berra. But the success of point one also revolves around an offensive line that was stripped of three seniors via graduation. The men who replaced them are not unfamiliar with varsity competitions, but after Saturday's game this week before Maine will have to tell a big story.

It's extremely difficult to lose a Bill DeFlavio and a Dennis Keating and a Jack O'Neil and a Joe Sabulis on defense. Replace them with sophomores and the experts ready to feast. But they surprised on Saturday and MacPherson was glad they did.

"We feel much better about the defense," he enthused. "But on the same token, we've got to polish more on offense."

MacPherson continued, "Metallo's better, Schubert's better, Pennington's better, Berra's better and so aren't Mullin, Brooks, Winslow, Cronin, Edwards, Jones and Bouchard.

"Now...we've got to build around these people. These are the DeFlavio's and Keating's and Hulecki's of last year's squad. These are the proven players. The test for the people around them begins on Saturday. These young guys will get their test against Maine."

A year has passed since Dick MacPherson decided to enter the collegiate ranks after four years with the pros (Denver Broncos). What has it done to him. "It's gotten me a lot more grey," he smirked.

"Coaching on the college level is much more unpredictable. Young people in college just don't have the time as the pros do to put into football."

DEFENSE IS THE NAME OF THE GAME and even though the UMass defense is a young one, it must come through for the team to have any shot at taking the Beanpot, symbolic of Yankee Conference dominance. The "Big D" features an inexperienced front four and a young defensive backfield as well, but both groups showed to good advantage against Cornell this past Saturday. (MDC Photo by Gib Fullerton)

For the continuation of Mac's greying the season ahead will see: Harvard, Boston College and Bucknell in non-league games. A fullback from Holy Cross by the name of Joe Wilson (6'3, 215) who roared through Rutgers on Saturday for 274 yards rushing. UConn as the number one threat to UMass' title hopes (enough is said).

On the homefront the names of Pennington and Metallo have graced the sports pages of every New England paper in the pre-season all-New England polls.

What will the youth movement evolve into? Was Saturday's game vs. Cornell an indication or not? The questions mount as the season nears...they always do.

And we'll leave it at that. Ten weeks from now the jury will be in.

More Football-JV Style

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

Eight-six candidates participated last week in what was the first three days of practice for the maze of former high school athletes hoping to progress towards the varsity.

Last year's controversy over freshmen playing varsity sports has subsided while receiving national acceptance, but this sub varsity group is composed only of frosh, contrary to the JV title.

Freshmen JV Coach Bill Maxwell will have his work cut out for him as he prepares his talent laden squad for a five-game season. The 1960 UMass grad must instill a winning spirit, but more important a team attitude among the various all state, all Western Mass., all Eastern Mass, or all league individuals that dot the team. What can these eight-six persons do and what is the best combination? Only three weeks remain to coordinate them into a cohesive unit.

Considering that most of these men have not been acquainted very long with the UMass system and they are also trying to adjust to college life, the task seems more difficult. Coach Maxwell noted that the freshmen football program is designed in order to allow the frosh a chance to cope with the change. During the first week of classes, there was no practice and now there is no practice on weekends. Coach Maxwell went on to state, "All the freshmen are aware that if they need to study, all they have to do is to notify a coach, to skip practice." He continued, "The specific goal is to progress towards (The playing of) varsity football."

Also working in the guidance of the frosh is varsity receiver coach, Errol Prisby. An All Missouri Valley Conference selection in 1963 and a member of the Denver Broncos in 1967, Coach Prisby shares in the overall preparation of the freshmen unit.

Others sharing in the responsibilities are: Linebacker Coach Randy Robinson, a '68 UMass graduate and a teacher in the Amherst school system; Defensive backfield Coach Mike McCardle, a captain of the '67 Redmen and a grad student; Defensive Line Coach Skip Parmenter, a starter on last year's YanCon co-champs, who was drafted and cut by the Denver Broncos, and is now playing with the Hartford Knights; Offensive Line Coach John Hulecki, another member of last year's varsity, who was cut by the Pittsburgh Steelers; Receiver Coach Walter O'Malley, a varsity flanker last year who is now working towards graduation; Offensive backfield Coach Charlie Donovan, a grad student in PE; Ken Hoff, a senior who is unable to play because of an injury; and Mike Gomes, another grad student.

The multitude of coaches are working to prepare men that will be useful for the varsity. Who will be the big stars? A lot depends on how well these prospects adjust to the collegiate experience and Head Coach MacPherson's team concept.

Some names to watch are: Offensive Linemen, Tom Harris (6'2, 219) and Don Bergeron (6'1, 215); Defensive Linemen, Jim Murphy (6'4, 210), recently of the Marine Corps, and Mike Szafranski (6'2, 206); Receivers, John Buersmeyer (6 '2, 165), a 4.8 speedstar in the 40-yard dash and Ned Deane (6'3, 219); Linebackers, Joe Andrews (6'2, 231), Neal Desmarais (6'3, 200), Walter Garwacki (6'4, 218) and John Penny and Defensive back, Steve Wood. A host of backs are competing. Some of which are Bob Wolfe, Jerry Mondalto, Bill Gel Somino, Gary Pabis and Tom Rohan.

The coming season depends partly on those before mentioned, but also with those who were not mentioned due to space limitations. In two and a half months, the accomplishments of Coach Maxwell's unit will be known, whether good or bad.

Bill Maxwell

What is everyone looking at? Football! Freshman Coach Bill Maxwell stands out among the multitude of onlookers observing the first contact between the frosh candidates. Coach Maxwell, a 1960 UMass graduate, guided last year's charges to a 4-1 record. This year the task may or may not be easier, as he confronts another talent laden squad. Crew Gets New Coach

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

Way back when, before gasoline, man relied on strength to get across the water. Whether paddling a canoe or powering a slave galley when the wind died, the principle is the same. An oar was used to force water back and propel the vessel forward. Crew is this and more. It demands a certain amount of strength, but more important togetherness and teamwork.

If one man is not pulling his weight, then the effort of his mates will go for nought. Rowers are not mentioned individually, but rather the whole unit is praised or derided. The basic boat used on this campus is the eight man shell, which holds eight rowers and a coxswain. The oarmen are counted on for their strength, but they depend upon the little man-the coxswain-to steer the shell. So, basically crew is the interaction between men as they work together towards a common goal-to propel the shell forward at the fastest speed possible.

In recent weeks, the cry around Boyden is whatever happened to that crew fellow? Mike Faherty has departed on his way to law school and his office space given to another sport. Upon closer inspection it was learned that the Crew staff (two people) was somewhere in WOPE. Room 150, formerly occupied by a dance instructor, turned out to be the new home of rowing, and new varsity coach Mike Vespoli arrived yesterday about noon. Freshmen coach Charles Leonard in the last week had organized a team-meet-the-coach session for last evening and was in contact with last year's veterans.

The reason behind the lateness of the arrival of the new coach goes back a few weeks to the Olympic games. Mike Vespoli rowed on the four oarsmen with a coxswain shell for the U.S. which finished fifth. His credentials in rowing include four years with the Vespar Boat Club in Philadelphia which won four national championships. The last two years, Mike was the captain. Previously, he has rowed for Georgetown, which in his senior year won the Dad Vail Regatta (national competition for small schools). Also, in the last four years, Vespoli was the crew coach at St. Joseph's Prep School in Philadelphia.

The other member of the coaching staff is Charles Leonard. Last year he coached the UMass freshmen shell which finished second at the Dad Vail. Previously, Leonard rowed four years for UMass and captained the varsity shell his senior year. He has rowed summers for various boat clubs, notably the Riverside Boat Club in Boston, the Ecorse Boat Club in Detroit, and the Rochester Boat Club.

Only two members of last year's varsity have graduated, so a veteran squad returns. Last year the varsity eight finished sixth in the Dad Vail Championships, while the JV unit finished third, and the Freshmen surprisingly edged Coast Guard for second. Most of the fall will be devoted to the development of technique and the general improvement of the squad. Coach Vespoli stated that, "The schedule will be flexible, allowing them to decide what type of boats they want to row in."

The fall schedule includes participation in the Lowell Tech Fall Festival Regatta on October 8 and the Head of the Charles Regatta on October 22.

Though the sport of rowing goes back a long way, it still is relatively unkown on this campus. The tradition is there, though recently it has been forgotten. Inside Curry Hicks Cage hanging from the rafters in the south end is a long forgotten six man shell. In 1871, the Mass Aggies defeated the heavily favored Harvard and Brown shells to gain national attention. Also this was the first time that a straight three mile course was rowed. Before this, rowing consisted of a race around a marker and back.

The overall goal of new Coach Mike Vespoli is to win for UMass, but more important to spread the concept of rowing and to get more people involved. Freshmen and Sophomores interested in Crew are invited to a meeting tonight at 8 p.m. in the AV room at WOPE. Women are invited tomorrow eveing same time same place.

Vets Bolster X-Country Squad

By JOHN BOCK

For most people there are two essentials in daily life -eating and sleeping. For the cross country runner that is only two-thirds of life. The other third involves running and lots of it.

It just so happens that the UMass cross country team is very good at doing just that. Good enough, in fact, to be in contention once more for the number one spot in the Yankee Conference and in New England.

To be Numero Uno in the YanCon and then hold the same position in New England is like running five miles to warm up for the twelve mile race. With teams like Harvard, Providence College, and Northeastern who annually send their top five men across the finish line before any one else, it is mandatory that UMass be in shape right from the beginning.

This season for sure has all the top teams coming in at the beginning. First is the meet with Harvard and PC and that followed by Northeastern and St. John's.

With all this competition one might expcet to see Coach Ken O'Brien out exorting his runners to increase their workouts from two a day to five.

Instead he says "I'd rather be in my shoes than almost any other coach in New England."

Last year, which saw the team capture the YanCon and finish third in New England after an uncertain start, the top seven men from the previous year were gone. This was actually a blessing in disguise, as O'Brien put it, because it served to promote the attitude that everyone had a chance for that number one spot.

This year the course is being run in reverse with six out of the top seven returning. Senior Co-Captain Rick Barry is running much better and has the other half of the captainship, junior Doug O'Connell, to push him. Peter Crisci, the remaining senior veteran, returns with a muscle injury that is hampering his practices but hopes it will heal by the sound of the first gun. Then there is Chris Chambers, a junior and Air Force veteran, who recently won the 15 kilometer AAU Championships. In Coach O'Brien's words he is "ready for the season now in terms of being in shape."

Last year the Dynamic Freshman Duo of Bill Gillen and Randy Thomas emerged at the end of the season to be the number one and two men on the Varsity team. They were so close in times that only a few thousandths of a second made the distinction between first and second man.

Who is this years' front runner?

"We don't have one now but certainly all the runners I've mentioned could be. Also a Freshman could come in and surprise us. However I think that whoever he is will emerge about the middle of the season."

O'Brien feels that the team possesses enthusiasm tempered with a degree of caution and that this is what will make things click.

The season won't click if the runners don't tick, and speaking of ticking just what drives a long distance runner to run twenty miles a day or so and not think anything of it?

"I believe it takes a unique personality for distance running because with all the work that goes into it you have a lot to win and a lot to lose evertime you run competitively. Distance running has no off season. These guys run twice a day every day and they know that running has to become an essential part of their lives."

Some of these individuals who pound the terra firma around Amherst, South Hadley, and Shutebury prefer to run alone. Not letting their teammates see the condition they are in or when they begin their kick. Others need someone to run with, seem to get more out of the exilaration that comes from being soley responsible for covering the distance of twenty miles. Call it the psych of running or what have you but it has to come from within because there isn't a stadium full of wildly cheering fans greeting him when he crosses that line, only a stop watch and the bass drum beat of his heart in his ears.

To be in contention for the New England title every year Coach O'Brien has had to go out and recruit some top talent. "In the past few years I've had to go out and recruit some good runners that would give us numbers and I haven't really had time to go out and get the one or two outstanding runners."

With teams like Villanova, Pennsylvania, and Manhattan after the same boys it is really a race to get them." The image of UMass as Mass Aggie has changed and now we are to the point that we are the number one or two choice for these runners.

"I bring the boys to the school and they like the school and the guys that they will run with and then it gets down to the idea of money and I lose. Our program really needs these one or two top runners now so that we can start placing in the IC4A's andd then acheive some national recognition."

Yan Con, New Englands, IC4A's, NCAA's-it's a long distance to run and a lot to win.

Soccer Team Must Rebuild

By DOUG FIDLER

Coach Gerry Redmond has a very unenviable position this fall. Not only will he be faced with rebuilding the UMass soccer program, but he will be attempting to do so with little pre-knowledge of the team.

Redmond arrived from England to assume his duties as the new head soccer coach on September 1. Since then he has been busily trying to learn about his personnel.

"This year more players than ever before have turned out for soccer," explained Redmond. "With over a hundred trying out for the team, my job is harder. I want to give everyone an equal opportunity because you never know when a younger player might help the team."

"I've been quite pleased with practice so far. The players have been working very hard and have

With the return of John Kiah, UMass will have a solid performer at the goalie position. Kiah, a senior from Springfield, began the 1971 season with a string of five straight shutouts. He allowed just 12 goals in 11 games the entire season, as the team posted a 5-3-3 record.

"I have been happy with the performance of Kiah so far this year," mentioned Redmond. "Both he and Carl Vercollone are large and agile, and should cause us few worries."

Co-Captain Dave Ouelette, playing at center back, will be the mainstay of the defense again this year, and will be joined by Co-Captain Ed Doherty at halfback.

Mike Tyma, an outstanding prospect at midfield, has looked well in practice. Mike Nugent appears promising at midfield, but has sustained an ankle injury that will hinder his play for another week.

Tom Cobrun (5 goals, 3 assists) and Jeff Hague (4 goals, 1 assist) will be returning to lead the attack. They will be backed up by the scoring of Tony King, Jim Vollinger, Howie Speer, Dean Lungu, and Rudi Jones.

UMass should have a good offense. "With our forwards we should be able to score goals," predicted Redmond, "provided that our midfield and defense can get the ball up to them."

The Redmond-men participated in the Sixth Annual Western Massachusetts Soccer Jamboree this past Friday. After dropping the first game, 1-0, to a tough Springfield College team, UMass shutout A.I.C. 1-0 and tied Westfield State at 1-1.

"I can't really make any predictions yet," reflected Redmond. "I don't really know much yet about the teams we'll be playing against, but based upon the results of the Springfield Jamboree, I think the team appears to have a good chance to do well."

"In order to do well," he continued, "we will not be able to afford losing possession so easily in the midfield, and thus provide our forwards with fewer scoring opportunities."

"My knowledge of the team," concluded the new head coach, "will not be complete until this Friday afternoon when we play Amherst. There are several players, both experienced and those with less experience, who appear quite promising at the moment, but need more playing time to allow me to judge them fairly."

UMass will travel to Boston on Wednesday, September 26 to open their season against Boston College.

Big JV Squad Gets Ready

By GEOFFREY KURINSKY

The key to success for "new" coach Jack Berryman and his JV soccer squad will be a fine blend of a few returning veterans who will hopefully lead a squad made up primarily of untested Freshmen to a winning season.

Coach Berryman is anything but new to the UMass soccer program where he and his varisty squad rolled to a 5-3-3 season one year ago. The move from varsity to junior varsity is a bit unorthodox but the circumstances made the move unavoidable. The coach is back in to the swing of things as a full-time doctoral student in the history department, so, after a successful season coaching the varsity he will take the reigns of the JV squad in quest of and equally or even more successful campaign.

The varsity and JV squads together provide a pool of about 90 players from which the final squads will be selected. Players will be shuffled around from JV to varsity and they show what they can and cannot do. At present Berryman is looking at about 63 candidates, who are primarily eager Freshmen with a scattering of Sophomores and Juniors who will provide a nucleus for leadership on the young squad.

The squad has gone through 3 or 4 practices to this time and the pieces are slowly beginning to fit together. They will face their first "under the gun" action as a unit against the Amherst Lord Jeffs in a scrimmage this Saturday morning at 10 A.M. at the soccer field across from Boyden Gym. It will mark the first test for the untried squad and should be an exciting contest.

There is talent in the goal as well as on the rest of the field where freshman Tom Fentin joins the sophomore tandem of Barry Lutchen and Paul Peloquin.

It isn't an easy task to make predictions on the outcome of a JV soccer season because most teams are made up primarily of first year players, who the booters have never seen before in action. Connecticut, Springfield College, and Westfield State have tip teams year after year and will make it tough on the JV booters.

This trio always seems to get their fair share of high school talent. The squad will culminate the season against those three after beginning their season against Holyoke Community College, W.P.I., The Lord Jeffs, and Greenfield Community College.

Two additional games have been added to supplement the regular intercollegiate schedule, including a game against high school powerhouses Ludlow on October 12. The other added attraction will be Springfield Technical Community College who will battle the JV booters on October 25th.

IM's Begin With Football

By DAVID S. YOFFE

The 1972-3 Intramural season got off to a quick start this week as the Men's Touch Football competition got underway with a busy slate of eighteen games.

This year has seen a slight rise in membership as 16 fraternities, 43 residence halls and 53 Independents have entered the competition. Each team is slated to play five regularly-scheduled games in a quest to determine the Divisional Champs, and subsequently, the Campus Champs.

This season marks the 94th year that Intramural Football has taken place at UMass. It ranks second only to I.M. Baseball as the longest-running I.M. sports program here.

Returning this year and seeking their second consecutive Campus Championship are the Maruaders, who hail from Theta Chi B. Manager Jim Mercer sees the season this way: "The overall strength of many of the teams has improved over last year and although we have eight returning players this season, the competition appears to be toughening." The Marauders have on their roster five ex-football players, who have become eligible to compete this year.

Phi Sigma Delta, last season's Fraternities' Champs, and the Thatcher Redwoods winners in the Residence Hall Division, will be out to avenge their playoff losses of last year.

Cheerleading Makes a Comeback

By BILL BALLOU

The word "cheerleader" conjures up images of lovely, buxom, blonde, blue-eyed innocents dressed in pleated skirts, and wearing harmless, if somewhat vacant expressions, on their faces along with saddle shoes on their feet. Their only reason for existing is supposedly to urge on their heroes, the Jack Armstrongs of America, to gridiron victory. At least, that's how it is in all the Pat O'Brien movies.

Well, Pat O'Brien notwithstanding, that ain't the way it is anymore. Cheerleading is no longer a once-a-week chore, and no longer are cheerleaders looked upon as the epitomes of every parents' dream. Cheerleading may still be fun, but it's also a lot of work.

Those of you who attended Saturday's scrimmage with Cornell may have noticed a change in the normal UMass cheerleading situation, but then again, considering the level of cheerleading appreciation around here, you probably didn't.

The cheerleading contingent included men.

This really isn't that significant in itself, but it is more important when seen as a symbol of the change that cheerleading is going through here at UMass.

Marie Romanus, who, along with Kris Fletcher, co-captains the football cheerleading squad, took a trip this summer out through the Mid-West and West, where football is considerably bigger than here in New England, and she came back with some ideas about the subject.

"Cheering on the East Coast is really backward," she said. "The West and especially the Midwest is much more sophisticated and a much bigger thing in general."

She went on to say that in the Midwest "Guys just die to be cheerleaders. At one school over 100 guys tried out."

When the regular season starts, the cheerleaders plan to utilize a PA system and a couple of bullhorns which should make things a lot more effective. They also plan on new uniforms, more in step with the times and are working on more complicated routines involving the marching band.

All this is aimed at one thing–getting the crowd involved. That's what Marie and Kris figure is the basic function of cheering.

"What we're trying to do is develop a unity between the crowd and the team" is how Kris Fletcher put it. "We want to build up the spirit so it gets down to the players on the field."

But they don't see themselves as entertainers in the old style of song and dance work. "Yeah, I suppose, but only as a last resort," is what Kris said. "Sometimes you've got to, like when things get dull and you've got to do something to liven it up, but it really isn't the major function," is Marie's opinion.

Whatever their function, and however "minor league" the East Coast may be in regards to cheering, there is something special in being a cheerleader, at least to the cheerleader herself. Both girls, in their own way, "died" to be cheerleaders.

"I love sports, and if I was a guy I guess I'd be out there playing football. But since I'm not, this is as close as I can get," said Marie. Kris Fletcher was just as emphatic about her love for cheerleading.

Like any performer, a cheerleader likes the recognition, the applause, the chance to "show off". And there's nothing they like better than cheering in front of a big crowd. The crowd makes them more "up" for the game, and in a big crowed there tends to be more spirit to start with. The two girls gave last year's Holy Cross game as an example of the "ultimate" for a cheerleader.

There are serious questions that can be raised about the role of cheering in a school where money is so hard to come by and the average attendance at a football game hovers around 50% of capacity.

The cheering squad gets $600 for uniforms, travel expenses and the like. Not much money, but too much if nobody cares. Athletes care, coaches care. But cheering is supposed to be a two-way street between performer and spectator.

The cheering squad hopes that they can go "big league" with some new ideas and a new look. They want to go back to the "old days" when cheerleaders were part of the crowd, not something put aside for use as "commercials" during a vull in the game.

Whatever the result, the future of cheering seems pretty secure to Kris Fletcher. Ask her if there's a future in her "sport" and you'll get a one word answer.

"Definitely."

Band Seeks Relevancy

By JEANNETTE MARTINEAU

Today is the last day for students to exchange their athletic coupons for tickets to Saturday's University Marching Bank half-time concert at Alumni Stadium.

John A. Jenkins, Band director, said that this year fans may look forward to such presentations as a repeat of the Simon and Garfunkle "Sounds of Silence Show" of three years ago, a "New Dimensions' Show," a Political concert, and an "International Peace Show."

Commenting on the "transition" in the nature of the musical selections, Jenkins cited Peter Ward, the announcer during the 1967 season, as the person responsible. According to Ward "there is a need to take sides rather than to just play music on the field."

Jenkins is pleased with the student reactions to "relevant" music. "Students felt that the band was theirs rather than a public relations arm of the University."

About the marching techniques, Jenkins explained that everything that is done on the field is designed to be done while marching -good sound is essential. "We try for the best quality sound with the personnel avaialable. We're not on the field trying to blow loudly, but we do stress sound."

Charting who goes where and how he get there is a means for balancing sound. One of the purposed of band camp, an annual recruitment and auditioning held before the start of school, it to show the student where the sound goes and to teach marching techniques. This year band camp was shorter than usual,which might hamper the progress of the band.

The return of Mr. Jenkins from sabbatical to directorship of the University Band, and the simultaneous arrival of Joseph Duchi from the University of Michigan as assistant director in August, complicated by the fact that more than half of the marching band is made up of freshmen, created a problem of organization and experience.

However, Jenkins feels that the short-term nature of the 1972 band's over-all experience isn't a handicap, citing the students "attitudes, spirit, and commitment" as compensating.

Another drawback occured when the Music Department ruled that music majors, including those who plan to be conductors, do not have to play in the marching band. Jenkins feels that this loss in the depth of experience has made his

The marching band does have experienced twirlers and a returning drum-major this year. The twirlers will be used as much as in the last two years. The emphasis willnow be on fine, competitive twirling. Louis Brusso, the drum major, will lend his experience to supervising the drill instruction during band camp, keeping the marchers "fired up", and leading the band. The drum major is no longer "just a show piece," he leads and sets the tempo of every musical selection.

Letters To The Editor

Pedal Against Pollution

Dear Cyclist:

The rapidly expanding bicycle population has reached a stage in recent years where there is approximately one bicycle for every four persons in the U.S. Seventy-three million riders have already 'discovered' that bicycles are a stimulating, convenient, and relatively inexpensive form of transportation, and, as a result, they are quickly becoming a major element on our nation's highways and walkways. Yet this marked growth in bicycle traffic has not been accompanied by a similar increase in the number of available bike-ways nor by a modernization of the local, state, and federal laws designed to improve conditions for bicycling.

This confused and oftentimes hazardous state of affairs has hindered the development of this viable alternate form of transportation. The absence of well-defined bike arteries, coupled with out-dated or non-existent registration, licensing, and insurance laws, has created a severe problem for motorists, pedestrians, and bicyclists alike. Certainly, if we are committed to the development of a balanced transportation system which stresses efficient, non-polluting vehicles, then we must make provisions to improve bicycle transportation.

A concerted effort by federal, state and local governments, bicycle and environmental groups, and other interested parties can and will resolve this pressing problem. To help further this end, there will be a state-wide bicycle campaign, the goal of which is to increase the public's awareness of the problems that confront the cyclist and to establish a set of guidelines for bicycle activity.

The mun event will be a three-day bicycle trip from Pittsfield to Boston, with over-night stopovers in Amherst and Marlborough, on Saturday, Sunday, and Monday September 30, October 2, at Boston City Hall Plaza with a welcoming ceremony and press conference.

This is a unique opportunity to demonstrate the strength and sense of purpose of the bicycling public. We must fill City Hall Plaza with bicycles and enthusiasts if we are to make an impression. We ask that you participate in any way you can.

More Redmen Drivel

To The Editor:

People who have lived on God's earth for eighteen plus years should realize by now the phrase "you can't please all of the people all of the time" is certainly a truth. No matter what the nickname of the UMass athletic teams there would always be that "ten percent" who wouldn't like it for some reason or another. If this university were nicknamed the Saints or Padres there would be a few Bible bearing individuals who would be irate at the thought of anything or anyone holy involved in the brutality of UMass football. Another possibility might be the UMass Radishes. The very thought of a harmless vegetable involved in the hostilities of a Lacrosse game would send Cesar Chavez and his migrant workers to storm the athletic dept. and steal all the jock straps. How about the name UMass White men? The very mention of this would mobilize the entire minority population against such a discrimination. Although these ideas are rather far reaching, there is a very real problem in regard to the cost of purchasing new athletic uniforms. The athletic council could always tear off the Men from the word Redmen on the baseball teams uniforms and start thinking up replies to the letters from all the hard hats calling UMass a commie, pinko hippie institution. Perhaps just leaving the word Men on the shirts would make it better. Coach Bergquist and Coach Wilson could have all their scrubs answering the mail trucks full of letters from bra burning libbers.

What probably would happen would be an increase in taxes or student fees so in the long run the students would wind up paying for the displeasures of the "ten percent". No matter how the trustees vote in regard to changing the university nickname there will always be that "ten percent" of the student and state populus who won't like it.

RIGHT ON REDMEN.

Redmen Again!

To The Editor:

Don't panic, this is my last (hopefully the last) "redman" letter.

Okay, Mr. Estelle, it appears that I've misunderstood you. True, the issue of the possible abuse of the democratic process was mentioned in your original letter; I did not respond to that because I felt that Friday's letter from the Native Americans dealt with it more adequately than I could. However, what I was (and still am) most struck by was the amount of space you spent apparently defending the "Redman" name on the grounds that it in some way captured the basic spirit of the Native American heritage. If this was not your main point, all I can say is that it was very difficult to see any other.

But enough already. As you say, it's a pointless argument, now that the deed is (fortunately) done. Peace, Mr. Estelle.

Naive Student Senate

To The Editor:

My condolences to the Student Senate. Through a naive, undemocratic ruling they've allotted 15 extra, "safe," seats to representatives of the papier mache Third World Alliance. I offer condolences, because the Senate is now confronted with the monumental task of figuring out who is a representative member of the Third World, the Eighth, or perhaps even the one we're used to. You see, so many people have huddled under the Third World blanket, rather than face the problems of their specific group or nationality, that it's getting a little difficult to tell who's legit.

In fact, if some of the Third Worlders knew what some of their bedfellows have been up to in the past, perhaps they'd be hesitant to affiliate themselves with this oversized slogan. For example, Blacks would surely lose some of their feeling of comaraderie with Arab groups if they were aware that Arab bombers, especially Egyptian, were heavily responsible for the slaughter of Biafrans during that doomed country's conflict with Nigeria.

But alas, people are often too anxious for something to call themselves. It is only sad that the Student Senate can now justifiably be called naive.

Regretfully Stooged

To The Editor:

Due to unforeseen circumstances beyond our control with out-of-state film distributors, the Three Stooges film were not shown last Thursday and Friday nights. We were expecting their delivery up to show time but they did not arrive nor did we receive any word to the contrary by the film distributor.

We regretfully apologize for the inconvenience which we put on all Stooges fans in not having any cancelled signs on the auditorium but this was an oversight on our part which we regret.

Rose Colored Glasses?

To the Editor:

This is a belated reply to last week's letter of "Larry Ladd et al." concerning the Freshman Orientation Program. We were all counselors in that program, one of us for two years, the others for one, and we feel that Larry Ladd's slur on the program is unjustified, and personally insulting to those of us who worked on the program.

In NO WAY did we ever feel we were giving the new students a vew of the University through "rose-colored glasses." We tried to give them an optimistic yet realistic view of UMass. While stressing all the good things both academic and extra-curricular that one can get involved in, we also spent an immense amount of time talking, as one student to another, about the hassles, beaurocracy and red tape involved in being a part of a large university. Judging by some of the comments we got during these sessions, some freshmen seemed to think we put too much emphasis on hassles rather than stressing the good things about "coming to college."

I would invite "Larry Ladd et al" to go to the Counseling Center some afternoon and ask if they can take a look at the evaluations that the freshmen themselves wrote on how effective they felt the program to be. Those of you who scorn the Summer Orientation Program might be surprised to find that the overwhelming majority of them felt the program to be beneficial, and made them want to return in September. Neither those of you who judge the program without ever having been involved in it, nor those of us who spent so much time trying to make it a valuable orientation are in a position to really judge it. In the end the freshmen are the only ones whose opinions count, and by their own evaluations, it was a valuable, necessary program. We would be interested to hear from any freshmen now that several weeks of school have passed to see how they feel now. How about it, freshmen?

It Didn't Take Long

To The Editor:

This letter is addressed to Bill Densmore and all those who sympathize with him. Firstly let's all get straight on who 'Third World' really is all about. Third World - comprised of all so-called minority peoples, beforehand referred to by white anthropoligists as the 'colored races' of the world; Africans, Latin and Central Americans, Asians, Native Americans, and their decendants.

If you're ever going to maintain sanity you'd better relieve yourself of such ridiculous notions as; 'because I don't feel I'm not represented, you shouldn't either.' Funny how your view of what is 'fair' didn't reverse itself until you felt robbed. As long as 'they' were getting messed over and being quiet it was alright with you. Your Great White Father complex is showing. You expect 'minority students' to trust honest, hardworking white folks like you to look after their best interests. All they have to do is be patient. Right.

The days of the 'camp' racist are gone, period. But tell me why you feel qualified to make blantantly racist statements (poor spades)? Or why even though you obviously knew nothing about 'Third World', you didn't hestitate to ridicule it?

Within the past week or so a general mood of fear and anger has been directed towards 'minority' students on campus, partly because they dared demand representation on a governing student body but mainly because they got it. This seemed to be the right time to put all these people in their place with a few quotes from the W.A.S.P. manifesto. But after all the emotional static dies down the problem would still exist.

If logic is where you're coming from, then you'll realize that the Student Senate made the only fair decision they could. Now regardless as to how cheated you may feel or how many hostile bags you come from, The Third World will be represented it.

They're REALLY Into It

To the Editor:

I am writing to you concerning the recent controversy concerning the dropping of the name "Redmen" from the school paper. After going over the various editorials and letters in the paper the other day I found it hard in my white mind to understand why the American Indian resented the implications in the name "Redmen" however sullen or innocent or non-existant they may be. Then the thought struck me of an excellent word to replace it. How about "Honkey". Think about it.

What To Do About A Loyalty Oath

By GILBERT J. SALK

Faculty members, staff, and student employees of the University, today's column is aimed at you, as well as other members of the University community.

Recently, there has been a great deal of attention given to the loyalty oath. So far, at least one person has lost his job for refusing to sign the oath. All new faculty (those hired within the past three years or so) will be required to sign the oath at the risk of losing their position, including those who are tenured. All university staff, graduate assistants, and student employees will also lose their jobs if they do not sign the oath. President Wood, in theory, will be fired if he refuses to sign.

The problems with this are many. Not the least is the coercive aspect, which many who could otherwise accept the oath find objectionable. There are no provisions for conscientious objectors to specify that their defense of the nation or the state will not include the bearing of arms. The oath could easily be construed as an actual or potential violation of academic freedom, as it could be used to prohibit the teaching of certain subjects, and has already, in the case of Don Grant, prohibited people with certain beliefs from teaching.

The list of objections can go on and on. Some are valid, some aren't. But the inescapable fact remains that many members of this community are uncomfortable with the requirement that they sign this oath.

A meeting of those people has been called by the University Ombudsman, Jay Savereid, for Monday Sept. 25, in 917 Campus Center, from 3:30-5:30 p.m.

The only purpose of the meeting is to bring together those who share the discomfort and wish to discuss some type of response to the directive. I would urge all who are concerned, either for themselves or for their friends and colleagues, to try to attend.

I would also like to suggest some possible responses. You may find one you like, or you may prefer to bring some other ideas to the meeting.

There is the possible response of altering the form. This could be done in a number of ways. You could write "Signed under duress" or "Signed under economic duress" with your signature. You could add a statement that you do not consider your signature to require you to bear arms or perform any action which you feel would violate your religious, moral or ethical values. You could state that you support the constitutions as they now read, but that you reserve the right to withdraw your support if they are changed in any way.

Political response is also possible. Although the U.S. Supreme Court has refused to rule on the question, there is always the chance to get the law requiring the oath repealed to the State Legislature. Action along this line could be organized fairly easily.

Individual refusal to sign, on the basis of conscience, would probably not serve to change the overall situation, but if a sizeable group refused, that could generate enough pressure to stop rigid enforcement of the requirement. Tenured faculty would have a legal basis for a possible new court fight on the question, and the support of the AAUP could perhaps be enlisted. The threat of an AAUP blacklisting for dismissing tenured professors, or even for the firing of a large number or untenured faculty, would be a serious problem for the University.

Faculty members who have already signed the oath can try to have it removed from their files, or can publicly state that they are no longer bound by it, either because their consciousness about its implications has changed, or because the terms of the agreement have changed through legislation since they signed it.

Help may be enlisted from a number of sources. The Faculty, Graduate, and Undergraduate Senates may all be approached to pass resolutions opposing the compulsory nature of the oath. Collective bargaining agencies, either those on campus or those campaigning to be recognized on campus, might be persuaded to show their goodwill by lending financial support for a new court fight or advertising campaign. Student employees, who are already, for the most part, disgracefully underpaid and who do not receive any retirement or other benefits, might be persuaded to unionize.

Obviously, the possible range of responses extends from simple notification of dissatisfaction to outright revolt. It seems clear to me that some response is required, for the oath stands as an unarguable infringement upon the personal freedom of a large proportion of the University community. It even restricts the freedom of those not directly affected.

It will keep certain teachers out of the classroom, thus restricting the education available. It will keep away some students who need University jobs or assistantships to come to school, thus limiting the kind of people we all meet and learn from while we are here. And those kept away will not be limited to those who might be willing to

Smithfield Students Go Back To School

PROVIDENCE (AP) - A new contract for Smithfield teachers was agreed upon today, ending the last of nine disputes that had delayed the start of the school year for about 50,000 public school pupils in Rhode Island.

The settlement was reached at 5:40 a.m. during a meeting in the office of Gov. Frank Licht. He attended the meeting of Smithfield teachers and school committee members along with Dr. Fred G. Burke, state education commissioner, and William P. Robinson Jr., associate commissioner.

Teachers were to attend orientation sessions today, with classes set to begin Wednesday morning, two weeks after the scheduled opening of the school year.

Meanwhile, classes in Burrillville began today in the wake of teacher ratification of a new contract Sunday. Teacher orientation was held Monday.

In another development Monday, the state Supreme Court set Oct. 26 for an open-court hearing on whether public school teachers should be given the right to strike. In 1958, the high court ruled teacher strikes were illegal.

The court's decision to review the earlier ruling resulted from a petition submitted by the Westerly Teachers' Association.

On Sept. 6, the scheduled start of the school year, Rhode Island faced the worst school labor strike in history, as teachers in nine communities were without contracts. In eight of them, teachers voted to withhold services until they had new contracts. In Providence, Dr. Charles M. Bernardo, superintendent of schools, canceled the start of classes for several days, until the problem was resolved.

JOE Volunteer Recruitment Drive

The second meeting of the Juvenile Opportunities Extension in as many weeks will be held tonight in the Council Chambers of the Student Union at 7:30. The meeting will continue J.O.E.'s volunteer recruitment drive and also start the volunteer effort for this academic year.

Approximately 80 students showed up for last week's meeting. Some have taken the initiative and started to work at the Westfield Detention Center while tonight's meeting is geared to starting a new volunteer effort in Holyoke.

The agenda for this meeting of J.O.E. will start with a talk by a staff member from the Westfield Detention Center on delinquency and the type of youth that makes his or her way through the center. This will be followed by a preliminary matching up of those volunteers interested in working with kids on parole.

Another part of the meeting will be the general discussion of volunteer and kids. Although the parole volunteer program is being built up as a new program there is still a tremendous need for volunteers to work at the detention facility.

Currently the building is under the strain of overcrowding. The population of the building has doubled in recent months. This follows a pattern of commitments to the Department of Youth Services that is coincidental with the start of school. The building is designed to hold only twenty-four, however, the rationale for keeping the youth at Westfield is basically to keep the youths close to home.

With over fifty kids in the building there is a need to keep the kids active in any type of activity that is interesting to them. At last week's meeting, it was suggested that a few volunteers could arrange to go to Westfield one night a week to help the staff put kids to bed after watching one of the evening movies. Currently kids are put to bed at nine in the evening. Another suggestion is to run bingo games for cartons of cigarettes.

It should be remembered by the female students on campus that many things happen for the male habitants at Westfield while there often is a lack of female activities. A complaint often aired by girls there is the guys get to play basketball and get out of the building while the girls are stuck with washing the evening meal dishes. This lack of programs and facilities for females is state wide.

The final point on the agenda will be the support J.O.E. as a student organization can provide a volunteer and possibly some words from a staff member from the Holyoke Street School. They hope many students will show up tonight and continue to show up to make this year an exciting academic year. There are opportunities for students to participate on all levels of work with youth from being a twice-a-week parole volunteer to being a foster parent in a more accelerated graduate student program.

400 Stewardesses Back In The Air

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Four hundred former stewardesses, some in their 40s, are returning to the air as mothers.

The stewardesses, who had been fired as far back as 1965 for becoming pregnant, are back in the air because of a court-approved settlement of a suit brought by their union against Trans World Airlines and American Airlines.

The Air Line Stewards and Stewardesses Association argued the firings were discriminatory, in violation of 1965 Equal Employment Opportunity Commission guidelines.

In the settlement reached in March in Chicago, the two airlines agreed to rehire qualified stewardesses at their original seniority level.

Since then TWA and American have rehired 400 women, the oldest 45.

The returnees say being a stewardess is better the second time around.

"I feel like I'm a better stewardess now than I was when I was 22," says TWA's Pat Tuens, 37, a mother of two. "I've matured with the responsibilities of being a wife and a mother. I feel more level-headed and capable of dealing with people."

Returning to the air has been prompted by a variety of reasons: boredom, nostalgia, broken marriages or economic need. The job pays from $800 to $1,000 a month for about 72 hours work, and the stewardesses are generally away from home only two nights a week.

Brain Damage Danger Ignored By Industry

WASHINGTON (AP) - Babies may be exposed to the risk of brain damage if fed foods containing the flavor enhancer monosodium glutamate, a St. Louis resercher testified Tuesday.

Dr. John W. Olney of Washington University School of Medicine said "an industry-arranged whitewash affair" was responsible for allowing the additive "to be used freely in any foods, in any amounts and for any age group."

Olney told the Senate Select Committee on Nutrition and Human Needs that his original 1969 findings, showing that monosodium glutamate MSG destroys brain cells in infant laboratory animals, since has been duplicated by researchers around the world.

He said the danger to human infants was not negated when U.S. baby-food companies removed MSG from their products in 1969. He said infants also may be fed adult foods containing much higher amounts of MSG or they may receive doses before they are born or from their mothers' milk.

"My quarrel is primarily with the infant aspect," he said. "But we must recognize the open question of pregnant mothers and lactating mothers," he said.

Labels on adult foods, he suggested in an interview afterward, "should say this food is not suitable for babies."

Olney said a National Academy of Sciences subcommittee gave MSG a clean oill of health in 1970, but its composition showed "a high degree of industry bias and poor qualifications.

"Loyalty to industry must have been foremost on the list, judging from the number of industry-employed or subsidized individuals who sat on the subcommittee."

Citing what he called flawed research techniques and reports by three laboratories supporting the NAS subcommittee's conclusions, Olney said:

"Those who were unable to confirm the findings turned out to be almost exclusively from a certain element of the scientific community; a group of individuals who maintain close ties with the food and drug industries; individuals who are highly regarded by those industries as 'food protection authorities' and who function as a team prepared to swing into action whenever a food-safety issue arises."

Attention Parking Violators

The Parking Office had released the following statement, effective immediately: "All persons must park in lots to which they are assigned, with the exception of essential services and persons with physical disabilities. All violators will be tickets. Your co-operation is essential."

Cigarette Smoking Rate Up

WASHINGTON (AP) - Americans, who are smoking more now than at any time in the last four years, may soon have to take a back seat on U.S. airlines.

Americans 18 and over will average 204 packs of cigarettes apiece this year, the most since 1968, the Agriculture Department predicted Monday. That's a two-pack increase over last year.

The average is for all Americans over 18, both smokers and non-smokers.

Meanwhile, the Civil Aeronautics Board Monday proposed a new rule to require segregation of smokers to the rear of the aircraft on all airlines, including charter and local service lines.

The CAB said it will wait until Nov. 3 before making a final decision on the rule, and will receive comments on it until that time.

Most trunk airlines already segregate smokers, while charter and local service lines usually do not.

Consumer advocate Ralph nader has asked that smoking be banned on planes on grounds it is hazardous.

The Federal Aviation Administration ruled that smoking by passengers was not hazardous, but noted that more than 60 per cent of nonsmoking passengers complained that smoking by others was a nuisance.

Fringe Benefits: No Handout

NEW YORK (AP) - If you fail to analyze critically those surveys made from time to time about the swift growth in fringe benefits paid to workers you might believe that life was becoming a big handout.

Last year, according to a National Chamber of Commerce study, such benefits accounted for 30.8 per cent of the average firm's payroll.

In 1961, the study states, the average annual benefits paid cost $1,254. Similar payments last year averaged $2,544, a gain of 103 per cent in one decade.

Out of average annual earnings of $8,260 paid in 1971, the Chamber lists three average benefits per employe: Social Security $372, up 178 per cent in a decade; insurance $369, up 171 per cent; paid sick leave $81, 131 per cent up.

Following in order are: profit sharing $86, up 105 per cent; paid holidays $244, up 94 per cent; private pensions $402, up 91 per cent; paid vacations $400, up 90 per cent, and "other" $228, up 20 per cent.

Does this mean that labor is draining away the vitality of its employer?

Before jumping to conclusions you must define "worker," because some of the most beneficial fringes are those that make the executive's life more comfortable and financially rewarding. Benefits are not solely a blue-collar phenomenon.

Nevertheless, some executives draw on a vast array of statistics showing the corporate profits have indeed been pinched in recent years by rising payroll costs, despite the growth in overall prosperity.

But in a broader perspective that includes social good and national goals it is more difficult to assess the impact. Productivity of American factories has not risen as fast as in many countries, but that may be changing.

In fact, a study just released by Standard & Poor's shows that "for the first time in recent years there was a significant dip in 1971 in the portion of the sales dollars of industrial companies that went into payrolls."

S&P defines payrolls to include wages, salaries and fringe benefits, which it said amounted to only 26 cents for every dollar of sales, down from nearly 28 cents in 1970. The percentage was the lowest since the 1950s.

Of 29 industrial groups for which comparisons were made, 19 showed declines in wage-cost ratios and 10 reported rises.

Rainbow Girls Called Racist

WORCESTER, Mass. (AP)-A former official of a local chapter of the Order of Rainbow for Girls accused the national association Tuesday of tending "to be a racist organization" because "it doesn't accept blacks or any other ethnic groups."

Joan Anderson said she has resigned her 20-year membership in the Order of the Eastern Star to protest the "written or unwritten policy" of the Order of Rainbow which she said exclude blacks and members of ethnic groups from the organization for girls age 12 to 21.

The Order of Rainbow was founded by the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons in 1922. The Order of the Eastern Star is an association for women affiliated with the Masons.

Mrs. Anderson said she resigned from the Eastern Star "in response to recent disclosures in the media" that two Massachusetts chapters of the Order of Rainbow which had admitted black girls had been suspended by the national organization.

She said the resignation was qualified. "I'd want to be active again if the policies change," she said.

Mrs. Anderson was a worthy advisor of the Bancroft assembly of the Order of the Rainbow 20 years ago when, she said, "the problem of racism wasn't nearly as broad as it is now."

Mrs. Anderson is director of education at the Chestnut Street Congregational Church whose minister, the Rev. R. Bricker Gibson, said in a radio sermon Sunday he would not allow his daughter to become a member of an Order of Rainbow chapter that had not been suspended by the national organization.

"The international Order of Rainbow for Girls must be run by dowager bigots because of racist membership policies," the Rev. Mr. Gibson said in the sermon.

On Monday, Sheryl King, 17, of North Reading resigned from the Order of Rainbow in a letter to the national organization because she said she had found that the order excluded blacks.

No reason was given by the national organization for the suspension of the Order of Rainbow chapters in Auburn and Spencer.

Herbert D. Grout, Jr., head of the Rainbow Girls' National Assembly in McAlester, Okla, told the Associated Press in a telephone interview last week that the chapters were suspended "because they didn't abide by the rules and regulations."

He declined to elaborate.

Plant Walkout Prompts Layoff

PITTSFIELD, Mass. (AP) - A continuing walkout by 125 welders prompted the General Electric Co. to lay off 150 workers in its power transformer tank shop late Monday, and more layoffs are expected later this week.

The company said the layoffs were caused by "imbalances in the shop" due to the work stoppage by welders, who have been off the job since last Wednesday.

Members of Local 255, International Union of Electrical workers, the welders are protesting a new pay plan in which some workers are being switched from incentive piece rates to straight hourly pay, with resulting loss in take-home pay.

The company introduced the pay plan this summer with the union's narrow approval, in an effort to lower production costs to keep the Pittsfield plant in operation.

Local 255 leaders have slated a meeting with dissident welders Thursday morning to urge them to return to work. Local 255 business agent Albert F. Litano predicted that 200 may be laid off today, and another 250 face layoffs Thursday unless the welders return to work.

¡Ahora! Tries To Help Spanish-Speaking Students

Presently at UMass there are about fifty Spanish-speaking students (Puerto Ricans, Chicanos, Dominicans, and other Americans). The students' main language is, of course, Spanish. Their background is not of the usual high-school, college preparation sequence; many have quit school and later earned their High School Equivalency through programs offered by the state or in the military. Many of the students are married and have families.

With these considerations in mind, the students have organized themselves into a group called ¡AHORA!. They are attempting to change the present restricting and limiting structure which the University has developed into a more flexible situation which will more effectively serve their needs.

They are very concerned about the high rate in which Puerto Rican students are dropping out of schools within the Commonwealth, and to break this pattern they are recruiting from the surrounding communities and encouraging students to take the GED and apply for admission into the University and the surrounding colleges.

To deal with the language needs, the organization is helping to develop as many bilingual courses as possible to fulfill Univ. core requirements and other independent bilingual offerings. They are working toward attaining more representation and awareness of their historical and cultural background and procuring staff and faculty representation.

They have stated, "Our feelings of frustration and isolation in an alienating structure compels us to get together with ourselves and the rest of the Third World Community in order that these vital needs for our present and future survival be met."

They encourage all students who desire to do volunteer work or are simply interested in more information to contact Angel Garcia or any other ¡AHORA! member at 112 New Africa House, 545-0773.

TM: The Science of Creative Intelligence

"If education is based on inner values along with information of the outer world, education in any branch of learning will not create mere ability to maintain life by means of a job somewhere, but will reveal to the growing man the real significance of inner life. His personality will develop a bold character and brilliance in his career. Every man will be found profusely equipped with the ability to gain great knowledge on every subject"

Maharishi Mahesh Yogi from The Science of Being and the Art of Living

East is East and West is West and now the twain have met.

"Science", the Western worlds means of gaining systematic knowledge, has been found to be the perfect expression for the study of the inner values of Creative intelligence, long held to be the exclusive wisdom of the East.

Here at last is a positive approach to the dilemma which is confronting the world of higher education today. To resolve the conflict between the specialized, "fragmented" knowledge imperative to success in a particular field, and broader fulfillment in life, The Science of Creative Intelligence has been harnessed by the renowned Indian teacher of Transcendental meditation, Maharishi Mahesh Yogi.

It is the sincere hope of the members of the Student's International Meditation Society (SIMS) at UMass that every student and faculty member on campus take advantage of this program for fulfilling the highest goals of education.

Maharishi defines the Science of Creative Intelligence (SCI) as "a systematic inquiry into the source of all knowledge in order to provide a unifying or holistic basis for all branches of learning."

Although creative intelligence has been the theme of great writers and artists throughout the ages, its benefits are not limited to men of genius. Every man, woman and child from every walk of life is capable of enjoying its fruits.

Currently courses in SCI are being offered at several major Universitics both here and abroad, including Stanford, Yale, Wisconsin and UMass. Central to the course is the study of the principals and dynamics of Transcendental Meditation (TM), an ancient technique updated by Maharishi for use in our technological age.

TM is a simple natural technique for expanding consciousness which affords the mind complete relaxation and release from tension. It is a process of actual experience rather than of intellectual analysis, whose viability can be tested by personal results. The technique is extremely easy and can be learned by anyone.

The practical utility of TM in everyday existence has accelerated its spread to world-wide dimensions. Practitioners report increased energy and efficiency, greater clarity of thinking, as well as improved physical health. Wherever the message of TM has penetrated it has worked like magic; on drug-ridden campuses, in industries threatened with alcoholism. The practical utility of TM in everyday existence has accelerated its spread to world-wide dimensions. Practitioners report increased energy and efficiency, greater clarity of thinking, as well as improved physical health. Wherever the message of TM has penetrated it has worked like magic; on drug-ridden campuses, in industries threatened with alcoholism. Recently, pilot programs documenting the efficiency of TM in combatting drug addiction have been sponsored at UCLA and Harvard.

An outgrowth of Transcendental Meditation, The Science of Creative Intelligence first surfaced academically in the winter of 1970 at Stanford. Three hundred and fifty students attended and their response was so overwhelming that several campuses adapted the program and many more have been clamoring for similar courses.

In response to the challenge of the present generation which the academic establishment is unable to meet, SCI offers a unique contribution to fill the void in the development of our youth.

The viability of creative intelligence has been expressed through the works of men in all civilizations in all times, from the pillars of Stonehenge to the geodesic dome, from Biblical psalms to 20th century computer language.

The electrifying discovery-or rediscovery of this great potential within man is destined to rock the foundations of conventional education, fueled by student support.

At 8:00 PM this evening in Thompson 104 Prof. Larry Domash, a professor of Physics at Maharishi International University will present a lecture and slide presentation on "The Physiology of Consciousness." This free lecture is open to all and will be followed by a second lecture at Amherst College, Converse hall on Friday evening at 8.

Man vs. Nature And Man

ESSEX, Mass. (AP) - Man and nature have taken just about everything - including the kitchen sink - from a home being built here by Donald Wolfe, 22, and his June bride, Bonnie, 19.

A storm over Labor Day Weekend partially collapsed the structure's foundation and ther thieves broke in and took wedding gifts of silver and china, a wall thermostat, bathroom plumbing fixtures and the kitchen sink.

Overseas Study Comp Opens

Information and applications are now available for Fulbright Grants to study abroad in 1973-74. These grants, whose purpose is to increase mutual understanding between the people of the United States and other countries through the exchange of persons, knowledge and skills, are provided under the terms of the Mutual Education and Cultural Exchange Act of 1961 (Fulbright-Hays Act) and by foreign governments, universities and private donors. It is expected that approximately 550 awards to 37 countries will be available for 1973-74.

Applicants must be U.S. citizens at the time of application, who will hold a bachelor's degree or its equivalent before the beginning date of the grant and, in most cases, be proficient in the language of the host country. Except for certain specific awards, candidates may not hold the Ph.D. at the time of application.

Creative and performing artists are not required to have a bachelor's degree, but they must have four years of professional study of equivalent experience. Social work applicants must have at least two years of professional experience after the Master of Social Work degree; candidates in medicine must have an M.D. at the time of application.

Selection is based on the academic and/or professional record of the applicant, the validity and feasibility of the proposed study plan, a language preparation and personal qualifications. Preference is given to candidates between 20 and 35 years of age who have not had prior opportunity for extended study or residence abroad.

Application forms and information may be obtained from the campus Fulbright Program Adviser, Professor Roland Sarti, Department of History, Herter 713. The deadline for filing applications through the FPA on this campus is October 8, 1972.

Quiet One Returns

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Running back Duane Thomas joined the San Diego Chargers Tuesday, 20 days after being suspended for failure to report to the National Football League team.

There was no indication, whether Thomas, who was obtained in a trade with Dallas, planned to stay. Three times before, he visited the Chargers briefly but left each time.

A spokesman said, however, that the moddy backfield star this time joined the Chargers on the playing field. He was wearing a helmet, sweat pants and black football shoes.

Thomas walked with several other Chargers to a team van two hours later and was driven to San Diego Stadium five miles away, the place where he first reported.

"Did you come to play?" somebody asked.

"Yes," Thomas replied.

Another onlooker asked Thomas if he was in shape.

"I'm always in shape," was the reply. When he was asked why he had waited so long, he replied tersely: "What do you think?"

Head Coach Harland Svare suspended Thomas and levied a daily $150 fine Aug. 29 and said that the Chargers had been patient since the trade with the Cowboys in July. The Chargers in that deal gave up running back Mike Montgomery and wide receiver Billy Parks unconditionally.

There has been no public explanation why Thomas had refused to report to the Chargers.

Grant Moans Mistakes

MINNEAPOLIS-ST. PAUL (AP) — If Bud Grant was coaching against the Minnesota Vikings he would have plotted the same game plan implemented by the Washington Redskins Monday night.

The Redskins, outgained by almost 200 yards, downed Grant's Vikings 24-21 in the National Football League opener for both teams.

Grant said he expects almost every team Minnesota faces to play it this way:

—Don't gamble.

—Stick with the short passes and running game.

—Hope the Vikings make the key mistakes.

"They figured they had to run the football," Grant said Tuesday after reviewing films of the game. "They wanted to avoid the errors. They figured if they stayed close they had a chance to win."

The Redskins, down 14-10 going into the final period, struck for touchdown runs by Larry Brown and Charley Harraway 85 seconds apart early in the priod.

The Vikings made the mistakes Washington had hoped for–two costly fumbles, a blocked field goal and a blocked punt. Bill Malinchak blocked Mike Eischeid's punt at the Minnesota 20, picked it up at the 16 and ran in for a touchdown on the game's first series.

Grant praised Brown, who carried 21 times for 105 yards for the Redskins. His run of 37 yards set up Curt Knight's 30-yard field goal in the first half.

Washington quarterback Bill Kilmer, who completed only seven of 17 passing attempts for 57 yards, said the Redskins "knew we had to run. If we tried to throw a lot, they would have put on their strong pass rush and we would have been in trouble."

Ali Favored

NEW YORK (AP) — Floyd Patterson faces what could be his Last Hurrah to big-time boxing when he fights Muhammad Ali Wednesday night at Madison Square Garden.

The 37-year-old former two time heavyweight champion maintains he is ready--both mentally and physically--for the fight he needs to win or at least look very good in to remain a major influence in the heavyweight division.

But boxing insiders give him little chance and odds-makers consider Ali such an overwhelming favorite that no betting line has been established for the scheduled 12-rounder.

"There is no way that this won't be a good fight," said Patterson. "Mentally I am better prepared for this fight than any of the fights I've ever had. Couple that with the excellent physical condition I'm in and make your own decision."

The fight, the second between the two men, and a preceding 10-rounder between ex-lightweight champions Ken Buchanan of Scotland and Carlos Ortiz of New York will be shown on closed circuit television and will be seen live or on tape in 30 other countries.

In their first fight, Ali, then champion, stopped Patterson in 12 rounds Nov. 22, 1965, at Las Vegas, Nev.

Ali will go into the fight with a seven-bout winning streak built since he failed to regain the title in a 15-round fight with Joe Frazier March 8, 1971, in the Garden. Patterson has won nine straight since losing a 10-round decision to Jimmy Ellis in a World Boxing Association title fight Sept. 14, 1968.

Replay Knocked

NEW ORLEANS (AP) - The National Football League office denied Tuesday that Commissioner Pete Rozelle opposes instant replays on the giant television screens which are highlights of the new football stadiums.

Rozelle had been quoted in Dallas Saturday as saying he was against instant playback in modern stadiums such as Arrowhead in Kansas City, except at halftime and after games.

Don Weiss of the NFL office however, stated the commissioner had said only that he was opposed to instant replay for use in officiating decisions because it would slow the pace of the game.

There was confusion in the offices of Louisiana Superdome executives after the Rozelle statement.

The $150 million dome, to be ready for the 1974 season, will have a $1.3 million, six-sided television screen complex.

The screen will be used, domed stadium officials said, but added they weren't sure just how much they can be used.

Team Canada Still Confident

STOCKHOLM (AP) — Team Canada apparently has shrugged off its disappointing performances against the Swedish national hockey team and now is prepared for its second chance at the Soviet Union squad.

The trip to Moscow Wednesday, however, may be made without winger Wayne Cashman, who was hospitalized here Tuesday.

Cashman suffered a cut tongue in a pile-up with Ulf Sterner of the Swedish team in Sunday's game.

"He can't eat, drink or talk," said Team Canada Coach Harry Sinden.

"Dr. Jim Murray ordered him into a hospital so they could feed him intravenously. His tongue was cut almost through when Sterner's stick went into his mouth. Dr. Murray says we should know tomorrow whether Cashman will be able to leave with us.

"We're confident he will be, but he'll be pretty weak after this, so it's unlikely he'll see action in the first game in Moscow on Friday," said Sinden.

Aside from the loss of Cashman, the Team Canada collection of National Hockey League stars appeared to be shaking off the disappointments they had encountered earlier.

After losing two, tying one and winning one against the Soviets in the four-game series in Canada, the Canadians won 4-1 against Sweden Saturday and tied 4-4 Sunday.

They leave Wednesday for games in Moscow Sept. 22, 24, 26 and 28, winding up with a final exhibition match against Czechoslovakia in Prague Sept. 30.

Sox In First; Others Choke

CLEVELAND AP - Steve Dunning's pitching in the first game and Graig Nettles' hitting in the second powered the Cleveland Indians to a 3-2, 6-4 doubleheader sweep over Detroit Tuesday night that knocked the Tigers out of first place in the American League East.

The double loss ended Detroit's five-game winning streak and dropped the Tigers into a tie with the Baltimore Orioles for second place, a half-game behind the first-place Boston Red Sox. Rain washed out a scheduled contest between Baltimore and Boston.

Dunning collaborated with Ed Farmer in the first game on a nine-hitter and slugged a bases-empty home run in the fifth inning. Dunning's home run, his third of the season, gave the Indians a 2-0 lead and they scored the eventual winning run on Chris Chambliss' RBI single in the same inning.

Dunning, with eighth inning relief help from Farmer, bested Detroit ace Mickey Lolich, 20-13.

In the nightcap Nettles' 17th homer with one aboard in the fourth inning gave Cleveland a 2-0 lead.

Ray Lamb, 5-5, was the second-game winner, with help from Farmer and Mike Kilkenny. Lamb took over for Bill Butler in the third after Butler walked two batters but prevented the Tigers from scoring.

The Indians erupted for four runs in the seventh inning against four Detroit pitchers, taking advantage of three walks and two singles, one a bases-loaded bunt by Frank Duffy.

The Tigers scored three runs in the eighth on Willie Horton's 11th home run of the year with two men on base and they added another on Al Kaline's ninth-inning single.

Double Losers

By BILL BALLOU

The first reaction to the news that Canada and Russia would play an "exhibition" World Series of Hockey was unrestrained joy on the part of Canadians and the "pseudo-Canadians" that rallied around Team Canada and called them "us" even though their legal addresses lie somewhere south of Windsor, Ontario.

Everyone knew that despite the inconveniences to Team Canada along the lines of scheduling and the lack of training time they'd send those Ruskies back to Minsk with a leason well-learned.

The four games in Canada are history and second-guessing the particulars of strategy and the like will do no good at this point. What's done is done. For their sake the Canadians had better learn as much from the Russians as the Russians did from them.

The results notwithstanding, the most disturbing aspect of the four games with Russia and to two more recent games with Sweden is not that the NHL lost, it is the way they played the game.

Critics of the Russians, and of international hockey in general, always made a big thing about how the tougher Canadians would make mincemeat out of the opposition. The Canadians have played it "tough" all right, but using the word "tough" in this case is like calling a rubbish man a "sanitary engineer". The correct word is "dirty".

But that's the way it is in the NHL. The two words too often are interchanged. New England idolizes a "scrapper" like John McKenzie, but ask the people in Chicago what they think of him and you'll get a different answer. It seems that one night Old Pie bit one of the Black Hawks.

You need look no further than videotapes of the NHL's only win in Montreal to see Wayne Cashman stalking some Russian, just waiting until he turned his back so he could lay a "tough" crosscheck over his shoulderblades.

What about the highest scoring player of all-time in the NHL, the great Gordie Howe. The great Gordie was probably the dirtiest player ever to don skates. He really got his kicks out of beating on rookies.

Playing it tough got the NHL one lousy win and one lousier tie in four games on their own ice. That is not the stuff mincemeat is made of.

And how about after the first game when the Russians came out on the ice to shake hands with the Canadians, as is international custom? Harry Sinden apologized after the game saying "he had no idea". Team Canada should have had some idea but the scouting wasn't too hot in any phase of the series.

It may be difficult to sit through another NHL regular season game after watching the Russians keep the game moving. To often in the NHL "the fastest game on earth" turns into a circus of offsides and tie-ups in the corners. There is nothing less exciting than watching the Los Angeles Kings try to protect a one-goal lead when they're on the road. It takes a half-hour to play five minutes of hockey.

Maybe the most disgusting, and most telling incident came against Sweden. It was bad enough the NHL could only tie the Swedes, who are no powerhouse, but the impression they left in Scandinavia can do nothing but hurt the overall image of Canadian professional hockey.

The Swedes said that the Canadians weren't a very good team. They said the Russians played a better style, than overall the Russians were a better club. Okay. It's one thing if you're not as good as someone. What the Swedes also said is that the NHL boys were the dirtiest hockey players they ever saw. They used the word "dirty" not tough.

I'm still an NHL, AHL etc. fan at heart. I'll still go to the games. But it won't be quite the same. No longer am I watching the best hockey in the world.

Bring on the European Professional Hockey League.

Senate Votes SUG Board Overhaul

By ROBERT L. SCHEIER

The undergraduate student senate voted last night (40-8) to abolish the current Student Union Governing (SUG) Board and adopt a new operating plan for the board.

Under the plan, which must still be approved by the Graduate Senate and ruled on by the chancellor, seven undergraduates will be elected to the board instead of appointed by the Senate.

In addition, the new plan provides for referendum and recall provisions for all members of the board, and any action they take either Senate may also force

In addition, the new plan provides for referendum and recall provisions for all members of the board, and any action they take force reconsideration of an action.

Supporters of the new operating plan--in effect a new constitution--claimed it would make the board accountable to students in the wake of aileged incompetence by the current SUG Board.

Members of the SUG Board claimed the move was a plan to increase the Senate's power and said they were drafting their own plan with much the same effect as the senate plan when it presented its proposal.

The move also takes power to amend the SUG Board (which would be called the Student Union-Campus Center Board of Governors) Constitution from the board and transfers it to the undergraduate and graduate senates.

At a meeting of the SUG Board Tuesday night, it presented its own plan of changes to its constitution, including referendum and recall provisions, but retaining the power to change its own constitution. It will consider them next week.

Following the senate vote, SUG Board chairman Barry Cohen said he did not know if he would present the case to the student body in a referendum.

Senator Neil Kirstein claimed Cohen "has alienated everyone I have talked to who works in the Campus Center", and said he had seen numerous vetoes of SUG board actions and memorandums from the administration criticizing the board for its "immature actions".

When asked for an example of SUG board mismanagement, Senator Nick Apostola claimed Cohen had harassed summer counselors.

In debate on the motion, Senator Bruce Bernstein said he had received many complaints about the board, but said the board should be given another week to develop its alternate proposals.

Senator Patty Asack, a member of the Senate's executive committee and one of the authors of the proposal, said the plan "has been around for a long time, and members of the SUG Board have even asked me about it."

Senator Nick Apostola, in an emotional speech, said employees of the complex had asked him to do something about the campus center, "but my hands are tied. All our hands are tied."

"It's time to resolve this for once and for all," he added.

Guy Ross, a member of the Board, defended the Board's performance and the appointment of members over the last two years, instead of their elections.

"Two years ago, no one on campus knew the SUG Board existed," he said, "and that's why elections didn't work. Students now know about SUG Board, but we alienated ourselves trying to build a power base for students."

The SUG Board is charged with assuring the student union-campus center complex is responsive to the needs of students, and must review and approve the complex operating budget.

Under state law, the Chancellor and Board of Trustees may nullify any action the Board takes.

In last night's meeting, the Senate passed several minor amendments to the act, including a provision requiring the Senates to either approve or disapprove of SUG board action within two weeks of its passage.

In other action, the Senate voted to unfreeze the budget of the Afro-American Society, which had been frozen due to a deficit. It also appropriated $650 for Ahora, an association for Spanish-American students.

Finally the senate approved the transfer of $4,000 to the account of Student Senate attorney Richard Howland, for the hiring of "para-legal services."

Ticket Scalping Becoming Big Problem

By MARK VOGLER

For a small group of buck hunting university students, "ticket scalping" has become an effective means of acquiring a personal income.

But for the UMass Athletic Association, the illegal pedaling of student tickets has become an increasing problem in recent years.

The success of the student ticket venders should get its initial test of the academic year when the UMass football squad opens its season Saturday afternoon at Alumnae Stadium.

Ticket office sources said earlier this week that "scalping" is definitely prohibited. Students were cautioned to be remindful of the consequences that may be involved for the engaging party.

The sources said that students in the past have had their ID numbers recorded, their tickets for the respective game confiscated, and were subjected to judiciary action. In some instances, the guilty person was made liable to penalties depending upon the seriousness of the circumstance.

Police will be on the lookout for "scalping" during Saturday's game, having already been instructed to discourage it. If necessary they will apprehend the offenders.

William F. Field, Dean of Students, in an interview, urged students to cooperate by conforming to the Athletic Department's policy.

"Purchasing student tickets off the bearers is wrong," Dean Field stated. "If you really have wide-scale scalping, whatever amount of money that is derived from the sale of those tickets, is in effect, denied the Athletic program. It's just like shoplifting at the campus center--you're not hurting the university. What you're doing is raising the student fees.

"Those who buy tickets from students are actually putting the money in one student's pocket instead of all".

The Dean said that although "scalping" has not been a terrible problem, it has become somewhat more serious in recent years. He pinpointed the cost of living and a tighter budget at the university as reasons for the Athletic Department to make more demands of ticket sales as a primary source of revenue.

Dean Field stated that he didn't know the extent of the penalties involved for "scalpers" or what measures the police would take.

"I don't think assessing a penalty is the upmost thing in your mind," commented the Dean. "What I generally try to do is make the student understand that it is wrong and warn him not to do it again. What you want to do is just make them comply to the standards."

"As far as what actions the Athletic Department and police will take in future violations, I really can't predict. It depends upon the circumstances I guess. I only hope that the students will cooperate in this manner by conforming to the policy."

Grad Senate Defers Most Items

By KEVIN DOWNEY

Discussions of the final business of last semester dominated the first meeting of this semester of the Graduate Student Senate. The meeting was held last night.

The Senate deferred any major business until October 2, in order that elections may be held for several vacant Senate representative positions from both departments and living areas. Presently McNamara and McKimmie houses, in addition to a few departments, have no representation at all on the Grad Senate.

Action on the Student Union Governing Board constitutional proposal recently initiated by the Undergraduate Student Senate will be taken up at the Graduate Student Senate's next meeting. When questioned concerning the fate of the SUG proposal, Veda Ross, this year's Grad Senate President, cautiously predicted the Senate would approve the measure.

Ms. Ross described the major function of this year's Graduate Senate will be to try to inform graduate students as to their rights, particularly within their departments.

The Senate, she declared, will make a concerted effort to establish greater communication between graduate students and the many committees on campus, especially within the academic departments, upon which graduate students have representation. In this way, the Senate believes, graduate students will be more likely to act to force the more conservative departments on campus to grant a greater voice to the graduate students.

The Great Auto Rob

NEW YORK (AP)-It's easy to be taken for a ride when trying to get your car fixed, a Senate investigator says. But, he adds, there are dozens of ways to avoid the trip.

They range from giving your favorite mechanic a Christmas gift to picketing the repair shop which you think may have cheated you.

Donald A. Randall, counsel to the Senate subcommittee on antitrust and monopoly, is co-author of a new book which outlines how-to instructions on car repair.

The instructions include questions a motorist should ask when he brings his car in, ways to check that the car has been fixed correctly and ways to complain when it hasn't.

"The Great American Auto Repair Robbery" was written after a four-year subcommittee investigation of the auto repair industry, directed and organized by Randall. His co-author is Arthur P. Glickman, former reporter for the Wall Street Journal.

"If you haven't been gypped by an auto repair shop, it's probably because you've never driven a car," the authors say.

During the Senate investigation, Sen. Philip Hart, D-Mich., estimated that the American public was being cheated out of $8-$10 billion a year on car repairs.

"The auto repair industry is just slightly more advanced than it was in the Model-A era," Randall said in an interview.

The authors say many car repair problems can be blamed on the auto manufacturers, through their failure to train and enlist competent mechanics, warranties that often prove worthless and production of cars which can be damaged easily but are not so easily prepared.

Other problems, they say, stem from the pressure which insurance companies put on repair shops to fix cars as cheaply as possible, often resulting in slipshod work.

With all these pitfalls, how can you insure that your car will be repaired efficiently and correctly.

The best way, the authors say, is to find a mechanic whom you can trust-not an easy task because of a critical shortage of good mechanics and the virtual lack of training for those entering the trade.

"Ask every mechanic you deal with about his background and try to judge as best you can the quality of his work," they say. "Once you find a good mechanic, stick with him."

If you feel you have been gypped and you don't get satisfaction from your repair shop, complain loudly and persistently to auto company executives, the appropriate federal and state government agencies, newspaper "action lines" and the Better Business Bureau, the authors say. If nothing else works, think about hiring a lawyer and going to court.

U.S. Tax Hike Seen

WASHINGTON (AP) - Disagreeing with the President, a senior Republican congressman says "we're going to have to have a tax increase" in the next four years.

Rep. John W. Byrnes of Wisconsin, ranking Republican on the House Ways and Means Committee, said Tuesday he is "not criticizing" President Nixon for promising that he would not propose a tax increase if reelected.

But Byrnes said "the public demand for services is such" that "there's no question" a tax hike will be needed in the next four years.

Gourdet: Politics Secondary to University

Dr. Alfred Gourdet, candidate for the Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs position, spoke last night to students and administrators in Van Meter on his thoughts for the University. (MDC Photo by Steve Smith)

By STEPHEN FISHER

Dr. Alfred Gourdet, one of the two candidates for the post of Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs, said in an interview last night, "I don't think about politics; they are secondary to the University's main objectives." According to him, the job of the Vice-Chancellor is to be responsible for meeting the intellectual and physical needs of the student at all levels using the available resources and personnel.

Speaking before an audience of about 35 students, heads of residence, and administrators at Van Meter House, Dr. Gourdet addressed himself to the topics of University resources, student participation in administrative affairs, residence halls, core requirements, and the need for educational reform.

Dr. Robert Gage, the other candidate, who is presently the Acting Vice Chancellor, was scheduled to arrive at the session too late to meet Collegian deadlines.

Gourdet claimed that the University needs to re-evaluate its resources in order to become a more effective learning environment. He also asserted that sufficient personnel exists, but that it needs to be stimulated in order to create change. "I have no affinity for status quo" he said, suggesting that the University must be perpetually changing in order to accomplish its purpose.

When asked about the role of student participation in administration, Gourdet claimed that students must take part in decision making processes in order to facilitiate their human and academic growth. He believes that the "student unrest" of past years demonstrated the students' desire for participation. He also said that, although residential affairs is presently the area in which most student participation occurs, students should take part in shaping academic policies as well.

Dr. Gourdet explained that he did not want to make a distinction between the students and the administration, and that real progress could be achieved only through a concerted effort from both groups. He said that he would try to cut through the existing bureaucracy and make time available to deal with students personally.

On the subject of residence halls, Gourdet said that the dormitory should contribute 60% of the students' academic growth because he or she spends about 60% of his or her time there. He suggested that people should not be required to live in residence halls, but that they be made so "glamorous and exciting" that students would want to live therein.

When questioned about core requirements, Dr. Gourdet responded that it is ridiculous for the student to waste time with subjects not concerned with his or her major, provided that the student is absolutely certain of his or her major interest.

He also claimed that the present educational system wastes time and is in need of revision. "If a person passes his courses and pays his dues, he can come out of the University with a degree and not know a damn thing" he stated. The University should put out sensitive people, not those who are interested in making a bundle of money or obtaining a husband. It should give a person some understanding about how he will deal with people different from himself. Gourdet also said that the University is an integral part of the community and that its resources should be made available to the community at large.

Gourdet bordered on controversy when he claimed that there was a need for more women in administrative positions at the University, but stated that he would not work with a male secretary. He also talked about institutional racism, but could not comment specifically on the situation at UMass because of his lack of experience here.

Dr. Gourdet is 39 years old and originally comes from Haiti. He has been an education expert with the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, and an administrator at several universities, including Cornell and Clark University.

BromeryAsksSUGReforms

By JAMES GOLD

The Campus Center-Student Union Governing Board needs to redefine its policy making role and its relations with students, the Student Government Association, and the operations of the Complex, according to Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery.

Speaking in a Collegian interview, Bromery also questioned the workings of SUG Board's constitution, its search committee policies, and spoke on the senate reapportionment plan.

Bromery criticized the concept of SUG Boards supervisory role over the middle management and workers in the campus center. "Management relations can't have a group in a supervisory position; there's too many bosses," he stated.

Bromery stated that the SUG Board Constitution developed last year was supposed to be implimented and then "we'd work out the bugs. There's been change and more is needed," he said.

While endorsing the concept of the SUG Board search committees to fill vacant positions, Bromery criticized the slowness with which they often operate. The search committee for a food service "does not need 25 or 30 people," he added. He suggested the use of a screening panel for selection of middle management positions.

Bromery expressed "ambivalence" about the Senate reapportionment issue. "With quotas, minimum amounts, or allocations," he said, "it becomes an upper limit." He praised the move as having "enough dynamics that people will think about it."

He also said the senate should decide "how representative representation should be."

These statements reflected Bromery's reactions to the recent Senate action specifying 15 members who are to be chosen by the Third World.

Attack Bolsters N.Viets

SAIGON (AP) — North Vietnamese forces tightened their hold Wednesday in Quang Ngai Province in an apparent attempt to counter South Vietnamese victories on the Quang Tri front.

Attacking just before dusk, enemy infantry and sappers broke into a government ranger compound on the northern edges of Ba To district town and fierce fighting was reported continuing after nightfall.

One field informant said the 400 South Vietnamese defenders were still holding part of the compound with the aid of air strikes, but they were outnumbered by more than a battalion of North Vietnamese.

The enemy forces already have captured Ba To and now threaten two more district towns in southern Quang Ngai Province, both on coastal Highway 1.

Mo Duc is surrounded by up to 1,000 North Vietnamese regulars and main force Viet Cong. Informants said about 200 enemy troops have infiltrated the town since Sunday, despite the efforts of more than 1,500 government defenders.

South Vietnamese troops trying to recapture high ground west of the town, known as Dragon Hill, have made little headway.

Duc Pho, another district town 10 miles south of Mo Duc, is cut off and under siege.

The stepped-up action in Quang Ngai coincided with a South Vietnamese victory celebration in Quang Tri City, 150 miles to the north. President Nguyen Van Thieu drove into the ruined province capital and kissed the South Vietnamese marine battalion commander whose troops participated in its recapture last Saturday.

Enemy shellfire prevented the president from entering the Quang Tri Citadel. The shellfire also blew up a South Vietnamese ammunition dump within sight of Thieu's car as he was driving southward on a highway to visit other marine positions. He canceled two proposed stops because of the artillery barrage and was picked up by a U.S. helicopter.

Later, at marine headquarters in Huong Dien, Thieu indicated to newsmen that the South Vietnamese might rest up before pushing on with their counter-offensive north of Quang Tri City.

The 5-1/2 month bombing campaign over North Vietnam claimed its 100th American plane with the reported loss of a U.S. Navy jet to anti-aircraft fire Tuesday. The U.S. Command said the pilot was rescued after bailing out in the Gulf of Tonkin.

So far, the command lists 106 airmen missing or killed in North Vietnam since the start of the offensive March 30. Roughly a third of this number are believed to have been captured.

Sudan Says Libya Helping Uganda

(AP) Sudan revealed evidence Wednesday night that Col. Muammar Kadafi of Libya is trying to fly troops and arms to Uganda to help President Idi Amin in his conflict with the neighboring East African country of Tanzania.

The Sudanese Foreign Minister said it refused permission for five Libyan aircraft with 400 soldiers aboard to fly over Sudanese territory. It said the planes landed at Khartoum and would be sent back to Libya.

Amin declared in Kampala, the Ugandan capital, that he was ready to order pre-emptive strikes into Tanzania to head off what he called a threatened invasion.

Israelis Targets of Mail Bombs

"Bulletin"

NEW YORK (AP) - Police bomb experts today removed from the General Post Office three "devices" contained in envelopes mailed from the Netherlands to three officials of Israel's mission to the United Nations, authorities reported.

The devices, contained in letter-size envelopes, were not described and the demolition men took them to an isolated area for examination.

In Europe, some envelope bombs addressed to Israelis were uncovered today and disarmed. Police there plotted to foil a mass murder scheme against Israeli diplomats and officials.

An Israeli official was killed in London Tuesday after opening a mailed package which blew up.

(AP) - A murder-by-mail plot against Israelis spread to the United States and Canada and across Europe to Israel itself Wednesday.

All of the letters containing compact plastic explosives were intercepted without harm to their Israeli addresses.

Three of the letters mailed to Israeli envoys at the United Nations were removed from the post office in New York City by a police bomb squad. A bomb was taken by Canadian police from the Israeli consulate in Montreal and detonated in a park.

Other mailed devices were uncovered in Paris, Geneva, Brussels, Vienna and Tel Aviv.

Like the one that killed an Israeli diplomat in London on Tuesday, they were mailed from Amsterdam in the Netherlands. Police there launched an investigation in an effort to track down the senders.

Police elsewhere said some letters that had been intercepted and disarmed contained leaflets of the Black September group of Palestinian guerrillas who were held responsible for the killing of 11 Israeli athletes at the Munich Olympics on Sept. 5.

Israelis reacted angrily to the latest plot, which comes on the heels of the weekend raid by the Israeli army into south Lebanon to knock out Palestinian guerrillas.

Israel's deputy premier said in Jerusalem that no Arab country would be immune if Israel decided on reprisals to stamp out guerrillas.

Yigal Allon, a former general, proclaimed a "systematic" new phase in the antiguerrilla war and said no Arab country "will enjoy immunity as far as our counter terrorist actions are concerned."

One Israeli military commentator, writing in the Jerusalem Post, noted the vulnerability of the Arab oil fields.

Zeev Schul said that sabotaging the oil fields would ignite loud protests from Western oil interests, but he added: "The oil lobby has never been friendly to Israeli interests of security."

The Dutch officials said eight of the bombs were mailed to London, two to Tel Aviv, two to Geneva, two to Paris and one to Brussels.

ARRAIGNED--Principles among the seven indicted in the bugging of Democratic Watergate headquarters are shown today at U.S. District Court where they were arraigned. From left are G. Gordon Liddy and E. Howard Hunt, Jr., both former White House consultants, each released on $10,000 bond, and James W. Stans Okayed

WASHINGTON (AP) - U.S. District Judge Charles R. Richey today permitted the Democrats to name Maurice H. Stans, chief political fund-raiser for President Nixon, as a defendant in the Democrats' $3-million civil damage suit.

The suit was filed as an aftermath to the June 17 break-in at Democratic national headquarters in the Watergate Hotel.

Richey's order, permitting the Democrats to press the suit, dismissed the five men arrested in the party's headquarters and McCord Associates Inc. as defendants in the case.

But the judge accepted an amended complaint filed by the Democrats adding defendants not previously named, including Stans, the Finance Committee to Re-Elect the President; Hugh W. Sloan Jr., former treasurer of the Committee for the Re-Election of the President; and former White House consultants G. Gordon Liddy and E. Howard Hunt Jr.

Republicans had sought to have the damage suit dismissed.

In the suit former Democratic National Chairman Lawrence F. O'Brien accused Stans of financing the break-in and the bugging of the Democratic headquarters. Stans has denied the accusations.

Liddy and Hunt were indicted by a federal grand jury along with the five men arrested in the headquarters on criminal charges stemming from the break-in and bugging.

The five defendants who were dismissed from the civil action were Bernard L. Barker, Virgilio R. Gonzalez, Frank R. Sturgis, James W. McCord, and Eugenio R. Martinez.

The damage suit brought by O'Brien is one of three separate suits now pending before Richey. Stans has filed a $5 million countersuit against O'Brien and a $5 million libel suit against the former chairman of the Democratic National Party.

Post Sources Claim Records Were Destroyed

WASHINGTON (AP)-Numerous records were destroyed at offices of the Committee for Re-Election of the President following the June 17 break-in at Democratic offices, according to sources quoted today in the Washington Post.

Two top campaign officials Robert C. Mardian and Frederick LaRue, directed a massive "housecleaning" including the destruction of records pertinent to the case, the newspaper quoted sources as saying.

Maridian was an assistant attorney general before joining President Nixon's campaign committee as political coordinator. LaRue was a White House counsel to the President until he became special assistant to the director of the campaign committee.

A campaign committee spokesman described the Post's sources as "a fountain of misinformation" and would not comment further on the report, the newspaper said.

The post said its sources reported that former campaign chairman John N. Mitchell instructed Mardian and La Rue to take charge of developing the committee's response to the bugging incident. In addition to the destruction of records, the Post said, the two also prompted staff meetings at which campaign committee employes were told emphatically not to talk about the incident with newsmen.

The Post said the destroyed records included:

—Memos describing wire tapped conversations of Democratic party officials at the Watergate.

—A list showing that three Nixon campaign officials withdrew some $300,000 from a special fund designated for intelligence gathering on the Democrats. The Post identified the three-all former White House aides-as G. Gordon Liddy, Herbert L. Porter, scheduling director for the campaign, and Jet Stuart Magruder, campaign deputy director.

—As many as seven ledger books listing those who contributed to the Nixon campaign prior to April 7 when a new law took effect requiring disclosure of the names of contributors and the amount they give. The Nixon campaign has refused to disclose those who helped amass a $10 million kitty prior to that date.

"Mardian and LaRue went looking around for information that might be incriminating," the Post quoted one source as saying.

All seven men indicted in connection with the break-in Democratic headquarters were freed Tuesday on $10,000 bond pending their trial which could begin before election day.

U.S. Dist. Court Judge John Sirica ordered pre-trial briefs filed within 15 days.

McGovern Gains Muskie

NORTH BERGEN, N.J. (AP) - George McGovern picked up former rival Edmund S. Muskie as a campaign helper Wednesday and called for programs to make sure Americans are financially secure in their old age.

And in an encouter, apparently set up by forces of President Nixon's re-election campaign, McGovern debated a blue-collar worker in Columbus, Ohio, over the best way to get out of Vietnam.

Muskie, who lost the Democratic presidential nomination to McGovern, joined the McGovern campaign entourage at midday.

Picking up where Sen. Edward M. Kennedy left off last week, Muskie delivered glowing introductions of McGovern at public

At a beer-and-knockwurst luncheon at a senior citizens center here Muskie said President Nixon is seeking to take credit for a new 20 per cent hike in Social Security payments even though his administration had opposed a hike that large when it was in Congress.

"I tell you that it's time to put that man out to pasture," Muskie said, almost shouting, as the audience roared its approval.

During a walking tour of a Western Electric plant in Columbus, McGovern and an employe got into a lengthy exchange over whether McGovern or Nixon would be more successful at winning the return of U.S. prisoners of war from North Vietnam.

Nixon supporters had "advanced" the plant Wednesday morning before McGovern arrived, some employes reported to newsmen. There were several "Nixon Now" stickers in evidence and "President Nixon" buttons were pinned to the lapels of dozens of workers.

The worker said Nixon is trying to win release of American prisoners of war.

McGovern: "How? By bombing the hell out of people?"

Employe: "Right. He should have bombed a hell of a lot more out of them."

McGovern: "Well, listen. Do you think that's going to get the prisoners out?"

Employe: "I do. That's right."

... Nixon wants "to show them we have power over here and are not just a flunky secone-rate country."

The man said he believes Nixon would complete the withdrawal after the election but he said it would be a "pullout" not "surrender."

McGovern: "What's the difference between a pullout and a surrender? You say it's a victory when Nixon pulls out, yet when I say get out in 90 days you say it's surrender. You're inconsistent."

McGovern spokesmen also confirmed Wednesday earlier reports that at this point they plan to cut short next week's campaign schedule and return to Washington Wednesday to prepare to do some filming for McGovern television spots.

Eliminated from McGovern's schedule next week, at least temporarily, are stops in San Diego, in Waco and San Antonio, Tex., Rock Island and Chicago, Ill., Milwaukee, Wis., and Toledo, Ohio.

Harris Says Nixon Should Be Worried

WASHINGTON (AP) - Pollster Louis Harris says President Nixon should be "a bit worried" about surveys that show him with a substantial lead over Democrat George McGovern because polls can create a sympathy vote for the underdog.

Harris, head of Louis Harris and Associates, a New York-based polling organization, and pollster Dr. George Gallup, testified Tuesday before a House subcommittee on a bill to require all pollsters to file detailed information on their surveys with the Library of Congress.

"If I were President Nixon today," Harris said, "I'd be a bit worried that people would look at these polls and say, 'I may be for him, but I don't think he should win by that margin.'"

The New York Times reported that in interviews after their committee appearances, both Gallup and Harris expressed surprise at the number of reported defectors from the Democratic party.

The Times quoted Gallup as saying, however, that he would find it "amazing if Mr. McGovern doesn't start improving his position. There's always a return to the fold of lmyal Democrats in the final weeks or days as there was in 1948, much to our consternation."

He referred to pollsters' incorrect predictions that Thomas Dewey would defeat Harry Truman for president.

Harris testified against the proposed poll legislation.

Campaign '72

Droney Will Attack Brooke's Senate Record

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) - John J. Droney was relaxed, laughing with his wife, daughter and small grand-daughter and looking more like a man who had returned from vacation than one who had just won a tough primary fight for the Democratic nomination for the U.S. Senate.

In an interview Wednesday with The Associated Press, the Middlesex County District Attorney outlined how he intended to go on from his win Tuesday over Boston City Councilor Gerald O'Leary and John Pierce Lynch of Springfield to a victory in November over incumbent GOP Sen. Edward W. Brooke.

"I believe my position is that which most people support," Droney said. He said he intends to emphasize his activist background as district attorney since 1959 and attack what he calls Brooke's do-nothing record in the Senate.

Droney, 61, said the main issues in the senatorial campaign will be anger at unemployment and fear of crime in the streets.

"The most important issue in the state is unemployment. I think we have to guarantee work for those people who want to work," he said. "The federal government has to provide work for anyone who wishes to work."

Saying that Brooke has done little to help the unemployed, Droney said he was equally concerned about those with few skills and about engineers and professional men who were laid off by scientific firms along Route 128.

"While I was campaigning for the primary, I talked to many young people. They want to work. I also talked to engineers who are very bitter because they are being told, in effect, that they can only work when we have war.

"We can't waste that talent. We have to provide jobs and peace."

Droney attacked President Nixon's administration and Brooke for "allowing fear to grow because of crime in the streets. They really haven't done anything about this."

He denied that he was a conservative on law and order. "Labels don't mean much any more. I believe in protecting citizens but since I've been in office I've always acted on the principle of 'Justice for All'."

Droney said he believes in harsh penalties for those who sell narcotics, including the death penalty for heroin sellers.

"Recently, as part of my job, I looked at 14 autopsy reports. Seven of the deaths were caused by drugs. None of those who died because of drugs was from a poor family. All seven had middle or upper class backgrounds and all had good records in school."

He opposes legalization of any drugs, but added that he believes in being gentle with first offenders caught with marijuana.

Three Incumbents Win Crucial Primary Tests

(AP) - Three incumbent Democratic congressmen savored primary victories Wednesday while in the State of Washington the stage was set for a November rematch between Republican Gov. Dan Evans and the Democrat he ousted from office eight years ago.

Rep. John J. Rooney, of Brooklyn, N.Y., Rep. Louise Day Hicks of Boston, and Rep. Julia Hansen Butler of Washington State all blocked challenges to their congressional seats, with Mrs. Hicks and Mrs. Butler winning tidily.

Rooney, fighting for his political life in a court-ordered special primary, edged former Rep. Allard Lowenstein, whose successful lawsuit on charges of voting irregularities in a June primary brought about the new election. Lowenstein had lost the June race by 890 votes.

Groovin' To 'Baby Bumblebee'

By CAROLYN CALDWELL

Enter Bowditch House and you will find a bright, cherry, homey place full of activity. At one moment, children are gathered in a corner of the room grooving to "Baby Bumblebee" and at the next they are dispersed-weighing rocks, looking at goldfish, reaching for books and puzzles or making pinwheels.

This is the University Day School directed by Mrs. Betsy Pelz. It is operated by a professional staff of six in conjunction with student teachers from the Department of Human Development.

Mrs. Pelz, describing the goals of the school, said, "We try to reach the whole child...the physical child, the intellectual child, the spiritual, social, private and inner emotional child. Each child has a part in him. A good sense of self is emphasized."

The purpose of the "very structured" program, she explained, "is to stimulate special talents and special needs. The child is primarily his own agent." He does things that capture his interest. The school tends to emphasize education rather than day care. To do this, teachers set up activities for the children, such as finger paints, dancing, carpentry and a scale for weighing rocks.

The Day School program coincides with the University's fall semester. Morning and afternoon sessions are daily from 8 to 12 and 1 to 5. At each session are 45 children with a teacher-child ratio of 1 to 5. There is a waiting list for fall and spring of this year but applications are open for the fall of '73.

The school operates within the University on a budget of $50,000. Parents pay $100 per session, which is about half the fee of most other day schools. The age group is 2 years 9 months to 5 years.

"The school has a commitment to parent involvement," Mrs. Pelz said. "During January, a parent cooperative will be formed while UMass students are away. In the planning stages also is a parent board to handle such problems as lunches, car pools and fees."

At the beginning of this second year in open action, Mrs. Pelz smiled, "I feel very pleased with the progress." How have things changed? "Incredibly. By mere force. The staff who worked here put heart and soul in everything they did. The school changed, it evolved month by month. Over the year we've evolved a place to be proud of."

"The Student Senate made much of the progress possible," she said. As an example, Mrs. Pelz noted it gave needed support in the middle of last year.

Mrs. Pelz sums it up this way: "This is the beginning, not the end. The idea is still evolving and there is room for change and growth."

WTOY Begins Third Year

By ROBERTA MARTONE

The smallest, and least well known of, the media representatives on campus is campus TV station WTOY. The station is located on the second floor of the Student Union, and is currently going into its third year of operation.

The TV station's main purpose, according to station president, Ronald Massicotte, is to cover various activities happening on campus, especially those that might remain unseen. For example, Massicotte, said that they already have tapes of last year's strike.

When asked what they were planning to cover this year, he said certain theater productions, concerts, and even some student talk shows or debates were on the agenda. Massicotte said they are also open to any creative endeavors on the part of the students.

This semester, WTOY received a budget of 16,000 dollars from the Student Senate. The money will be primarily used for the purchase of new equipment.

During the past three years Massicott said that WTOY used the equipment of an organization called Free University, no longer on campus. This is the first semester that the station will be basically independent.

The equipment is of a video nature such that any subject being filmed is recorded on a type of tape cassette which enables it to be attached to any local TV set for viewing.

Massicotte said he hopes to attract more people willing to supply their services now that WTOY has a substantial office and some equipment of their own to work with.

People interested in this activity are urged to get in touch with either Massicotte or Jim Sheehan, treasurer of WTOY. They are usually in the WTOY office during the afternoon. Office hours will be posted shortly.

Shell Food Sale Banned

CONCORD, N.H. (AP)-The sale of unfrozen hard and soft shell clams in restaurant refrigerators was ordered destroyed today because of danger of contamination by the Red Tide algae.

Dr. Hugh Wilkerson, acting director of the state Public Health Division, said the ban extends to sale and consumption of clams, clamp strips and mussels.

State Sanitarian William Oakman said the directive to destroy restaurant stocks does not extend to frozen clams. He emphasized the order refers to fresh clams, primarily those shucked and packed in cans for sale to restaurants.

Frozen clams, he said, should not be sold or served but can be retained until their safety is determined.

Racism Is Racism

Racism, more than any other human attitude, is blatantly primitive and irrational. Any notion which ascribes intellectual, moral, political or social significance to an individual's skin pigment or ethnic ancestry is, by necessity, a racist notion. Racism is totally incompatible with any society which sanctions individualism and liberty; racism holds that individuals are not to be considered for their merits, actions, achievements, attitudes, convictions, capabilities or any standard of character; they are to be judged solely as components of one big (or small) racial or ethnic "herd".

In order to work toward a freer society, it is necessary to fight against racial discrimination. This means fighting against ALL forms of racism; the idea that some forms of discrimination are acceptable is so contradictory that it shouldn't warrant any debate. But alas, debate is necessary, since many people indeed find it convenient to fall back on the primitive mentality which holds that race or ethnicity have some political, intellectual, or moral significance. Unfortunately, these primitive minds are not confined to the ranks of the KKK or the White Citizen's Councils; many of them occupy positions of power in the Student Senate. I am referring to those individuals who propagated the idea that it was somehow morally proper to reapportion the Student Senate along racial lines, and that this was the way to end what they called "institutionalized racism" at the University. Their victory in the senate last week was a victory for what George Orwell once called "NewSpeak". Racism is Non-Racism. War is Peace. Freedom is Slavery.

The creation of "Third World" seats and racial constituencies cannot be logically argued to be a victory against racism. It is, plain and simple, the institutionalization of racist procedures in the election of student senators. It is a policy entirely without merit, and should be considered an insult to everybody's intelligence.

It is my personal opinion that the reason why black students have never been enthusiastic about the Student Senate is not due to any "institutionalized racism" in the previous procedures, but due to the generally worthless nature of the Senate. Were I from a highly disadvantaged background, I would consider my time too precious to waste in such a highly ridiculous "governing" body. Unfortunately, I am not from a disadvantaged background, and my time was wasted for an entire year on Wednesday nights. Only when the senate chose to adopt racist policies did I see the light and call it quits.

But one need not be associated with the SS to stand up against racism. The decision of the Senate to appropriate racial divisions in the Senate will be challenged in the courts. I am confident that the judiciary will see that this racism is incompatible with the Senate and U.S. Constitutions and that it is also a morally repugnant policy. I urge all those who oppose this type of racism to voice their opposition. Write your Student Senator, Senate President Ladd, the Dean of Students, the Chancellor, or UMass Trustees. Don't be fooled. Racism is racism.

Island Of Serenity

Between the back of the Student Union and the south side of the Campus Center is one of the ugliest pieces of land this side of the Okeefenokee Swamp.

What plans, if any, the Physical Plant has for this piece of land are unknown to us, but may we make a suggestion.

It is a large piece of land, large enough for a building. It does not need a building. It is also large enough for a park. This University needs a park.

A few paved paths should be laid down across it, but just a few. In between the paths could be planted trees, flowers, and bushes. The trees should be both broad leaved and flowering, perhaps some fruit trees. Grass, real grass, should be planted for students to sit and lie on.

Perhaps some benches could be put in. Also, some stone chess boards for students to use in good weather. Our own Central Park if you will. (This place is getting to look like New York).

It would not cost too much money, and would make the campus look a little less like a concrete and brick factory.

While it may be too far into the fall for action to be taken now, there will be spring, and a winter between for planting.

Give A Little

By BRIAN ALLARD

There is a pond in Northampton. I don't know the name of it, and it isn't important anyway; it's only a small pond that you can go rowing on in a rented boat. From the middle of it you can see the sculpted and wild gardens of Smith College, and try to find schools of little fish like the ones you can find in the pond on our own campus. You can see on the other side, as you row toward it, a forested and bushy ground rolling upward toward a hill which holds an old and sagging castle that was old when some of the trees on the grounds were being planted. You will remember the view from the top of the hill if you've seen it; you can see the whole campus of Smith and a lot of Northampton, too. You remember it especially when you think that several hundreds of people see it every day, and that a lot of them have become tired of it after seeing it every day for longer than most of us can remember.

Students from Smith College know this view well, and so do a lot from Mt. Holyoke, the Elms, Hampshire, and the University. You're seeing the city from the grounds of the Northampton State Hospital.

Northampton State Hospital is typical of many state institutions for the mentally ill. It's old, and it's overcrowded. The age and size of the building make it in need of constant repair, and constant repair is difficult when the money it calls for usually isn't around. It's badly overcrowded, even though it's a collosal structure. The physical plant and the architecture make it difficult to supervise residents, and restrict proper recreation, free movement, and interaction of residents. The staff is small, overworked, and good; they are very receptive to outside assistance from area individuals.

The mentally ill are badly misunderstood. They're violent, they're alone, and they prowl in dark corridors at night, foaming at the mouth with their wild hair and murderous eyes. Like all those ugly folk myths, myths about the institutionally ill die slowly and they also have a bit of truth in them. These people are alone--only they're more alone than most--and they do walk in drab corridors at night, and during the daytime, too, because there really isn't much else left to do.

It's hard to remember sometimes that those of us who are called mentally ill are people as fully as those of us who are not. They get up in the morning and go to bed at night. They laugh, and they live, and they love; they get angry, and they cry, and they get depressed. They get depressed a lot.

The Northampton Volunteers spend three hours a week in this hospital, with a little friendship to give to the people who live there and a little to take home in return. If you would like some information on the group, call Mel Cohen or myself. If you would like to join--and there are no restrictions on joining, no screening of applicants and no drawn-out orientation programs--busses will be waiting in front of Hasbrouck Lab and Patterson House, in Southwest, at 6:30 on Thursday evening, the 28th, the sign-up night for new volunteers. They'll be taking us back here by 9:30. Old-timers, be there this Thursday.

UMass Sophs Advise Frosh

By 111 SOPHOMORES and ROB SPRAGUE

We are writing this article in the hope that it will be helpful to this year's Freshman class. We are a group of Sophomores, over 100 in number, who responded to a telephone survey conducted by the University Counseling Center. The survey was conducted to help determine how we Sophomores were getting along here at UMass, but after seeing the results, the people at the Counseling Center decided to share our experiences with Freshmen.

As Sophomores, we understand that no college can meet the expectations that Freshmen initially bring to it. Yet, after being here at the University for over a year, most all of us have some complaints, but we realize that the University is changing and that most of those changes were made to help us - and you - get a better education.

Why did we come to UMass? Well, lots of us came here for the same reason that lots of you came here: Money. It just doesn't cost as much to attend the hallowed halls of the University of Massachusetts as it does to attend the hallowed halls of colleges with names like Bates, Amherst or Mount Holyoke. Of course, some of us were aware that UMass is a pretty good school no matter how much it costs, that it has its share of exciting programs, and that it's located in a pleasant part of the state. Many of us came here, at least in part, because we already had friends attending UMass.

Almost all of us looked forward to returning to UMass this fall to begin our Sophomore year. We had made scores of friendships during our first two semesters here and we had come to enjoy the new freedom that the college experience allowed. Some of us, believe it or not, were really deeply involved in our academic programs and were looking forward to continuing them. Indeed, surprisingly few of us had been disillusioned about what the University had to offer us in our first year, and we knew that, as upperclassmen, things would probably get even better.

We mentioned earlier in this article that we all felt some disappointments. Some of us were unhappy about our personal academic accomplishments and we'll be trying to do better in our academic programs this year (we don't believe in the Sophomore Slump). A very few of us were concerned about the impersonal atmosphere here at UMass, the large classes as an example. A couple of us felt a little lonely part of the time. Some of us had varying degrees of problems with faculty members and members of the University administration, and we'd be lying if we didn't tell you that roommate problems cropped up more than once.

We promised earlier in this article to try to give the members of the new Freshman class some constructive advice. We feel qualified to offer advice because, as everyone knows, Sophomores are the best experts on the Freshman year. First, don't get discouraged, especially in the beginning part of the first semester. Chaos always reigns for a few weeks. So during September and October try to keep a perspective on the problems of being a first-semester Freshman (Everyone gets dropped out of courses and even Seniors get lost on this campus once in a while).

Second, try to use your time well, keep a balance between your new-found social life and your academic work. Don't cut classes (lots of us did and now many of us wish we had done better academically). And if you don't do great work during the first few weeks of the semester and your prospective grade point average isn't 4.0, don't panic. After all, it takes some time to learn the ropes around here.

Third, be yourself. Don't let others intimidate you. Most of you have already made some decisions about what kind of person you want to be, so why allow others to change you overnight.

Fourth, search out new opportunities, get interested in your surroundings; maybe you might want to join a group or club on campus. The University is only as impersonal as you make it. You have to go out there and meet the people.

Finally, get help when you need it. It doesn't matter what kind of problem you have, there is somebody, somewhere, who will be qualified to help you solve it. Talk to your floor counselor or Head of Residence and they will steer you in the right direction. Don't be afraid to ask your professors for help and don't be afraid to give those profs your opinion. Seek out upperclassmen, student services people and others who are available. They are there to help you make your college experience a more meaningful one.

We've probably made it sound like all 111 of us agreed about most things in this article. Well, that is probably somewhat misleading. But all of us do agree on one thing: We hope that your Freshman year is as meaningful to you as was ours. Welcome to UMass.

Letters To The Editor

The Most Burning Issue Of The Era

To The Editor:

In light of the current controversy surrounding the choice of a UMass name, I would like to offer another suggestion for thought. Consider the fact that UMass is the only one of the six New England state schools which does not take its nickname from an animal; the Black Bears, the Wildcats, the Catamounts, etc. Why should Massachusetts be the odd member of the group?

The question may arise as to the choice of an appropriate animal. A moment's consideration should make one possibility obvious. What animal has been symbolic of this state's heritage since its discovery? The turkey or wild turkey, of course. First, this is an animal which is closely identified with the state. Second, the Plymouth legend immediately brings to mind the important role the Indians played in the colony's survival casting them in a better light, what choice could be more obvious?

As a name, it would easily lend itself to football cheers and cheerleader skits. Indeed, it would be easy to imagine any number of cheers. Finally, it would certainly be a name which is not frequently used and perhaps is a bit unique.

Gary Burton

To The Editor:

In the Wednesday issue of the Collegian a report was made concerning a tentative concert with Gary Burton for the benefit of the Orchard Hill Music Series and the M.A.R.Y. Program (Westfield Detention Center) in Lewis and Webster Houses. There were some points in the article that we feel need some clarification.

First and foremost, is the Gary Burton concert. Mr. Burton has agreed to perform but as of yet, no official commitment has been made, thus the concert is not definite. The other and most important point concerning the Gary Burton concert is that it is not a project solely for Orchard Hill. It is being co-sponsored by the Northeast Area and without the support of both the Northeast and Orchard Hill communities this concert would not be possible.

Another point we would like to clarify is what the music series itself is striving for. The article says that the series is geared to "Third World and People's music". That statement seems to infer a difference between Third World and People's music. Rather, we of the Orchard Hill Music/Lecture Series consider African-American music to be perhaps the most important musical expression of the American people, music which shares with other Third World and white musical traditions that dream of freedom.

I would like to close with an invitation. Anyone who is at all interested in any aspects of bringing People's music to this campus is urged to contact us through the Orchard Hill Master's Office, 5-2882 or at one of our meetings, Mondays 8:30 p.m., sixth floor lounge, Dickinson House.

We would also like to remind you that all our plans are still only tentative but with the hope of bringing fine music to this community I remain ..

Little Latin Larry

To The Editor:

In case anyone cares, know that at least one person on this campus is very upset at the news that Little Latin Larry is breaking up. This Friday will be their last gig; I don't think that's right. Goddamit, I'm pissed.

Neil Sedaka

To The Editor:

Being thoroughly sick of reading articles and letters concerning the name 'Redmen', we have decided to resolve the problem once and for all. We suggest the name 'UMass Piltdownmen'. We feel sure that no one will feel stepped on because of their race, and, if this proves incorrect, we can always tell them that they are hoaxes and do not exist.

Two-Wheel Terror

To The Editor:

This morning as I passed the Student Union on my way to class, I watched a scene which is becoming all too familiar around the University. A fast moving bicyclist passed close to a pedestrian and found himself heading straight towards a young girl who he had not noticed. Terrified, she jumped quickly to one side and he luckily steered in the opposite direction.

Bicycles are a nice convenience on a large campus, and with new sales records being set, it appears that their numbers will be increasing here on campus. As they increase, though, so increases the danger to pedestrians. This is especially true after each class hour when the few main campus walks are very crowded. Bicyclists weaving through these crowds present a danger which should be ignored no longer.

Cities allow bicycles on sidewalks only when the rider is dismounted and he must do his riding on the street where he competes with the automobile. Although this danger to the bicyclist seems unfair, so does the danger to the pedestrian when he rides on the sidewalks.

Clearly it is time for the University to act for the safety of all. Bicycle paths should be set aside for use by bicycles only. Perhaps these should be along the periphery of campus near the roadways. Proper access ways to main buildings from these paths will be required and bicycle racks need to be moved away from pedestrian walks to locations near these paths to encourage their use.

The University administration has had much success in the past in averting problems before they get out of hand. Here's a good chance for some "preventive medicine"!

Warren T. Windle, Jr.

New Coaches

To The Editor:

A statement made in Tuesday's Collegian needs some clarifying, which I will try to do. On the sports page an article entitled "Circus" spoke of a cloud over the UMass Varsity Gymnastics Teams. The implication was that this was due to the loss of Kitty and Eric Kjeldsen. This is by no means altogether true. While it is a fact they are no longer with the teams they have been admirably replaced by Miss Virginia Evans and Mr. Mike Kasavana for the women's team and by Mr. Tom Dunn, a former Penn State gymnast, for the men's team.

Miss Evans and Mr. Kasavana took over the women's squad last year and have been an asset to the team. They have helped the women's team to gain national status.

Tom Dunn has replaced Mr. Kjeldsen for the upcoming year. There are some problems to be resolved but once the team is acquainted with Tom and vice-versa good things will happen.

As for both of the UMass Varsity teams they are alive and well in Boyden Auxiliary Gym. There is an open invitation to all to witness their achievements this year. The best is yet to come.

Editorial Points

If the primaries are any indication of things to come, we'll not only get Nixon-Agnew in '72, we'll probably end up with Archie Bunker - Curtis Lemay in '76. Sleep tight, America, your prejudices are secure.

Maybe in reparation for past injustices we should give UMass teams a name that a Native American can scoff at. How about the Little Big Horns?

One day the Tigers move into first place without lifting a bat, the next day the Red Sox do the same thing. Maybe the apathy of the fans is getting contagious. Gomer Hodge, where are you?

UMass construction triumph of the week: The walkway around the new library has concrete strips running through it that are extremely slippery when wet. One of the many fine examples of brilliant foresight in the construction of this university.

Northampton Volunteers

To The Editor:

It seems like so many worthwhile groups are vying for student attention. Northampton Volunteers is one of these groups.

The group consists of volunteers from the Five College Area who travel to the Northampton State Mental Hospital on Thursday nights. The people at Northampton are very lonely and look forward to visits from the outside world. These, unfortunately, are few for many of the patients. Northampton Volunteers helps to brighten their lives and make them happier by playing cards, games, talking, and offering friendship.

It seems to be so much easier to sit back and pretend these people do not exist, mainly as they do not come into contact with our day to day lives. However, we cannot ignore them. Why not make the extra effort and accomplish something worthwhile? Come and see how two short hours a week out of our lives can do so much for the people who need us.

Recruitment for volunteers new to the program will begin Thursday, September 28. Anyone interested is urged to come and experience. Times and places will appear Thursday of every week in the Collegian notices.

Third World Seats

To The Editor:

I am very surprised that the minority community is sitting back and letting the Student Senate pass the ruling on the 15 seats outright. I personally would feel it was patronizing to think a certain number of seats had to be set aside for me in order for me to be in the Senate.

I do not feel the Student Senate ruling is parallel to the intergration of public schools. The Student Senate, from the very beginning, was set up to have the student body represented through senators (no stipulations) elected from each dorm. These senators were entrusted with the job of representing everyone in that dorm. With the lack of interest in running for senator, as exhibited all over campus by people running unopposed or totally unknown to the dorm, you can't tell me that the third world, if they really wanted to couldn't get together and get their people into the Student Senate to represent themselves and their dorm.

I feel the Senate is setting a dangerous precedent by passing this ruling, no matter what the good ideal was behind it. The ruling is wrong!!!

Glare Of Dusk

The sun is setting; it's blinding to watch.

To see the red sun burn through the clouds.

It's torture. Turn away.

Feel the pleasant sensation of the sun

Burning your back. It's still there.

Soon you see it; the anguish. You run.

Your parched throat is burning dry dust.

You feel the weight pushing on you.

The big hard ugly rock.

Chip-like dry.

Soon exhaustion will hit your sweat soaked body.

No longer do you cry. But fall and weep.

Wish and pray. Pray and meditate.

You're lying on the lawn by the pool.

Sipping lemonade burdened with ice.

The sun feels good as it stays

High in the sky.

Auxiliary Fire Force Needs Volunteers

The Amherst Fire Department Auxiliary Force completed a year of service on September 1, 1972. During this year no major fires occurred on the University Campus, however the numerous minor calls provided an opportunity to develop good response procedures.

In 1971 in excess of 30% of the Amherst Fire Department's responses were to Campus locations. During the first eight months of 1972 the percentage of Campus calls has increased to something over 40%.

With buildings such as the new library tower, graduate research center and Tobin Hall soon to be occupied, the challenge of Hi-Rise building fires increases for the Amherst Fire Department.

The two engine companies, manned and officered by student personnel, comprise one-third of the response force to all building fires. The Auxiliary Force needs approximately 30 new men this September to fill vacancies and to reinforce our intent to handle all fires which occur, whether in a sub-basement or on the twenty-eighth floor.

Anyone eighteen years of age who can meet the physical standards and feels some degree of community commitment is welcome.

Deputy Fire Chief Cowles will be at the Fire Safety Office, located at the north entrance of Brooks Dormitory from 6-8 PM Monday through Thursday.

Applications are available at the Fire-Safety Office, in Brooks (Tel. 545-2682) and at Fire Headquarters, North Pleasant St., Amherst (Tel. 253-3432).

UCF Task Force Meets Tonight

By GILBERT J. SALK

Culturnatives Clearinghouse? Blood drive and civil disobedience at Westover AFB? Community Life Festival? Anti-war teach-ins at area churches? Tax resistance? An anti-war group that uses a pro-life approach in its activities?

These are some of the programs and attitudes being discussed by the United Christian Foundation's Peace Action Task Force. The task force will meet tonight at 7 p.m. in 908 CC, and new and prospective members are invited to attend.

The task force will divide into two sub-groups which will work on complementary programs. One will be anti-death programs; the other will be specifically pro-life. Members will be able to decide whether they want to work on one or both.

One program which is already underway is "Westover Revisited?" The task force is coordinating the UMass participation in this 5-College program which will appear at UMass Sept. 28, in 163 CC at 7 p.m. The program will present films of last spring's series of non-violent civil disobedience actions at Westover AFB, and a discussion of the current legal situation for those who were arrested in last spring's actions. The majority of the workshop time will happen at Westover this year. The UCF task force will organize and publicize the workshop at UMass.

The task force will consider any other life-reinforcing program suggestions, and its membership is open to the entire University community. If you are interested in the task force but are unable to attend this meeting, call UCF at 545-2661 for further information. A member of the task force will contact you.

People Needed For World of Others

It takes a little courage for a person to step outside the security of his own world and enter into the world of another. If that other's world is located within the walls of a state hospital it takes perhaps a bit more courage because one is obliged to enter an unfamiliar world, a world which has been colored for various stereotypes since early childhood. Northampton volunteers are people who have taken that step into another's world and found it a most rewarding experience because they've found that residents in a state hospital are only people; people who make good friends.

If you are interested in becoming a Northampton volunteer you can join us every Thursday night. A bus leaves from in front of the main entrance of Hasbrouck Lab at 6:30 P.M. The bus also stops at 6:35 P.M. on Sunset Ave. in front of Patterson House.

Old members - start this Thursday night, Sept. 21. New members will have a special orientation at the state hospital next Thursday night, Sept. 28.

If you have any questions please feel free to contact any of the following people: Mel 6-6627, Brian 6-6373, or Roger 6-5303.

Bay State Voters Inconsistent

BOSTON (AP)-Massachusetts voters Tuesday nominated an anti-war Vietnam veteran to run for Congress, chose a law-and-order Democrat to run against Republican Sen. Edward W. Brooke and renominated a congresswoman nationally know for her anti-busing stand.

John F. Kerry, 28, a former leader of Vietnam Veterans Against the War, easily topped a 10-Democrat race for nomination to the vacant 5th Congressional District seat.

Nominated to oppose Brooke's bid for a second term was Middlesex County Dist Atty. John J. Droney, who called himself a conservative on fiscal and law-and-order issues but said he will support Sen. George S. McGovern for the presidency.

Finishing surprisingly strong in a six-candidate Democratic primary in the 9th Congressional District was Rep. Louis Day Hicks of Boston, who won national attention in two unsuccessful Boston mayoral campaigns for her defense of the "neighborhood school."

In a potentially major Congressional challenge, state Rep. Martin A. Linsky narrowly topped a four-man Republican field in the 4th Congressional District. In November Linsky will meet Rep. Robert F. Drinan, a Roman Catholic priest and lawyer, who was unopposed in the primary.

Six other incumbent congressmen, four Democrats and two Republicans, has no primary challengers and face no major opponents in November. Two imcumbent Democratic congressmen easily beat primary challengers and there was no primary contests for nominations to another House vacancy.

A steady cold drizzle across most of the state all day apparently helped keep voter turnout substantially below the 30 per cent figure election officials had predicted.

Droney, whose endorsement by the Democratic State Convention in June had failed to discourage two challengers, said Wednesday he believes unemployment in Massachusetts is the most important issue in his campaign.

"I think we have to guarantee work for those pwople who want to work," said Droney. "The federal government has to provide work for anyone who wished to work."

Droney received 219,585 votes. Boston City Councilor Gerald F. O'Leary got 172,288 and Hampden County Register of Deeds John Pierce Lynch finished with 95,166.

In a Republican primary that had little to attract voters to the polls in most areas, Brooke got 123,985.

Droney said he will run a "gentlemanly campaign" against Brooke and will stress his "activist position in contrast to Mr. Brooke's do-nothing record."

While describing himself as conservative on issues of crime-fighting and fiscal matters, Droney said he believes on social legislation he is "as liberal as anyone in Washington."

He has since 1959 been district attorney-an elective office-in Middlesex County, the state's most populous. It includes the university city of Cambridge.

In Congressional contests Kerry's victory in a field of 10 Democrats climaxed a bitter primary fight that had taken a strange turn the day before the election. Kerry's brother and another campaign aide were arrested in the basement of a building in Lowell that housed an opponent's headquarters. Kerry insisted the pair were checking a tip that a telephone terminal there that served Kerry headquarters was to be sabotaged.

A former Navy officer decorated for combat service in Vietnam, Kerry achieved national prominence last year for his leadership of anti-war Vietnam veterans.

"The Hill" Offers Much

By ETHEL HARRIS

Founded in 1964 with the idea of a "residential college", Orchard Hill was to develop its own courses, majors, and faculty. "The Hill" currently offers many courses, social action projects, and a number of its own social and cultural programs.

Over thirty courses are offered this semester and are also open to non-residents if space permits. Topics range from human sexuality to photography to radical psychology. In addition, one-credit "colloquia" in such subjects as guitar and silversmithing have been offered.

The 1971-72 Orchard Hill Area Government report, submitted by Roy Purdue, past OHAG President, describes many of the recent Orchard Hill projects. Last year the area set up such "core facilities" as a library in Dickinson House, a photo lab in Webster, a ceramics room in Grayson, and a teletype room with three computer terminals in Field, according to the report.

The report also details some of the social action projects undertaken by Hill residents. These include the Juvenile Opportunities Extension Project (J.O.E.), in which six students this year will act as "advocates" for juveniles, and live in the dorm with them; a tutoring project at the Holyoke Street School; and a volunteer program at Belchertown State School.

Apple Corps, the social and cultural activities committee of Orchard Hill, has sponsored such events as the popular Mirkwood coffeehouse, a skating rink on the Hill, and Christmas and Halloween parties. Last spring, Corps was responsible for a jazz festival. Plans for a jazz series this semester are in the making.

"One of the biggest problems facing Orchard Hill is a lack of space", said Larry Hurwitz, a student who formerly worked for Leon Baron, past Master of Orchard Hill. "Activities have expanded so greatly that there is simply no place to go", he said.

Students and faculty have complained about the lack of a central meeting place, many times in the past. Plans had been made first for a dining commons, and later for a "modular classroom building", but were abandoned, according to the OHAG report.

Students have also pointed out that many think of themselves in terms of corridors or dorms, rather than as a part of Orchard Hill. This has resulted in a lack of unity among the residents. Hurwitz indicated the Hill's popularity when he pointed out that one thousand freshmen applied last year for about three hundred places.

Draft Classifications Explained

By GILBERT J. SALK

Recent changes in Selective Service regulations have affected the various classifications, doing away with some old ones and creating some new ones. As a result, I think it might be worthwhile to run briefly through the various classifications and explain them, so that you might have some idea of where to look for legal options to the military. Future columns will deal with these options in greater length and also discuss some of the extra-legal alternatives.

People in the first three classifications can be drafted if they satisfy all three of the following points: 1. They are in either the first or the extended priority selection group; 2. They have passed a physical; and 3. Their lottery number has been reached.

1-A: People in this group are considered available for military service. It is possible to submit material to your board to change this classification. Such action is best taken before an induction order is issued.

1-A-0: Conscientious objectors available for noncombatant military service. This is one of two possible CO classifications. If you choose to apply for this one you are saying that you are willing to serve in the military but that you will do so only as an unarmed noncombatant. You should deal with the question of what you would do if you were instructed to type orders to send someone else into combat, or to load bombs onto a plane, or, as a medic, to treat those who can quickly return to combat before you treat those who will require extended hospitalization. If you don't like these possibilities, perhaps you should apply for a

1-): Conscientious objector available for civilian alternative service. There are many myths about CO, most of which aren't true. A CO is a person who is opposed to participation in war because of moral, ethical, religious, or philosophical beliefs and training. He is not necessarily a pacifist; he may, for example, believe that it is okay to kill in self-defense, or even in case of a clear and present danger to his family or his property. He may even feel that wars or armies are necessary, but that his beliefs prohibit him from participating. A CO is not automatically called into alternative service. He must first use up any deferments for which he qualifies, and then pass the same physical as everyone else. Then, if his lottery number is reached in the general call, he will be ordered to report for alternative service.

2-A, 2-C, and 2-S. These deferments, given originally for essential occupation or nondegree study, agricultural employment, and students, respectively, are no longer granted. Those who were given these deferments before they were discontinued may continue to hold them as long as they qualify under the old regulations. For students, this means that you must remain in your original graduating class to retain your deferment.

2-D: This is for people deferred because they are studying for the ministry.

3-A: Hardship deferment. Also formerly the fatherhood deferment, but that no longer exists. Those who had it can keep it, but no new deferments solely on the basis of being a father are issued. There are three different types of "hardships" for which you might qualify. The first is economic. If you are contributing to the support of someone, and your being drafted would deprive them of this support and subject them to a significant financial hardship, then you might qualify. If you are close to someone who has a history of emotional problems or is under the care of a doctor for some sort of "nervous condition," and your being drafted could possibly have an adverse affect on this person, then you might qualify. If you are close to someone who has some sort of physical handicap, and is dependent upon you to do some needed chores, errands, or other assistances, then you might qualify on this basis. Please note that it is not a requirement in any of these cases that the dependent person be a relative. It helps, but it's not necessary.

4-C: This one's for certain aliens who are not required to perform military service. There's no way to sum up in a paragraph what the word "certain" means. If you're an alien, see a draft counselor for more information.

4-D: Ministers

1-H: A new gift from the SSS to itself. It makes all their bookkeeping easier. There are two groups of people who get this classification. The first consists of new registrants who are not yet old enough to be drafted, or have not yet been processed for classification, or who have very high numbers which are not likely to be called. For these folks, the 1-H is primarily a holding category. The other group is those people who have been through the lottery and are in the Second Priority Group. They are, to all practical purposes, through with the draft. The board just won't deal with them anymore.

4-F: Unfit for military service. There are a large number of weird things which will get you a 4-F. To begin to understand what's happening, you must realize that the army is looking for good soldiers who will be able to perform strenuous physical work under the most severe conditions. They don't want to have to worry about people who might not measure up. The regulations are drawn up to weed those people out. Thus, conditions which might not interfere at all with your regular day-to-day life might be exemptions. As a general rule of thumb, you should investigate any condition which could either interfere with the performance of duty, require frequent medical attention, or be aggravated by severe physical exertion or climatic conditions. In addition, certain phsychological problems, drug hangups, homosexuality, felony convictions, and "subversive" associations could lead to a 4-F.

4-G: Surviving son, formerly sole surviving son. Note that it is no longer limited to sole surviving son. If your father, brother, or sister died as a result of military service, whether or not the death

You should consult a trained draft counselor to determine your eligibility for any of these deferments. German Police Absolved

BONN, Germany (AP) - In a report on the Olympics massacre, the Bavarian state government said today the Arab terrorist raid could not have been prevented by tougher security and that enough police were used in the final airport shootout that ended in a bloodbath.

The major conclusions, apparently absolving police of any errors in these phases of the attack, were in two sections of a 71-page, three-section report based on an intensive investigation. It was released by the federal government information office in Bonn.

Tightening security before the Sept. 5 horror raid that left 11 Israeli Olympians dead in Munich probably could not have prevented it, the report said, because of the circumstances and the "aggressiveness and murderous intent" of the eight Arab raiders.

Five of the Arab guerrillas and one policeman were slain in the late-night shootout at a Munich airport.

The report said the five West German police sharpshooters used against the eight terrorists at the airport "were sufficient." This was because only four terrorists left parked helicopters and the other four could not be shot for fear of hitting their Israeli hostages in the helicopters with them, it added.

The report said the five West German police sharpshooters used against the eight terrorists at the airport "were sufficient." This was because only four terrorists left parked helicopters and the other four could not be shot for fear of hitting their Israeli hostages in the helicopters with them, it added.

The report said all nine Israeli hostages at the airport were killed by the terrorists. Earlier, the guerrillas killed two other Israeli athletes at the Olympic Village.

No mention was made of possible errors by police or authorities in the three-part report. Two parts were written by the Bavarian state government and one was written jointly by it and Chancellor Willy Brandt's federal government.

The report said the "basic concept" of the Olympic Games and the wishes of the sportsmen housed in the Olympic Village had ruled out such drastic security measures as posting police armed with machine guns outside the Israeli apartment, erecting watchtowers containing armed guards along the fence surrounding the village or completely isolating the Israelis.

Duane's Gone

SAN DIEGO (AP) - The weird football career of Duane Thomas took another odd turn Wednesday when, just one day after assuring everyone in San Diego he would lead the Chargers to the Super Bowl, he bolted camp.

At least, that's the way it looked after Coach Harland Svare announced Thomas was going home.

But the former Super Bowl star of the Cowboys missed plane connections later in the day, and he did not check out of his hotel.

"No reason was given," said a team spokesman after Thomas failed to attend a player meeting and the two-hour morning drills.

If Svare had any inkling, he didn't let on. "I can't enlighten you," he told newsmen.

The logical explanation might be a dispute over pay. Thomas was 52 days late showing up after being traded unconditionally by the Cowboys, reportedly because of displeasure with the $20,000 salary offered by the final year of his three-year contract with Dallas.

Celts Cut 1st

AP - The Boston Celtics of the National Basketball Association cut Bill Dinwiddie Wednesday, reducing their squad to 16. Four more must be cut before the season opens.

Dinwiddie, a native of Muncie, Ind., who attended New Mexico Highlands University, was acquired by the Celtics three years ago from Cincinnati in exchange for rights to Bob Cousy. He was later let go and Milwaukee picked him up.

Two years ago he came back to the Celts as a free agent.

Boston plays its first pre-season exhibition against Milwaukee in Montreal Friday night.

Pattin Wins First, 9-1, Tiant Blanks O's in 2nd, 4-0

Sox Sweep Orioles

By BOB ESTELLE

The Boston Red Sox stopped a red-hot Baltimore Oriole team last night by sweeping a doubleheader by scores of 9-1 and 4-0.

In the first game, Marty Pattin pitched a superb game. He gave up only five hits and one run en route to his 15th win against 12 setbacks. He had little trouble with the O's as he was never behind. The Sox were the first to draw blood with two runs in the third. Baltimore scored their only run in their half of the fourth but the Red Sox attack, lead by Carl Yastrzemski, Rico Petrocelli, Carlton Fisk and rookie Dwight Evans clobbered Oriole starter Jim Palmer and two other pitchers for seven in their half of the fourth. That's all that happened as both teams were held scoreless throughout the rest of the game.

The second game started out as a pitching duel between Mike Cuellar and Luis Tiant. But the Sox were able to get to Cuellar in the late innings of the game. They scored one in the fifth when Doug Griffin singled off umpire Hank Soar's leg at third base. Tiant sacrificed him to second and Tommy Harper singled him home. The Sox got two more in the seventh on Evans' leadoff triple, a walk to Harper, where ball four got by Oriole catcher Johnny Oates to score Evans. Then, Harper went to third on a single by Luis Aparicio and scored when Oates let another pitch get him by.

The clincher came when Evans hit his first major league home run into the net in left field.

The Orioles bats were silent again in the nightcap as Tiant gave up only three hits in addition to picking up his sixth shutout.

In the other AL East games, Woody Fryman won his eighth game for Detroit since coming over from Philadelphia by beating the Indians 4-1. The Yankee-Brewer game was postponed because of rain.

The Red Sox of this year remind me a lot of the '69 Mets. Neither team has/had a great slugger who hits over 30 home runs during the season, it's just that like the '69 Mets, the '72 Red Sox has been a team where everyone has contributed to the cause, include the reserves in this as well as regulars. The pitching for the Miracle Mets as well as the defense, was superb. Same goes for the Sox of '72. In my twenty years of life, I have seen a few close races but this one, with four contending teams, has been the most exciting of them all. Right now, no two ways about it, the Red Sox are the team to beat. Detroit is coming in for four bigees starting tomorrow and that series could very well mean a safe lead for the Sox. Just think, wouldn't it be nice to have someone other than Baltimore in the World Series? And, wouldn't it be even nicer if it were the Sox? Right now, they look as though they could do it. And the fans of Boston truly deserve it.

NO, THEY DIDN'T SHAVE OF THEIR MUSTACHES. This photo was taken last spring when writers were predicting a so-so season for the Sox. And it was a so-so season for the Sox until they decided to grow their mustaches. Mustaches, winning attitude...it kind of grows on you. Pictured left to right: Carl Yastrzemski (sans mustache), Tommy Harper (sans mustache), and Reggie Smith (normal).

Tigers 4, Indians 1

CLEVELAND (AP)-Woody Fryman hurled a six-hitter Wednesday night and drove in two runs with a ninth inning single as the Detroit Tigers tripped Cleveland 4-1 in American League baseball.

The Tigers, locked in a four-way struggle for the East Division title, were tied 1-1 after eight innings with the Indians.

If it's true that "black" is actually the absence of all color, aren't the UMaine Black Bears appropriately named?

Bucks Awarded Rights To Erving

The National Basketball Association's board of governor's decided Wednesday that league rights to Julius Erving belong to the Milwaukee Bucks rather than the Atlantic Hawks.

The Hawks had signed Erving to a contract.

The board, composed of NBA owners, voted in favor of Milwaukee's claim to the 6-foot-7 forward after a hearing that lasted several hours at a special meeting here.

"The vote was not unanimous," Commissioner Walter Kennedy said afterward. At least 12 votes were needed to settle the matter.

Erving, one of the leading scorers and rebounders in the American Basketball Association last season as a rookie with the Virginia Squires, jumped to Atlanta for a reported $1 million.

The Squires are battling in court in an effort to keep Erving, who was signed by the ABA team while he was still an undergraduate at Massachusetts.

Milwaukee selected him in last spring's NBA draft, and the Hawks announced the signing of Erving soon after.

Milwaukee then protested the signing and took the matter to the board of governors under provisions of the NBA constitution.

"The board's authority supersedes the authority of the commissioner in this case," said Kennedy, who earlier this year had stated that in his opinion rights to Erving belonged to Milwaukee.

Ali TKO's Floyd

NEW YORK (AP)-Muhammad Ali battered Floyd Patterson's face into a swollen, bloody mask and stopped him after seven rounds of a scheduled 12-round fight Wednesday night at Madison Square Garden.

This battle of former heavyweight champions had little action in the first five rounds as Ali circled and jabbed. The 37-year-old Patterson held his own by getting in with left hooks and some body shots, although he never hurt Ali, who seemed to tower over him.

Then, in the sixth round, Ali, who had a nine-inch reach advantage and outweighed Patterson 218-188-1/2, turned the fight into a mismatch. Ali sent Patterson reeling into the ropes with a smashing right hand shortly after the bell opening the seventh round, then hurt him with a left and right to the head.

Meeting Called On Loyalty Called

By CHRISTINA ROSSOMANDO

A meeting to discuss the current controversy over the law requiring all state employees to sign a loyalty oath will be held Monday 3:30-5:30 in room 163 of the Campus Center.

University ombudsman Jay Savereid said that the meeting with Director of Personnel and Financial Services John DeNyse and Student's Lawyer Richard Howland is open to anyone interested in discussing the issue, which has become somewhat of a controversy since a UMass graduate student was denied a job after refusing to sign the loyalty oath.

Donald Grant lost his job as a teaching assistant in the art department days before the beginning of the semester, when he was first informed that he would be required to sign the oath and refused to concur.

The loyalty oath was required this semester for the first time in nearly three years, after being suspended in 1969 by a U.S. District Court. The constitutionality of the oath was upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court in an April 1972 decision.

Another issue now confronting the office of the University ombudsman is the parking situation on campus.

A large number of grievances concerning parking policies and practices have been heard and the ombudsman has been able to secure reassignments in many cases. Professor Savereid explained that the parking situation is typical of many of the problems that reach his office in that it has been found that the solution will require that basic policy changes be made. Savereid said, "The office (of ombudsman) will always partially fail if we continue to deal with problems on a case by case basis and don't continue to be concerned with more basic solutions. There is a danger that if we continue to work in a case by case way we will not catch hold of the meaning of what we are doing."

Mr. Savereid, who is also an associate professor of speech, took over the job of ombudsman when Dr. Ellsworth Barnard returned this semester to his duties in the English department. Dr. Barnard was the first man to hold the post in 1971 when it was created by former chancellor, Oswald Tippo.

The name ombudsman is a Swedish term generally used as a term for a people's representative. The office serves all segments of the University, including students, faculty and all other members of the UMass community. Mr. Savereid emphasized the fact that there are almost no restrictions regarding the kinds of problems that can be heard or whose problems can be discussed.

"We try to help with all problems that are brought to us. If we are unequipped to handle the problem we will try to prepare the way and initiate action by whomever is able to help. We try to see that someone is not merely sent off to another place. In a sense, the buck stops here."

Mr. Savereid is anxious to receive publicity for the ombudsman's office because he feels that many students are unaware of the services available to them. "Right now," he explained, "we are busy helping the people who know best how to help themselves. We don't see the people who are hesitant about where to go for help."

Before coming to UMass in 1956, Associate Professor Savereid taught at Wesleyan, Cornell and Smith. In addition to teaching rhetoric and discussion at UMass, he has served as an assistant dean in the College of Arts and Sciences. He was appointed ombudsman on recommendation of a committee which included student government representatives.

Carnegie Proposals Called Inapplicable

By LINDA CRAVEN and JAMES GOLD

Governor Francis Sargent could be wrong in applying certain recommendations of the Carnegie Commission's report for reducing education costs in the proposed 1974 UMass Budget, said Clark Kerr, chairman of that commission, in a Boston Globe column yesterday.

Sargent stated in the September tenth issue of the Boston Globe that the trustees should take a good look at some of the recommendations made in the report "The More Effective Use of Resources" by the Carnegie Commission on Higher Education. Sargent indicated that his education and budget chiefs would be using them as major criteria in evaluating the budget.

The $98 million dollar budget got a "thumbs down" by Sargent two days after being publicized, at which time Sargent again plugged the Carnegie recommendations.

Sargent again cited the use of the Carnegie Commission recommendations in a letter to state college media yesterday (Text of letter is on page seven)

Kerr warned that "the commission did not intend to imply that comparable economies could be achieved by each and every institution of higher education." He added that "the position of the University of Massachusetts cannot be compared with those of long established and much larger state universities."

Kerr explained that Massachusetts did not start to develop a public university system until after the Second World War. He stated further that the newly developing UMass has experienced "explosive growth," its enrollment more than quadrupeling within the last eleven years.

Kerr expressed the importance of urban institutions, regarding the Room To Move: A Center For Awareness

By BARBARA VOORHEES

If you need a place to crash, deck out, rap, dig, groove, or read, Room to Move is a place to do all these things and a bit more. It is located in the SU basement and someone is always on call at 5-0400.

Just a place to crash? Just a place to go when you're bummed on a bad trip? Or a place to go when you need to talk, when you need help, when you need room to move?

Room to Move has a reputation on campus and off as a psychedelic drug center which provides sleeping space for those with none.

But it is much more, according to Ron LaFrance, chief coordinator for the center, former head of residence in Southwest, and a student working on his dissertation here. He said, in an MDC interview, "I want this to become more of a learning center where we can upgrade the level of awareness about drugs among the people on campus." Through an expanding staff and it's knowledge, Room to Move has become a center of counselling, drug information, and education.

The center will help anyone who walks through the door, student or not, with any problem ranging from feeling of alienation to pregnancy. "We talk to about 300 people a month. Some stop in just once and others come back from time to time," said LaFrance. Room to Move has referral network with all of the counselling and aid centers in the area. It also has a close relationship with the mental health cneter of the University and with the Infirmary.

The staff at the center consists of 20 students ans non-students all in their twenties, eight of whom are women and four of whom are black. They are involved in a continuous learning process. Special workshops are held once a week with speakers from the student body and from outside. Presently, workshops are concerned with the use of alcohol, barbituates and heroin. "We try to gear the training to what we see happening," said LaFrance. Spiritual counselling, yoga and meditation are also big concerns of the center.

LaFrance and other staff members, along with counsellors from outside of the University are available to speak in calsses and discussion groups. Those students involved in independent study in the drug field are expecially welcome at the center.

An important service of Room to Move is drug analyzation. Students wishing to check the actual content of drugs can do so confidentially through the center. "If we discover that there is a large amount of treated grass or any other drug going around which may be harmful to the user, we will spread the word around campus," said LaFrance.

Room to Move, in the SU basement is open from 10 to midnight, Monday through Thursday, 24 hours on Friday and Saturday, and from 10 to 7 on Sunday. Someone is always on call at 5-0400.

"Charley's Aunt," seen countless times all over the world, has been called the most effective farce ever written. "Charley's Aunt," like many farces, revolves around a deceptive identity. The supporting cast includes senior Geoffrey Keller, and junior Marshall Purdy, both students at Amherst College. The cast also includes students from Hampshire, Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges.

"Charley's Aunt" is the second of three plays produced this summer by the Amherst Summer Theater and now being performed as Kirby Theater's Fall Festival of Plays.

The Amherst College Masquers will offer performances by "Charley's Aunt" at 8:30 p.m. Friday (September 22) through Monday (September 25). In addition, the Masquers will offer a special 2:30 p.m. Saturday matinee (September 23).

All seates will be $2. Reservations can be made by calling or visiting the box office in Kirby Theater, open 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily, and on performance days from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. The theater is located on Route 116 South, on the left, one-half mile past the intersection of 116 with Route 9 in the Town of Amherst center.

Conn. Anti-Abortion Law Appealled

HARTFORD (AP)-The process of appealing a federal court ruling against Connecticut's st ct anti-abortion law began Thur lay when Atty. Gen. Robert K. Killian filed a notice of appeal in U.S. District Court.

On Friday, Killian is expected to ask the court to suspend its injunction against enforcement of the anti-abortion law while the appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court is pending.

Killian and the state's attorneys were yhe defendants in a lawsuit by a group called "Women vs. Connecticut" which successfully challenged the constitutionality of the law. The statute allowed abortions only when necessary to save the lives of pregnant women, and was similar in this respect to the century-old law which had been struck down earlier this year by the same three-judge federal court.

At present, the state is without any laws specifically concerning surgical procedures in general continue to make "back alley" abortions illegal.

Campus Security, Police, Reallocated

The director of security says there has been a complete reallocation of police officers on campus since he took over las February.

David L. Johnson, 36, said in an interview yesterday that a study by his staff has resulted in a plan that would allocate police officers according to the needs of the University.

He said the new plan exphasizes "Visibility" and means that officers are traveling alone in partol cars and are out on foot for the first time.

"This new visibility gives officers a lot more chance to have contact with students," he said.

The director added that the Police Training Institute held its first commencement Aug. 4, and graduated 14 students from the sex week class.

Ten of the graduates hired by the department would have been trained by the state police under the previous system at $200 a man.

"The institute gives officers specialized training in dealing with students," he said.

The security force is made up of 36 police officers and 38 institute protection men or security guards. There are presently six patrol cars compared to five last year.

Johnson said the force now has all the "personnel that we will need in the foreseeable future."

Stiff Sky-Jacking Penalties Passed

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Senate passed a tough anti-sky-jacking bill Thursday providing for a new airport security police force, screening of all airline pasengers, and the option of the death penalty for skyjackers.

Additionally, the President would be given the authority to suspend service of a U.S. airline to a foreign country or service of a foreign airline to this country if:

—A country aids. or harbors skyjackers, or is host to or aids terrorist groups who use air piracy as one of their prime weapons.

—A country does not take adequate precautions to guard against skyjacking.

—A country continues its service to another country which aids or abets skyjackers or sky terrorists.

The Senate vote was 75 to 1 to send the bill to the House with Sen. Harold Hughes, D-Iowa, voting against. He said he objected only to the death penalty option.

The death sentence would be at the discretion of the jury if there is a skyjacking conviction. The other choice is a minimum sentence of 20 years.

The Supreme Court has declared the death penalty, as now administered generally in the United States, to be unconstitutional. But the court left the door open for new death penalty laws that are applied uniformly.

The bill's manager, Sen. Howard Cannon, D-Nev., said he believed, "that part of the alarming increase in hijacking has been the failure of the U.S. court system to impose stiff penalties."

The screening of all passengers would take place for at least a year with the federal government footing the bill for electronic weapons detection devices.

At the end of the year, the Federal Aviation Administration would review the program and decide if to continue or modify it.

Law School Future In The Air

By ROBERT L. SCHEIER

Vice-chancellor for Academic Affairs Robert L. Gluckstern says it's too early to tell if cuts in the proposed UMass fiscal 1973 budget would affect the new law center proposed for the UMass-Amherst campus.

According to Gluckstern, the office of UMass president Robert C. Wood is "considering a response" to a call from Governor Francis W. Sargent and Education Secretary Joseph Cronin for the cuts in the school's proposed $98 million dollar budget.

In asking for the requests, Sargent had pinpointed new programs–and the law center in particular–as items to be "reviewed".

Gluckstern said the budget would be discussed at the October 4 Trustees meeting, and that the Board of Trustees might "decide its order of priorities are different than the governor's."

He added that the planned budget for the law school for the 1973-1974 fiscal year "doesn't involve a lot of money."

He said before the governor's statement on cutting the budget, the tentative plan had been to enlist a dean for the school in September, 1973, and the first students for the following school year.

"That plan may or may not be changed," he added.

The law center, which would combine a law school with courses combined with other university departments was endorsed by a committee chaired by state Attorney General Robert H. Quinn.

Under the report's plan, which was issued in early May, the school would train lawyers as well as offer courses relating law to other fields in society, such as medicine and child care.

In addition to placing a heavy emphasis on recruiting low-income, minority group, and female students, it would place law students in area legal aid offices with area legislators, and other community-service jobs.

The report also proposed a continuing education program, to help area lawyers keep up with changes in legislation and court decisions.

According to Gluckstern, after the report was issued the administration appointed a committee to develop a proposal for a law center. The committee suggested the center be included as a proposed program for the 1973-1974 budget.

Gluckstern said this committee, in developing the proposal for the Board of Trustees, recommended the establishment of committees to start detailed planning for the center, and to search for a dean for the school.

He said the center is currently planned to have an enrollment of about 600 and a budget of $2-3 million when it reaches full size, which the original report planned for the ninth operating year.

According to the report, during its first operating year the center would have a budget of approximately $600,000. At that point, the center is planned to have about 75 students. It is not expected to start operation until at least 1974.

When asked about the physical location of the center, Gluckstern said it could probably be housed in an existing building on campus. The report suggested Goodell Library, the present University library, after its books are moved to the new library tower. The move is currently scheduled for january.

Student AG Needs Advocates

By PAT CROWLEY

All UMass students aspiring to the legal profession now have a chance to experience courtroom drama (and the routine) right here on campus. Bert Emmons, the Student Attorney General, is presently looking for undergraduates to work as advocates in his office, both as defenders and prosecutors. Emmons invites all those interested in being advocates to visit his office in room 921 of the Campus Center.

The office of the Student Attorney General was revived last year by Henry Bouffard who also served as the first "modern-day" Attorney General. After a carefully directed search last spring Emmons succeeded Bouffard and will remain in his post until April, 1973. To attain this post a candidate is closely screened by a search committee which presents its findings to the Senate President. The President then presents his choice before the entire Student Senate, which must ratify the nomination.

Emmons is currently putting in a 30-40 hour work week and enjoys the responsibilities of his office. The Student Attorney General is paid a monthly salary of $150 which is taken from the student activity tax. Emmons is available to the UMass undergraduates either as individuals or as a group during regular office hours and "any other time I'm not in class".

The prime function of the Attorney General's office is to "assemble the group of student advocates to defend and prosecute specific cases before the student judiciaries". Emmons acts as advisor to the advocates and helps them to prepare the defense or prosecution of a wide ranging variety of cases that crop up during the course of the school year. In reality, says Emmons, we are a "bunch of amateur lawyers". Amateurs or not, these advocates put in much hardwork aid the students of the University and are rewarded with the experience of handling legal matters on a campus scale.

One of the main functions of the Attorney General is the defense and prosecution of undergraduate students caught shoplifting in the Campus Bookstore. Although the prosecution of these cases is handled mostly by the store personnel the Attorney General is responsible for helping the store in drawing up its cases to present before the judiciary. Any undergraduate apprehended shoplifting is urged to obtain legal counsel from this office. Emmons expects the penalties to be the same as they were during the latter part of the previous year, that is fines levied agunst first offenders. These fines can range from a minimum of five dollars to three times the value of the merchandise stolen. Emmons urged the students to "stop the shoplifting in the Campus Bookstore" as he already has thirteen cases awaiting judicial action since the start of the semester. A word to the wise.

Regarding the much discussed Matt Tackeff vs. the Student Senate case Emmons feels that he is facing the "most up-in-the air issue" he has ever seen. Under the Senate Constitution Emmons must personally present the Senate's case before the General Court of Justice. Although Tackeff had the option to obtain counsel from Emmon's office he has chosen Bill Spinn, a Student Senator and ex-advocate, to present his case.

Mop-Up Operations in Uganda Continue

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS - Mopping-up operations were reported continuing in southwestern Uganda Thursday. African lejers sought to defuse the Uganda-Tanzania confrontation and apparently false rumors of invasion caused panic in Uganda's capital city of Kampala.

Radio Uganda reported that several African leaders have contacted Uganda's President Idi Amin in an attempt to cool the results of Sunday's invasion, believed staged by Ugandan exiles based in Tanzania and seeking reinstatement of former President Milton Oze.

In Nairobi, Kenya, one of Africa's top politicians conferred with President Jomo Kenyatta of Kenya and reportedly asked the veteran leader to mediate.

Radio Uganda said that both Amin and Tanzania President Julius Nyerere received messages from President Sekou Toure of Guinea who said the blame for the present conflict lies with Britain and Israel.

A Uganda military spokesman said the situation throughout the country was calm. There appeared to be no basis for the scare.

Uganda had said Wednesday it is ready to order pre-emptive strikes into Tanzania to head off another invasion. And Tanzania said it might be forced to take its troops off a defensive footing unless Uganda halts its air strikes.

Sudan on Wednesday intercepted but later released five planeloads of arms and troops from Libya originally destined for Uganda. It was not known where the planes were headed for after their release by Sudan.

At least 30 foreigners, including Associated Press correspondent Andrew Torchia, were released after two days' imprisonment in Uganda.

In London, the British Foreign Office said all the Britons released late Wednesday night seemed to have been quite "well treated."

But seven freed Britons, all newsmen, called the cell they were in a "black hole of Calcutta," a reference to an odious, stifling room in which the 18th century ruler of Bengal imprisoned British soldiers.

Don Wise, roving correspondent for the Daily Mirror, said women and children were held captive alongside prostitutes, drunks, thugs and thieves.

There were still about 40 Americans and West Europeans believed being held.

Torchia described how Uganda soldiers "pinned a man on the ground while a woman beat him with a rawhide whip 10, 20, 50 times until he screamed and writhed and the blood ran."

He said that about 30 soldiers "laughed, enjoying the spectacle."

Torchia reported that he "was never formally charged or told of what wrongdoing he was suspected. The offense seemed to be that I was a foreign newsman who could not accept uncritically official Kampala pronouncements on the fighting."

Amin has ordered all noncitizen Asians out of Uganda by Nov. 8.

Agnew FBI Statement May Have Forced Probe

WASHINGTON (AP)-A dispute over administration handling of the U.S.-Soviet wheat deal has spread to whether a statement by Vice President Spiro T. Agnew forced President Nixon to order an FBI probe of alleged profiteering.

Rep. John Melcher, D-Mont., said Thursday that he understands Agnew's announcement, at a campaign news conference in Minneapolis on Tuesday that an FBI probe was in progress at the order of the President, "came as a complete surprise to the White House and a shock to the Department of Agriculture."

The administration maintained, however, that a probe was requested before Agnew spoke and described an account of the incident as erroneous.

On Thursday, the New York Times reported a misstatement by Agnew apparently led Nixon to order the FBI to investigate the wheat sale.

The newspaper quoted "sources on Capitol Hill" as saying that until Agnew made his statement, Nixon had had no intention of ordering such a probe.

Agnew, in a statement issued through his office here Thursday, called the Times story "inaccurate-wrong in it over-all conclusions and wrong in its particularities.

"Some errors are apparent from an examination of the vice presidential press conference transcript. Some result from the notorious unreliability of 'Capitol Hill sources' regarding presidential decisions and actions. We stand behind our previous statement on the matter."

Presidential press secretary Ronald Ziegler, at the White House Thursday, said he had given an accurate account Wednesday in reporting that Secretary of Agriculture Earl L. Butz made the investigation request in a call Tuesday to presidential aide John D. Ehrlichman.

"I'll stand by my statement," Ziegler said Thursday, adding in reply to a question that he considered the Times account inaccurate to the extent that it conflicted with what he had said.

Melcher, a member of a House subcommittee investigating the massive grain deal, said he understood Agnew asked Capar W. Weinberger, head of the President's Office of Management and Budget, in preparation for the news conference, about the status of the wheat dispute.

"Weinberger was just trying to give Agnew a rundown on the wheat situation and what was involved with the hearings that had been held and just casually and probably flippantly remarked the FBI could come on the scene and go through it thoroughly, and Agnew apparently took that as meaning the FBI was already on it," Melcher said, and Butz decided "that they'd better back up the vice president."

Thieu Makes 2nd Front Line Trip

SAIGON (AP)-President Nguyen Van Thieu, making his second front line visit in two days, flew into embattled Quang Ngai Province's biggest town of No Duc. 90 miles south of Da Nang.

The U.S. Command listed no Americans killed in action in its weekly casualty summary covering the seven-day period ending midnight last Saturday. Spokesmen said it was the first time in 7-1/2 years that no U.S. servicemen had been listed as killed in action.

But a check of files showed that a daily U.S. Command battlefield communique reported one U.S. adviser killed last Saturday at Mo Duc. The command said the death occurred about eight hours before the midnight cutoff period and did not reach the casualty reporting branch in Washington in time to be included in this week's summary. It will be carried over for the following week.

There may have been more than one American killed in action last week. The command's weekly summary listed four airmen as missing or captured in the intensified air war over North Vietnam. Some or all of them might have been killed, but there has been no confirmation of their fate.

Thieu flew to Quang Ngai, stopping at Hue and Da Nang en route. At Hue, he told a nationwide radio audience that North Vietnam, is committing "mass suicide" on the battlefield and claimed the Communist side has lost nearly 125,000 troops killed in its six-month offensive.

At Quang Ngai, Thieu was briefed by Col Tran Van Nhut, the commander of the South Vietnamese 2nd Infantry Division. He did not go into Mo Duc, 15 miles to the south. Associated Press correspondent Michael Putzel reported from Da Nang that South Vietnamese militiamen and reinforcements from the regular army had pushed North Vienamese forces out of Mo Duc and the enemy appeared to fall back except for one ridgeline strong point called Dragon Hill, southwest of the town, which they still hold.

The North Vietnamese and Viet Cong launched an offensive in Quang Ngai Province last Saturday.

Lebanese Patrol Clash With Guerrillas

(AP) A Lebanese army patrol clashed with a group of Palestinian guerrillas Thursday, a day after Arab mediation efforts were said to have achieved a compromise between Lebanon and the guerrillas.

Reports reaching Cyprus said two army soldiers and one guerrilla were shot in the exchange of fire in a village 80 miles south of Beirut.

The clash came as letter bombs addressed to Israeli officials continued to turn up in Africa, North and South America and Europe.

Four Convicts On The Run

BLACKSTONE, Mass. (AP) - A search Thursday for two of four men who escaped from a Rhode Island prison Wednesday centered in the Blackstone-Millville area north of the Rhode Island border.

About 50 officers and state police were called into the area north of Woonsocket, R.I., after reports that women, resembling photographs of the escapees, were sited three times during the day.

Silver Dollar Sale Soon

WASHINGTON (AP) - The General Services Administration is readying a sale of 2,800,000 19th Century silver dollars worth an estimated $120 million on the coin collectors' market.

No dates have been set for the planned series of bid sales of the dollars minted at the Carson City Mint which closed before the turn of the century.

Intensive Manhunt Launched

CRANSTON, R.I.(AP)-An intensive manhunt was underway Thursday for four convicts who escaped from the state prison apparently through a police web set up in anticipation of the break.

The escapees, three of them convicted killers, fled during a recreation period Wednesday night at the Adult Correctional Institutions.

"We had some vague information that a break was in the planning," Warden Francis Howard said Thursday. "We had a few of the names, some of them were correct."

After receiveing a tip at noon Wednesday, Howard said the prison staff was "beefed up, but not to a great extent." A detail of approximately 20 state police arrived at the prison compound about 6:30 p.m., he said.

N. Korea Arms Arab Terrorists

WASHINGTON (AP)-A State Department spokesman said Thursday that North Vietnam has provided arms aid to Arab terrorists, but later said he meant to say North Korea-not North Vietnam.

Spokesman Charles Bray orignially named North Vietnam at his daily noontime news briefing as providing "direct assistance to at least some organizations in the Middle East which are operating in the field of terrorism."

Britain Pledges To End Internment

British soldiers stand behind screens as youths hurl rocks at them from behind a barbed wire barricade during disturbances in Armagh, Northern Ireland. Trouble followed when security forces halted a march through the town. (AP)

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP)- The British government has pledged to end the jailing without trial of suspected Irish terrorists in a major initiative to stop the violence wracking Northern Ireland.

The move Thursday was a key concession to the Roman Catholic minority that has long viewed internment as a policy directed mainly against Catholics. Catholic political leaders have refused to attend Britain's proposed peace talks while the internment without trial continues.

An announcement issued in Belfast and London said special courts without juries will be set up to deal with suspected members of the Irish Republican Army's terror squads. These tribunals will replace the policy of jailing the suspects without trial, a course chosen by Britain in August 1971 in a bid to calm the province's sectarian violence.

For the longer term, the announcement said, authorities will set up a commission of lawyers and laymen to advise the government on new ways of coping with the threat of terrorist violence such as the bombs that explode periodically in Northern Ireland streets.

The announcement gave no date for the establishment of the special tribunals and the abolition of internment without trial.

Hundreds of suspected terrorists have been jailed without trial and held indefinitely over the past year under the controversial internment scheme. The vast majority were Roman Catholics who want to drive the British out of the predominantly Protestant province and unite Ireland.

Welfare Needs Nixon Compromise

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Abraham A. Ribicoff, D-Conn., said Thursday he sees no way the Senate can pass the key section of the welfare reform bill unless President Nixon is willing to agree to a last-minute compromise on it.

Ribicoff said he welcomed the decision of the Democratic leadership to bring up the massive Social Security-welfare-reform bill even this late in the session.

But he said the measure is almost certain to bog down in hopeless controversy unless a compromise can be agreed to on a new plan for welfare families with dependent children.

Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield of Montana announced that he now plans to bring up the big bill by the middle of next week.

That is dependent on the Finance Committee giving final approval to the legislation at a meeting Friday.

Chairman Russell B. Long, D-La., said he believes the panel will do this although it has missed many other deadlines it has set for final action.

The committee has had the bill 15 months; the House passed it June 22 last year.

Much of this time has been spent in wrangling over Nixon's Family Assistance Plan which would replace the present welfare Aid to Families with Dependent Children program.

The committee finally rejected the President's proposal, which was included in the House bill, and wrote its own Workfare plan.

Under this, parents now on the AFDC rolls whose children are in school would be taken off welfare and required to accept jobs to be furnished by a federal corporation if their incomes were to continue.

Long says most Americans are tired of the sharp growth in the welfare rolls and insists he believes he has a good chance to get the Senate to accept Workfare.

But Ribicoff contends that Workfare will be defeated and that only a compromise acceptable to moderates and liberals can win the necessary votes.

He told a reporter he will be ready to offer a compromise when the floor debate begins.

The Nixon plan fixes a guaranteed annual income of $2,400 for a welfare family of four, and for the first time, would provide payments for the working poor.

The Connecticut senator's original substitute provided for a $3,000 income for a family of four rising to $4,000 or the poverty level in five years.

It also gave more generous grants to the working poor, more aid for states and covered more people. The administration said it would cost $4.4 billion more than the President's plan at the outset.

Clash Marks Paris Talks

PARIS (AP) — A clash over the Viet Cong plan for a tripartite regime in Saigon marked the 160th session of the deadlocked Vietnam peace talks Thursday.

Each side accused the other of prolonging the war.

The continued stalemate seemed to indicate that no progress was made in the latest round of secret talks between presidential adviser Henry A. Kissinger and Hanoi Politburo member Le Duc Tho last Friday.

U.S. Ambassador William J. Porter told the Communists that the Viet Cong "requirements" — an American pullout, the resignation of Saigon President Nguyen Van Thieu and formation of a coalition government — would not lead "neither to peace nor to self-determination for the South Vietnamese population.

Mrs. Nguyen Thi Binh, the Viet Cong's chief delegate, said the United States was trying to distort the realities in Vietnam.

She said the first reality "is that the United States has invaded Vietnam and the Vietnamese people have waged a patriotic resistance war for independence and freedom."

The second reality, she said, is "there exist in South Vietnam two administrations, two armies and other political forces."

Mrs. Binh said the two administrations were the Viet Cong's provisional revolutionary government, and the Saigon administration.

Mrs. Binh said only a three-segment government of national concord could organize truly free and democratic elections. She told the Washington and Siagon delegates "it is precisely you who are afraid...of the judgment of the people."

Porter pointed out that the Viet Cong plan calls for the United States to stop all military action and pull out of Vietnam but "is completely mute" about what the other side would do.

Porter insisted the Viet Cong element in the proposed three-segment regime would "enjoy decisive preponderance of authority."

Nixon Bids Congress Act On Wildlife Areas

WASHINGTON AP - President Nixon asked Congress today to designate 16 new wilderness areas embracing 3.5 million acres.

In a special message, Nixon noted that the wilderness preservation system now covers 9.1 million acres but complained that Congrss had yet to act on 43 wilderness proposals encompassing 4.1 million acres-proposals quite apart from the new one he submitted.

"I now urge the Congress-in this centennial year of our national park system-to act quickly in favor of these new proposals as well as the ones already pending."

Five of the wildernesses would be in national wildlife refuge areas: Brigantine in New Jersey, Blackbeart Island in Georgia, Chassahowitka in Florida, and Lostwood and Chase Lake in North Dakota.

A sixth area, administered by the National Park Service, would be within the Cumberland Gap National Historical Park on the borders of Tennessee, Virginia and Kentucky. The six would add 40,257 acres to the wilderness system.

Nixon also called for new wildernesses in four national parks in the west: 2 million acres in Yellowstone; 512,870 in the Grand Canyon area, 646,700 in Yosemite, and 115,807 in Grand Teton.

McG: US Paying Heroin Tax

NEW YORK (AP) - Americans are paying $5 billion a year in "heroin tax" while the Nixon administration has failed to crack down on flow of the drug from Southeast Asia, George McGovern said Thursday.

"Pious announcements by President Nixon and his spokesmen cannot cover up the fact that the number of heroin addicts in the United States has almost doubled since 1968," the Democratic presidential candidate said.

McGovern said he is prepared to debate a Nixon spokesman on the issue.

Last Monday, the President pledged to crack down on U.S. allies that serve as a conduit for illicit drug traffic.

McGovern said "one American youth in 17 has used heroin" and it is the "greatest single cause of crime." He said addicts spend $5 billion a year on their habit, money that is "paid by the victims of the millions of burglaries, robberies and thefts committed by heroin addicts each year. It amounts to a 'heroin tax' of $100 a year for every American family of four."

The allegations came in a lengthy statement issued as McGovern campaigned in New York Thursday. He also touched on the subject in midday address to a Brooklyn street crowd of less than 200.

A Brooklyn Democratic party source, fuming that the turnout was so small, said word that McGovern would make the Brooklyn appearance was not confirmed until Wednesday and there was not enough time to publicize the event.

Also on the schedule of McGovern and Sen. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine, who is traveling with McGovern and delivering ringing endorsements of the candidate at campaign stops, were appearances at a Queens, N.Y., subway stop and a flight to Detroit for still more campaigning.

In his attack on Nixon administration's antinarcotics record, McGovern said, "Contrary to Mr. Nixon's claim that the supply of heroin is drying up, more heroin is being smuggled into our country than ever before."

McGovern said the federal government's own Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs BNDD "estimates that heroin is being smuggled into our country at the rate of 6-1/2 to 10 tons a year, compared to 5 to 6 tons last year."

While not arguing with an administration claim that federal funding to fight heroin traffic has increased 11 times over the 1969 level, McGovern said it is less than one-tenth the budget of the Vietnam war.

Judge Halts Watergate Suits

WASHINGTON (AP) - U.S. District Court Judge Charles R. Richey Thursday halted further proceedings in the three civil damage suits stemming from the bugging of the Democratic National Headquarters until the criminal trials have been concluded.

Richey reached his decision after conferring for more than five hours with attorneys for both sides. He said there was agreement among all parties to delay the civil action.

He said his action meant that it would be impossible to bring the civil proceedings to trial before the November election.

The possibility exists that the criminal trial of seven indicted by a federal grand jury for the June 17 break-in could begin before the election

The three civil cases involved are a $3.2 million damage suit against the Republicans brought by former Democratic National Chairman Lawrence F. O'Brien, a $5 million counter-suit filed by Maurice H. Stans, chief fund-raiser for President Nixon's re-election bid, and a $5 million libel suit by Stans against O'Brien.

Richey said the temporary halt would insure the rights of the defendants in the criminal case and the rights of the public to have the case successfully prosecuted.

"If this court were to allow the depositions to continue, albeit under seal ... it might well turn out that this would subvert the rights of the public to have that case prosecuted successfully and it might also subvert the rights of the accused in that proceeding to a third trial as guaranteed by the Bill of Rights," Richey said.

Agnew Says McG Demoralizing U.S.

CHATTANOGA, Tenn. (AP) - Vice President Spiro T. Agnew accused George McGovern Thursday night of "parroting the propoganda of the North Vietnamese" and in helping to destroy "the morale of thousands of Americans who are not in possession of the facts" about communist brutality in Indochina.

Agnew's attack on the Democatic presidential nominee's criticism of the destructive impact of U.S. bombing drew cheers from a rally that filled most of the 5,000 seats in Chattanooga's Memorial Auditorium.

Earlier in the day, in Nashville, Agnew said: "We're going to have an end to this busing and "we're going to have it very clear" if Congress approves President Nixon's proposal for the moratorium on court-ordered busing.

Launching a four-state campaign swing in states where Republicans hope to hold two Senate seats and add two, the vice president sought to reinforce the antibusing position of Sen. Howard H. Baker, R-Tenn. Agnew said Baker has been "In the forefront" of the antibusing effort.

The vice president plans campaign stops Friday in North Carolina and Virginia and on Saturday in Kentucky.

At the Chattanooga rally, cheered on by sign-waving youths in the front of the auditorium, Agnew said he wanted to ask McGovern "why he doesn't have the same amount of compassion for the hundreds of thousands of South Vietnamese who have been purposely and consciously exterminated in one of the most ruthless acts of aggression ever recorded in international history."

Although McGovern usually criticizes the impact of U.S. bombing on both North and South Vietnam, Agnew directed his remarks at the senator's comments on its effect on the Communist north.

"I can't find any crocodile tears to shed for a nation that has before it on the peace table the most generous terms on which an internationally supervised end to hostilities can be brought about," the vice president said. "Nor can I condone or accept the premise that the South Vietnamese people are being victimized by a corrupt regime which operates strictly out of force."

Kerr Contradicts Governor

"substantial growth" of the UMass Boston campus "imperative". As a result, Mass may better serve the higher education needs of the people in the 1970's, he said.

Kerr warned that the development of public higher education in Massachusetts will be "stunted" if the development of UMass is "impeded by too overly stringent budgets."

Kerr also mentioned the fact that Massachusetts ranks near last among the 50 states in the percent of its per capita income and taxes allocated to higher education.

Kerr pointed out that in "The Capitol and The Campus," another Commission report, state's with such low assistance to public higher education should "take immediate steps to increase their financial support of higher education.

Secretary of Education Joseph M. Cronin said in an interview yesterday concerning Kerr's letter that "some of the Carnegie Commission recommendations are as valid in Massachusetts as they are in other states."

"We are in a fiscal crunch were, in effect, we are expected to take a look at all our programs to find outwhere we could "make some sensible economies," Cronin stated.

Cronin also questioned the size of the teaching and engineering programs and the necessity of the proposed law center.

Sargent Misapplied Suggestions

By CLARK KERR

In an article in The Globe of Sunday, Sept. 10, as well as in several earlier articles, it was reported that Gov. Francis W. Sargent has rejected the budget request of the University of Massachusetts for 1973-74 and, in an unprecedented move, has sent it back to the university's board of trustees for revision. The governor's secretary of educational affairs, in a letter to the chairman of the board of trustees, cited some of the recommendations in the report of the Carnegie Commission on Higher Education, "The More Effective Use of Resources," issued in June of this year, and urged that the trustees consider them in their financial planning.

We are pleased at the recognition given to the commission's report, and it is true that the report stressed the need for colleges and universities to curb rising costs and to save approximately $10 billion (in 1970 dollars) per annum in the aggregate by 1980, as compared with the total sum that would be spent if the trends of the 1960s continued. Among other paths to more effective use of resources, the commission emphasized acceleration and integration of degree programs, year-round use of facilities where it would achieve net savings in combined capital and operating costs, efforts to achieve economies in the use of faculty resources, and more flexible patterns of participation in higher education.

However, the commission did not intend to imply that comparable economies could be achieved by each and every institution of higher education, regardless of its stage of development. The position of the University of Massachustts cannot be compared with those of long-established and much larger state universities in many of the midwestern and western states. Along with other states in the Northeast, Massachusetts had a long tradition of reliance on its exceptionally strong private colleges and universities, and did not begin to develop a public university system until after World War II. During the 1960s and early 1970s the newly developing University of Massachusetts has experienced explosive growth, with its total enrollment rising from 6000 in 1960 to a round 26,000 in 1971. Although a ceiling of about 25,000, as compared with its present enrollment of 20,000, has been recommended for the Amherst campus the younger Boston campus, which is serving the vital needs of a densely populated urban area, can be expected to continue to grow rapidly from its current enrollment of about 5000.

Indeed, the Carnegie Commission, which has stressed the importance of urban institutions which will enhance educational opportunities of young people in inner city areas, would regard very substantial growth of the Boston campus as imperative. We also commend the recommendations of the special committee, under the chairmanship of Vernon Alden, which reported to President Robert C. Wood of the Univerity of Massachusetts last December looking toward spreading the university's facilities throughout the city of Boston rather than concentrating them in one loation.' This and other recommendations of that committee, with its thrust away from the traditional heavy research orientation of universities and toward emphasis on a public service role, with high priority for undergraduate education, are consistent with many of the objectives of the Carnegie Commission.

Thus, the University of Massachusetts can be expected to break new ground in serving the needs of the people of the state for more flexible access to higher education in the 1970s. We also commend the plans of the state Board of Education for an "open university," which is expected to begin enrolling students in the fall of 1973. But the development of public higher ecucation in Massachusetts will be stunted if the state university's development is impeded by overly stringent budgets. In this connection it is important to point out that Massachusetts ranks close to the botton among the 50 states in the percentage of its per capita income expended on public higher education and in percent of per capita taxes spent on public higher ecucation. Our commission has recommended, in its report, "The Capitol and the Campus," that states ranking below average on various measures of state effort in relation to higher education should "take immediate steps to increase their financial support of higher education." We believe that this should be accomplished in Massachusetts.

However, we recognize that Gov. Sargent has strongly supported the development of public higher education in Massachusetts and can be expected to continue that support. While we question any attempt at serious curtailment of the state university's development, there may be specific proposals in the 1973-74 budget request that merit scrutiny. Initial budgets are almost always subject to detailed review, especially when they include proposals for new endeavors. But we would urge that in this detailed review care bt taken to ensure the continued sound development of the university.

Sargent Promises Education Reform

September 19, 1972

Greetings:

It is my great pleasure to welcome you back to school this autumn. The students and faculty members in the public colleges and universities of Massachusetts have a superb record of scholarship, learning and service to the Commonwealth, and I am confident that you will better it during the new school year.

In a year when the full burdens of citizenship are falling for the first time on many student shoulders, it is appropriate that I share with you some of my hopes and concerns for public higher education in this state.

We have come a long way. We were the first state in the nation to elect students as full-fledged members of all our trustee boards. In the past twelve years, our enrollments have more than quadrupled. The state's yearly expenditure to operate the institutions has gone from less than $20 million to nearly $200 million. A new college or university campus has opened almost every year. Our faculties include some of the ablest men and women in the land, and our salaries are competitive with the rest of the nation, yet tuitions have remained low. We have exciting new educational programs in every corner of the Commonwealth.

But the time has come for even more exciting programs, for setting aside hoary pedagogical anachronisms and replacing them with institutions and courses of study that incorporate the very best and most innovative of modern educational thinking.

Why, for example, must we continue to gauge a student's progress by the number of courses he has taken, when what matters is what he has learned? Why must he sit in a dull class when he might better be learning in the community, on the job, or studying at home? Why preserve programs that prepare students for jobs that no longer exist? Why must it take four years to earn a bachelor's degree when many students could manage it in three?

I have been especially interested to see the recent recommendations of the distinguished Carnegie Commission on Higher Education for a series of far-reaching educational reforms. Many of those reforms also promise greater educational returns for each dollar spent, whether it is the student's tuition dollar or the taxpayer's.

I intend to help those of you on campus to make this year the most exciting in the history of Massachusetts higher education. Together we will search out boredom and waste wherever they exist, and replace them with challenge and effectiveness. My administration will propose changes in the structure and organization of public higher education designed to strengthen it, to reduce duplication and to insure that the real needs of the Commonwealth are met in an orderly and crative way. We will also propose once again a plan to link tuitions with scholarships, so that every additional dollar paid by a student goes to assist students who would not otherwise be able to attend college.

For too long we have placidly accepted the proposition that higher education is something for students to endure on their way to something else. with your help and your ideas we can change that.

I look forward to meeting with many of you in the months to come. In the meantime I hope you will feel free to write me and Education Secretary Joseph M. Cronin, or call Philip Lerner of my staff at 727-4258.

With my best wishes for a most enjoyable and rewarding school year.

Sincerely,
Francis W. Sargent

Not Saviors Yet

In one of the more amusing moments of last Wednesday's Student Senate meeting, Senator Nick Apostola proclaimed to all present that the Collegian would probably "praise the Senate as saviors" if said body passed a bill which would restructure the Student Union Governing Board.

We like the bill, but Mr. Apostola and the rest of the Senate should know that praise is not in order, at least for the time being. First of all, the measure passed by the Senate Wednesday night must now be passed by the Graduate Student Senate, and also be approved by the Chancellor. These are not 100% certainties, and we should restrain our jubilation until they are fact.

There is also the matter of new appointments to the Board. One of the reasons SUG Board was as ineffective as it was is that appointments to the Board, made by such people as Student Government President Larry Ladd, were not carefully considered. Instead, SUG Board became something of a political Siberia where all those discontented with campus politics were sent in the hope that they'd be heard from as little as possible.

The Campus Center Fee is the highest individual tax students pay. The body that governs such an important complex should be appointed on the basis of competence, not because there's nowwhere else to put them. For these reasons the Collegian will postpone its praise of the "saviors" in the Student Senate until the job that they started Wednesday night is completed and completed correctly.

Thief In A Jockstrap

Someone's daddy is going to get busted tomorrow. When it happens, he won't be sent to jail; he simply won't be allowed into Alumni Stadium, and his son or daughter's roommate may face disciplinary action from the University. Daddy's gonna get busted for impersonating a UMie.

Dean of Students William Field, normally the most discreet of men, opened a can of worms the other day. At issue was the scalping of tickets to UMass football games. Field warned students not to scalp their tickets, because doing so is just "like shoplifting at the Campus Center--you're not hurting the University. What you're doing is raising student fees." I was amazed to see a member of the Administration say this for publication. It is akin to a burglar awaking his victim to complain that there's no ice cream in the freezer. The wisest course would have been to keep quiet, and hope to get away with the theft.

There is no way to describe the Ticket Policy of the Athletic Department as other than theft. Sanctioned by the University Fee Structure, students are forced to support the Athletic Department, paying taxes to attend football, basketball, and hockey games. Everyone pays, although no one can pretend there are seats enough for all students to attend the same games for which their fees pay. Put simply, twenty-one thousand students are asked to pay for tickets to events that they cannot possibly all attend.

Ironically, student apathy is greatest where football is concerned. The football stadium has seats for 20,000 people, and is never filled. In theory at least, any student who wishes to attend the game may do so. Among the sports which charge for admission, football is the least offender.

What happens in the winter is a little different. The hockey team plays at Orr Rink, where the legal capacity is 1,200 people. This capacity exceeds the number of seats, making it necessary for some of the lucky 1,200 to stand through the entire game. What about the other 19,000 students who cannot attend? Perhaps they're not hockey fans. Then why did they pay to attend the game?

Basketball points out the problem best. Julius Erving is gone, but when he was here, one had to line up at four p.m. to get into the Cage to watch a game. In the Cage, which seats 4,200, season ticket holders would come along to claim their seats, for which they had tickets and students had only their ID cards. Sixteen thousand students who have paid for the game cannot attend, yet the University sells some seats twice.

The football tickets to be scalped are obtained in exchange for coupons given to every student who has paid his athletic fee. that is every student, for unless you pay your athletic fee, you cannot register for the semester. You pay a fee to attend games you cannot attend, in order to go to classes (which are frequently closed due to over-enrollment). At the end of four years, there's an excellent chance that you'll get to take Entomology 203, but you can't see the 1970 Boston College basketball game ever again, and you can't get your money back either.

Why does every student compliantly pay his Athletic Fee? Perhaps it is because he isn't interested in attending the games, and doesn't realize that he is paying for them. Perhaps his parents pay the bill for him to go to school, and he isn't particularly concerned about the extra money. Perhaps he doesn't care enough about it to raise a fuss. It is not, to be honest, the gravest injustice currently being perpetrated on the planet earth.

It makes no sense, however, for the Administration to be rousing up a controversy in which they have the most to lose. If John D. Carniemellon is paying his workers fifteen cents an hour, he would be a fool to call the local paper to complain about their coffee breaks. The workers might think the addition of insult to injury a bit much. In this case, however, it is the consumer, not the producer, who is getting shafted.

It is a further puzzle, as regards the student apathy, when the quality of the teams is considered. One can talk about Julius Erving, Greg Landry, and Milt Morin forever; our teams are mediocre. The University doesn't try to force Buffy St. Marie albums on the fans of the Grateful Dead; it does not, however, give you the option of watching Alabama or Stanford play. Those football tickets are for Yankee Conference Football, those hockey tickets are for Division II, and those basketball tickets cost the same whether Julius is present at the Cage or in Virginia, Atlanta, or Milwaukee.

Attendance at UMass games would not drop off if students paid on a per game basis. To remove the Athletic Fee, or even just that part of it which pays for Varsity game tickets, would not wipe out the Athletic Department. If it would, why then is there an Athletic Department? Are we practicing Socialism for the rich, and free enterprise for the poor?

Personally, I have sufficient other concers that I will probably not take any direct action on my own. I would, however, join in a class action if other students decided that they had had enough of this high-handed policy. And I would love to be there when Daddy, whose buttocks are no bigger than Roommates, is told he can't sit in the seat which Roommate paid for but isn't going to use. Daddy may well get pissed. Hoa binh.

The Anti-Noise Bill

'I've got a problem . . . I can't find my way and I want to tell him to get lost!'

NEW YORK--The city council of New York has just passed New York's first comprehensive law to control noise. The anti-noise program is expected to go into effect in the next two years. How do New Yorkers feel about it? I went out into the streets to find out.

The first man I spoke to was walking down the Avenue of the Americas. "Sir, how do you feel about the new anti-noise law that was just passed?"

"WHAT DID YOU SAY?"

"I SAID HOW DO YOU FEEL ABOUT MAYOR LINDSAY'S PLAN TO OUTLAW THE DIN IN NEW YORK CITY?"

"IS HE GOING TO OUTLAW GIN? I'M A VODKA MAN MYSELF. SO IT WON'T AFFECT ME."

"NOT GIN--DIN. HE WANTS TO LOWER THE DECIBEL COUNT IN NEW YORK CITY."

"I DON'T KNOW ANYTHING ABOUT DECIMALS, BUT IF I KNOW LINDSAY, HE'LL LOWER THE DECIMALS AND UP THE TAXES."

"Thank you very much, sir."

"MY WIFE DRINKS GIN. I'M NOT SURE SHE'S GOING TO LIKE IT," he said, walking off.

I went over to Fifth Avenue and spoke to a lady with a shopping bag. "The Environmental Protection Administration of New York has declared war on noise pollution," I said. "How does that grab you?"

Her lips started to move, but I couldn't hear her.,

"WHAT DID YOU SAY?" I shouted.

"I SAID I'M GOING TO VOTE FOR NIXON AND AGNEW."

"NO, I'M POLLING YOU ON THE PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN. I'M TRYING TO FIND OUT WHAT YOU THINK ABOUT NOISE. "

"WHAT'S HE RUNNING FOR?"

"HE'S NOT RUNNING FOR ANYTHING. NOISE IS AN ISSUE--NOT A PERSON," I yelled.

"I WOULDN'T KNOW ANYTHING ABOUT THAT. I LIVE IN BROOKLYN."

Just then a pgliceman came up to me and asked, "Why are you shouting at this lady?"

"I WASN'T SHOUTING AT HER. I WAS ASKING HER A SIMPLE QUESTION."

"Why are you shouting at her?" the policeman demanded angrily.

"I WASN'T SHOUTING. I'm sorry, I was shouting, but that was because she coldn't hear me with all that construction going on over there."

"Suppose everyone in New York shouted. What kind of city do you think we'd have?"

"That's just the point," I said. "I'm asking people what they think about the new anti-noise law."

"What new anti-noise law?"

"The city council passed a new law, and as soon as the mayor signs it, you can give out summonses to people who make too much noise."

"YOU MEAN WITH EVERYTHING ELSE WE HAVE TO DO, WE POLICE ARE GOING TO HAVE TO GIVE OUT SUMMONSES FOR NOISE?"

"EITHER THAT OR TAKE A BRIBE," I said.

"GET OFF FIFTH AVENUE BEFORE I TAKE YOU IN," he screamed.

"YOU DON'T HAVE TO SHOUT," I said as I headed for Eighth Avenue.

On Eighth Avenue I walked up to a man and said, "I want to talk to you about the earsplitting noise in New York."

He threw his hands high in the air. "Take my wallet. It's in my left breast pocket."

"THIS IS NOT A STICKUP. I'M DOING A POLL."

"HERE'S MY WATCH. JUST DON'T SHOOT ME."

"MISTER, PUT YOUR HANDS DOWN. I WANT TO TALK TO YOU ABOUT NOISE."

"I GOT TWO BOYS," he cried. "TAKE THE MONEY AND RUN."

A crowd started to gather, and I decided to get out of there.

As I walked away, one of the young men in the crowd shouted after me, "WHAT'S THE MATTER--NO GUTS?"

Larry Closes Tonight In Gala Goodbye Bash

By ED BRYANT

At first it seemed impossible, but there it was on the sign: LAST SHOW EVER. Little Latin Larry and the Latinaires, featuring the Luscious Latinettes, were breaking up. The Beatles broke up, Janis and Jimi died, but this really tears it. Little Latin Larry, more than any other group, has been THE band at UMass. The University may still be here after tonight, but it won't be the same.

Stranger bedfellows have probably existed, but that Larry should have won his greatest following here is an improbably tale, yet a true one. Who would have predicted that a group of high school dropouts would lay down their socket wrenches to invade the groves of academe, stealing everyone's heart in the process? That, however, is just the way it happened.

It all started in the fall of 1970. Larry was familiar with people here who had gone to high school in Brookline. Larry is one of the few members of the group who stayed in school after the age of sixteen (Butchie Michie has been out since he was fourteen, pumping gas before turning to music.) Larry's friends here got him a gig in Pierpont that fall, and they came. There was a great deal of mutual antagonism at first, but after a while, the college kids and the high-school dropouts grew fond of each other. Chico DiNacola, the bass player for Larry, showed one girl, a psych major, how to use her dipstick. They became fast friends.

Still, it wasn't until the following winter that the love affair between Larry and UMass became public. Fate took a hand. On the last weekend of October, a concert in the Cage got out of hand. The ensuing investigation resulted in the Cage being off-limits for future concerts. Winter Carnival had to change its plans. They were forced to cancel The Fifth Dimension, a move that broke three hearts, only one of which was wooden. The cancellation of The Fifth Dimension was providential for Larry, as it turned out, but at first it seemed there would be no Winter Carnival. Everyone was dejected, some to the point where they started using marijuana. It seemed as though the use of marijuana on campus might become a problem. It was decided to Winter Carnival would go on, and the Winter Carnival Committee began to replan the gala fest, scheduling it for February 19-21, 1972. They went looking for a group to play in the Campus Center Auditorium. They wanted a quality band, but it couldn't be anybody too famous, or the problems that

Oranges And Orwell

BY BUDDY NEVINS

Mr Nevins is a free-lance journalist who has written for a variety of American and foreign publications. This is his first article for Pacific News Service.

BARTOW, FLORIDA

Just a few miles from the spires of Disney World's Tomorrowland is an Orwellian future that didn't wait until 1984. In Polk County, Florida, a flat and sleepy stretch of land, world renowned for frozen orange juice, the school board has begun installing a series of special cameras which will monitor junior and senior high school students during class, in the halls, and while eating lunch.

The School Board of Polk County, plagued with the typical problems of drug dealing, student unrest, and vandalism, became the first system in the nation to install Kodak analyst super 8 security cameras. The police, banks, and retail shops have been using similar cameras for over a year.

W.W. Reed, Superintendent of the Polk County School Board, says that the surveillance equipment, although in use only a short time, has had a psychological impact on the 10 senior and 16 junior high schools where they are in use. "They have had a definite effect on the total tenor at the schools," says Reed.

The cameras, "the latest super 8 advance," according to a Kodak company release, cost around $240 apiece and are set to snap a picture every 30 seconds. Because they are encased in a sound-absorbent box, students never know when a picture is being taken. The time-lapse camera can operate for days without changing film.

Polk County officials have set up the Analyst super 8's in corridors, around the school grounds, problem classrooms, and cafeterias. The cameras are fitted into specially constructed wall brackets and come equipped with a variety of lenses depending on the angle and depth of the subjects being photographed. Principlas have also been supplied with hand-held models, to cover incidents in areas not monitored by the wall-mounted Analysts.

Reed takes great pains to emphasize that the school board has no intention of snooping on the students. "We're neither interested, nor do we have the time, to 'spy' on our students when they are conducting themselves in manners normal for their age level," he says. "We process and look at film only when incidents have occurred that require establishing responsibility for them." Reed continues, "It is a completely innocent way of taking remedial action."

But students at Polk County schools and the American Civil Liberties Union of Florida disagree with the Superintendent as to the innocence of the Super 8's. "We are inhibited from being outselves," says a senior student body president from one school where the cameras have been used. "It doesn't say much for our teachers when they need spy cameras to keep control."

Florence Wills, spokeswoman for the American Civil Liberties Union of Florida, feels the installation of the cameras constitutes "a definite invasion of privacy." The ACLU, says Mrs. Wills, is "actively searching for a plaintiff in a right-to-privacy case in Polk County involving the School Board."

"We feel the Polk County School Board has attempted to rewrite the Constitution of the United States," she continues. "We feel this type of surveillance should be stopped before it spreads to other school boards around the country. We already have information that the Palm Beach County (Florida) Board is about to install a similar system by Kodak."

In the meantime, the giant Rochester photographic firm is mounting a major effort to put its Analyst super 8 cameras in every school, retail store, government office, and warehouse in the country. "The present crime emergency may be more important than almost any other environmental problem," states the narrator of Kodak's sales presentation for their security cameras.

Kodak proudly trumpets Spokane, Washington's Sheriff William J. Reily's claim that one Analyst time-lapse camera smashed a drug ring working a local high school. "We got a call from a lady reporting that a pusher was habitually working at a street corner near the high school," says Sheriff Reily. He set up an Analyst camera in a parked vehicle at the corner with the lens poking through the curtain. "The suspect didn't show up," the Sheriff admits, "but one day he will and we will have him."

Testimonies such as Sheriff Reily's, Kodak says, have school boards seeing the Analyst camera as a panacea for every type of disciplinary problem and a protector of individual rights, not a violator of them. "The students have been told the cameras are there and that it is possible for us to positively identify not only those responsible for trouble, but also those who are innocent of wrong doing," says Superintendent Reed. "Thus, the innocent are protected."

Yet pupils have complained that just the opposite is the case. "In any type of trouble, everybody that the camera photographs," notes one senior high student, "is sent to the office. After all, they can't tell who caused the trouble because they don't have sound cameras. They don't know who said what to whom, and anyway, the instigation of trouble might just happen to fall during the 30 seconds the camera isn't photographing."

And students loudly proclaim that school rules are as widely ignored as they were before the installation of the cameras. Illicit activity has just moved out of the range of the super 8 lens, they say.

What little drug dealing went on before the introduction of the Analyst 8's in this small central Florida county still goes on, mostly in the bathrooms, "because they haven't set up cameras there yet." Contact between opposite sexes (which can even include holding hands) is a strict violation of school rules and harder to arrange. Underground newspapers, such as Rolling Stone, are taboo and easily spotted by the cameras.

"Nothing has changed but the amount of subterfuge and fear," said one student. "It's like being in jail for six hours a day."

Angela Davis And Soviet Repression

BY GALEN TINDER

The Free Angela Davis movement which was so popular during the 1971-2 school year, represented, in many ways, one of the more dubious enterprises of the student left. The only real issue, that of whether her bail was unreasonably high, was quickly buried under the bolsterous, and occasionally frenzied cries of "free all political prisoners" and America is racist. In this abandoning of common sense many students displayed the soft underbelly of the radical movement and once again demonstrated how easy it is for ideologues to abandon rational thinking in favor romantic excessiveness.

The main reason Miss Davis' cause attracted so much attention was because she is a Communist, Black, and a woman. Hence she embodies, in one person, three of the most repressed elements in our society. But beyond these reasons Miss Davis had little with which to recommend herself as the focal point of student unrest. She is not a particularly personably woman and that strength of mind which Herbert Marcuse accredited with never made itself very apparent. Nothing the press reported her as saying ever seemed to have very much substance or originality.

But it was not until the trial was over that she began to show her true colors. She had barely stepped out to the courtroom when she stated that her acquittal in no way reflected favorably upon the American judicial process. Yet in many countries a person in Miss Davis' position would not even have been given a trial but summarily sent to jail. Though overcrowded and inequitable in several respects, the courts are still one of the fundemental foundations of our republic and the fact that Angela Davis did receive a fair, jury trial in spite of her ideological beliefs is a tribute to the degree of freedom which still exists in America.

Miss Davis did not, until quite recently, reveal the degree to which she is out of touch with the realities of world politics. For a reason which has eluded the perception of this writer she decided to go to the Soviet Union to thank the Russian people for their support, without which, she claims, she could not have won her battle in court. Unfortunately Miss Davis was not content with becoming a propaganda tool of the Russian beauracrats but insisted on frequently praising the degree of freedom in Russian society and commending the Russian government for its struggle against oppression throughout the world. These kinds of statements demonstrate such an appalling ignorance of the conditions which exist in Russian society that one is forced to wonder, as one appropriately anonomous Russian put it, whether Miss Davis is a "fake or a fool."

One wonders what a man like Pyotr Yakir, a Russian historian, would think of Miss Davis' remarks lauding Soviet freedom. In June Yakin was arrested for "anti-Soviet agitation which meant that he had the courage to speak out against unlawful and baseless arrests, rigged trials, and the practice of sending political dissidents to insane asylums where they underwent psychological torture.

What will happen to Yakin and others like him is unsure. He may spend years in jail without coming to trial, and if he is brought to trial one may be sure that its outcome will be pre-determined by the Russian officials.

Russia, in mockery of Marx, is a clearly repressive state. The government, for instance, controls what news the Russian people hear and the form in which they hear it. Papers which criticize Russian policy are illegal and a countless number of people have been sent to jail for circulating them underground. The fact that the government controls the outflow of news means that the average Russian citizen is not free to think for himself since the inability know the truth is antithical to free thinking. Such is freedom of press in Russia.

Obviously Russian citizens are not free to comment publicly upon the workings, actions, and policies of the Kremlin. Anyone who does so can expect to receive a stiff jail sentence of at least three years. Such is freedom of speech in Russia.

There is no creative freedom in Russia. The government, for instance, has banned the books of her greatest writer, Alexander Solzhenitsyn because they have criticiaed the lack of freedom in Russian society. Solyhenitsyn, author of Cancer Ward, The First Circle, and just recently August, 1914, is constantly harassed by the government. He can not step out of his house without being put under surveillance, he is not allowed access to materials he needs for his writing, and he could not travel out of the country to accept the Nobel Prize for fear he would not be allowed to return. It is only his emmense international stature which saves him from jail or exile.

When you think of apple pie do you also think of Volkswagon? You don't! Well, you better start; what do we have to do, drag you kicking and screaming into the twentieth century? The fact remains that the VW has been a kind of ward of the United States almost since it's drawing board days. The chaotic infancy and growth of the Volkswagon has been a barometer of the world situation. Read Frank Johnson's review of K.B. A Man For All Season

On our centerfold pages this week we treat you, the reader, to an intense and informative interview with Anthony Burgess who was on campus last week. In this interview by representatives of the two on-campus radio stations (transcribed from tape for Poor Richard's by that workhorse of a reporter, Mr. William Densmore) Burgess reveals his feelings concerning questions ranging from the music in "A Clockwork Orange", to the extent that the autobiographical has had on his writing as a whole. This is part one of a two part report of the interview held two Mondays ago. As the man on the tube would say: "Up close and personal."

Oranges And Orwell

BARTOW, FLORIDA

Just a few miles from the spires of Disney World's Tomorrowland is an Orwellian future that didn't wait until 1984. In Polk County, Florida, a flat and sleepy stretch of land, world renowned for frozen orange juice, the school board has begun installing a series of special cameras which will monitor junior and senior high school students during class, in the halls, and while eating lunch.

The School Board of Polk County, plagued with the typical problems of drug dealing, student unrest, and vandalism, became the first system in the nation to install Kodak analyst super 8 security cameras. The police, banks, and retail shops have been using similar cameras for over a year.

W.W. Reed, Superintendent of the Polk County School Board, says that the surveillance equipment, although in use only a short time, has had a psychological impact on the 10 senior and 16 junior high schools where they are in use. "They have had a definite effect on the total tenor at the schools," says Reed.

The cameras, "the latest super 8 advance," according to a Kodak company release, cost around $240 apiece and are set to snap a picture every 30 seconds. Because they are encased in a sound-absorbent box, students never know when a picture is being taken. The time-lapse camera can operate for days without changing film.

Polk County officials have set up the Analyst super 8's in corridors, around the school grounds, problem classrooms, and cafeterias. The cameras are fitted into specially constructed wall brackets and come equipped with a variety of lenses depending on the angle and depth of the subjects being photographed. Principlas have also been supplied with hand-held models, to cover incidents in areas not monitored by the wall-mounted Analysts.

Reed takes great pains to emphasize that the school board has no intention of snooping on the students. "We're neither interested, nor do we have the time, to 'spy' on our students when they are conducting themselves in manners normal for their age level," he says. "We process and look at film only when incidents have occurred that require establishing responsibility for them." Reed continues, "It is a completely innocent way of taking remedial action."

But students at Polk County schools and the American Civil Liberties Union of Florida disagree with the Superintendent as to the innocence of the Super 8's. "We are inhibited from being outselves," says a senior student body president from one school where the cameras have been used. "It doesn't say much for our teachers when they need spy cameras to keep control."

Florence Wills, spokeswoman for the American Civil Liberties Union of Florida, feels the installation of the cameras constitutes "a definite invasion of privacy." The ACLU, says Mrs. Wills, is "actively searching for a plaintiff in a right-to-privacy case in Polk County involving the School Board."

"We feel the Polk County School Board has attempted to rewrite the Constitution of the United States," she continues. "We feel this type of surveillance should be stopped before it spreads to other school boards around the country. We already have information that the Palm Beach County (Florida) Board is about to install a similar system by Kodak."

In the meantime, the giant Rochester photographic firm is mounting a major effort to put its Analyst super 8 cameras in every school, retail store, government office, and warehouse in the country. "The present crime emergency may be more important than almost any other environmental problem," states the narrator of Kodak's sales presentation for their security cameras.

Kodak proudly trumpets Spokane, Washington's Sheriff William J. Reily's claim that one Analyst time-lapse camera smashed a drug ring working a local high school. "We got a call from a lady reporting that a pusher was habitually working at a street corner near the high school," says Sheriff Reily. He set up an Analyst camera in a parked vehicle at the corner with the lens poking through the curtain. "The suspect didn't show up," the Sheriff admits, "but one day he will and we will have him."

Testimonies such as Sheriff Reily's, Kodak says, have school boards seeing the Analyst camera as a panacea for every type of disciplinary problem and a protector of individual rights, not a violator of them. "The students have been told the cameras are there and that it is possible for us to positively identify not only those responsible for trouble, but also those who are innocent of wrong doing," says Superintendent Reed. "Thus, the innocent are protected."

Yet pupils have complained that just the opposite is the case. "In any type of trouble, everybody that the camera photographs," notes one senior high student, "is sent to the office. After all, they can't tell who caused the trouble because they don't have sound cameras. They don't know who said what to whom, and anyway, the instigation of trouble might just happen to fall during the 30 seconds the camera isn't photographing."

And students loudly proclaim that school rules are as widely ignored as they were before the installation of the cameras. Illicit activity has just moved out of the range of the super 8 lens, they say.

What little drug dealing went on before the introduction of the Analyst 8's in this small central Florida county still goes on, mostly in the bathrooms, "because they haven't set up cameras there yet." Contact between opposite sexes (which can even include holding hands) is a strict violation of school rules and harder to arrange. Underground newspapers, such as Rolling Stone, are taboo and easily spotted by the cameras.

"Nothing has changed but the amount of subterfuge and fear," said one student. "It's like being in jail for six hours a day."

Angela Davis And Soviet Repression

BY GALEN TINDER

The Free Angela Davis movement which was so popular during the 1971-2 school year, represented, in many ways, one of the more dubious enterprises of the student left. The only real issue, that of whether her bail was unreasonably high, was quickly buried under the boisterous, and occasionally frenzied cries of "free all political prisoners" and America is racist. In this abandoning of common sense many students displayed the soft underbelly of the radical movement and once again demonstrated how easy it is for ideologues to abandon rational thinking in favor romantic excessiveness.

The main reason Miss Davis' cause attracted so much attention was because she is a Communist, Black, and a woman. Hence she embodies, in one person, three of the most repressed elements in our society. But beyond these reasons Miss Davis had little with which to recommend herself as the focal point of student unrest. She is not a particularly personably woman and that strength of mind which Herbert Marcuse accredited with never made itself very apparent. Nothing the press reported her as saying ever seemed to have very much substance or originality.

But it was not until the trial was over that she began to show her true colors. She had barely stepped out to the courtroom when she stated that her acquittal in no way reflected favorably upon the American judicial process. Yet in many countries a person in Miss Davis' position would not even have been given a trial but summarily sent to jail. Though overcrowded and inequitable in several respects, the courts are still one of the fundemental foundations of our republic and the fact that Angela Davis did receive a fair, jury trial in spite of her ideological beliefs is a tribute to the degree of freedom which still exists in America.

Miss Davis did not, until quite recently, reveal the degree to which she is out of touch with the realities of world politics. For a reason which has eluded the perception of this writer she decided to go to the Soviet Union to thank the Russian people for their support, without which, she claims, she could not have won her battle in-court. Unfortunately Miss Davis was not content with becoming a propaganda tool of the Russian beauracrats but insisted on frequently praising the degree of freedom in Russian society and commending the Russian government for its struggle against oppression throughout the world. These kinds of statements demonstrate such an appalling ignorance of the conditions which exist in Russian society that one is forced to wonder, as one appropriately anonomous Russian put it, whether Miss Davis is a "fake or a fool."

One wonders what a man like Pyotr Yakir, a Russian historian, would think of Miss Davis' remarks lauding Soviet freedom. In June Yakin was arrested for "anti-Soviet agitation which meant that he had the courage to speak out against unlawful and baseless arrests, rigged trials, and the practice of sending political dissidents to insane asylums where they underwent psychological torture.

What will happen to Yakin and others like him is unsure. He may spend years in jail without coming to trial, and if he is brought to trial one may be sure that its outcome will be pre-determined by the Russian officials.

Russia, in mockery of Marx, is a clearly repressive state. The government, for instance, controls what news the Russian people hear and the form in which they hear it. Papers which criticize Russian policy are illegal and a countless number of people have been sent to jail for circulating them underground. The fact that the government controls the outflow of news means that the average Russian citizen is not free to think for himself since the inability know the truth is antithical to free thinking. Such is freedom of press in Russia.

Obviously Russian citizens are not free to comment publicly upon the workings, actions, and policies of the Kremlin. Anyone who does so can expect to receive a stiff jail sentence of at least three years. Such is freedom of speech in Russia.

There is no creative freedom in Russia. The government, for instance, has banned the books of her greatest writer, Alexander Solzhenitsyn because they have criticiaed the lack of freedom in Russian society. Solyhenitsyn, author of Cancer Ward, The First Circle, and just recently August, 1914, is constantly harassed by the government. He can not step out of his house without being put under surveillance, he is not allowed access to materials he needs for his writing, and he could not travel out of the country to accept the Nobel Prize for fear he would not be allowed to return. It is only his emmense international stature which saves him from jail or exile.

closed the Cage would be back doublefold.

Mary Holland was a member of the Class of 1972. As Chairperson of the Concert Committee for Winter Carnival, Mary took her responsibilities seriously. It was as though she took it upon her own two shoulders to solve the fearsome marijuana problem. She was determined to find the right band. She left no stone unturned, but for a long time there seemed to be no solution. Where could she find a band?

Fortunately she had the sense not to try to bear her terrible burden alone. She turned to David Duncan and Lester Meyers, fellow members of the Class of 1972, seeking their help in her search for a band. They knew the perfect solution for her problem: Mary, they told her, get Little Latin Larry. The deal was closed a few days later.

It was as if a year of rain had ended. Everyone was ecstatic. At last, there was a band for Winter Carnival. The whole campus turned out, and were astounded. Larry had to hire a secretary to read his mail. The concert was a whopping success.

The band has been coming back to UMass regularly ever since, winning more hearts each time they came. Tonight is being advertised as the last time they will play together, and it's not a put-on. This really is the end for the group we've known and loved.

Larry, who no one thought would ever grow up, has done just that. He has a job now, a real job, selling insurance. He has moved to Little Nahant, and his '57 Chevy is on sale at a Used Car Lot on Route One. Now he's driving to work in a Chevelle, and it just doesn't seem right. The rest of the group is still hanging out, drinking beer, and they're ready to play music until hell freezes over, but Larry is the drawing card. A closer look at Larry himself is in order.

Some critics have compared Larry to Presley, but the analogy is more obvious than correct. Elvis is an uncomplicated boy from the Bible Belt who freed his libido and rose to stardom on the basis of his sex appeal, although certainly no one questions his musical talent. With Larry, there is more working than simply sex.

Larry, is, if you will, the ultimate American success story. Here's a nice kid who didn't belong to a Country Club as a kid. Everyone's mother tells him to go out and play; not everyone finds himself on the street corner when he obeys her. For Larry, life was cigarettes and cokes, hanging out at the corner with the guys, dreaming about a better life, or at least something to break the monotony of all those Camels and Cokes. Eventually you forget about those dreams, when all you can think or talk about is getting out of school, where effeminate English teachers make fun of you for wearing leather jackets and boots, and Spanish teachers fresh out of Vassar think happiness is conjugating estar. Most of Larry's gang made the move when they were sixteen, taking jobs as mechanics and gas jockeys, or simply sleeping late and reporting to the corner at three-thirty as before. Larry didn't like the abuse he took from his teachers, but he stuck it out. For a while it looked like he might even go to college, but then there occured a nasty scene one day after school. The only thing that is certain about that day is that the Spanish teacher made Larry stay after school. Otherwise, it is his word against hers. Whatever did happen, Larry graduated, but no college would touch him.

So he got together with the boys at the corner, and they learned to play music. Dominic "Blade" Peroso was catching flak from his parole officer because he couldn't find a job. Larry convinced him to play the guitar. Chico DiNicola lost his job when Jenny merged with City Service, creating work for the signmakers, but none for Chico. Larry handed Chico a bass guitar one day, and Chico spent day and night learning to play. Diego and Domingo Sanchez, just six months out of San Juan, had no friends but the kids at the corner. They too were included in the group, as were Butchie Mishie and his cousin Lumpie, both of whom were out of work at the time. The story of the Michie cousins illustrates the miracle Larry worked in keeping his friends in society and out of jail.

Butchie, who had quit school at fourteen, had been living wherever he could find a bed, stealing on a small-time basis to stay alive. When his cousin Lumpie got kicked out by his parents, the two got together, and got restless. They were all set to go out stealing cars the night Larry talked them into joining the group. That night, six of Butchie's friends were arrested for grand larceny. To this day, Butchie, a guy who doesn't show emotion, still looks at Larry with visible admiration.

Larry is a little older now, and wealthy enough to buy and sell that Spanish teacher ten times. He's not bitter, though. When recently he learned that she had had a terrible accident, driving her Corvair off a cliff, Larry seemed sad, very sad indeed. But now the time has come for Larry to make something of himself, and insurance looked like the thing. He's giving up rock for a piece of the rock.

What about everyone else? The others in the band give various answers when asked what they'll do. Chico DiNacola, the bass player, says he'll marry Little Latin Lola, whose six months pregnant at the moment. The Sanchez' brothers talked half-heartedly of muscling in on Cesar Chavez. Dominic Peroso is thinking of opening his own station, ironically a Citgo station. They all seem as though they'll get by.

Butchie Michie may not get along so well. When I talked to him the other day, he had had too many beers already, and it was just after noon. Butchie has been drinking a lot, he told me, thinking about life without finding any answers. He told me enthusiastically about a Comparative Literature lecture he sat in on the other day, and he says he's thinking about going to college. But his marks in eighth grade weren't very good, and there's high school to think about. The girl he was with was dressed in leather. He told me he's in love with her. The whole thing was very depressing.

That is the true story of Little Latin Larry, a side of him you don't see when he's singing with the band. They'll miss him; they'll never forget him. Neither, I'm sure will we. They play tonight in the Campus Center Auditorium. When the concert ends, an era ends with them. If you love Larry, tonight is the night to say goodbye.

Athletic Council,

Future Solutions To Now Problems

By TOM FITZGERALD

Welcome to "Let's Make a Deal," Mr. McInerney. Behind one of those curtains is a posse of wealthy alumni who will endow UMass handsomely if you will say the magic words: "Onward to Notre Dame."

Behind another curtain is a group of students and faculty members who want to see intercollegiate sports downgraded as an institutional pursuit, say, to the level of intramurals.

Behind a third curtain are your bosses, the Dean of the School of Physical Education, the Chancellor and the trustees, who have two things to say to you about money. They want you to keep the alumni happy so they'll give more of it, and they want you to spend less of it.

Of course there are assorted booby prizes behind other curtains. Now, Mr. McInerney, do you want to keep that crisp two-dollar bill or take a chance at one of the curtains. Wait just a minute, folks. This is your lucky day, Mr. McInerney. Our producer has just told me that you have won the "Let's Make a Deal" bonus. You win all three major prizes! And they'd all like to see you tomorrow morning at 8. Is that alright?

Just as Patrick Gray is at least the second best FBI director in history, Frank McInerney is at least the second best athletic director in UMass history. His predecessor, Warren McGuirk, began in 1948; before that the school was known as Massachusetts State College.

McInerney is a smooth, voluble operator who speaks in well-modulated tones. He doesn't show his 46 years. The earnest blue eyes, sandy hair, sturdy jaw and trim build are telegenic. Indeed, he still hosts a weekly general interest show on Springfield's Channel 40 and used to be that station's sports-broadcaster. While his move to a "front office" position is not as earthshaking as if Howard Cosell were to succeed Pete Rozelle, McInerney obviously relishes the decision-making responsibilities of his new job.

He inherits an athletic department molded in the image of McGuirk, heavy on football but still far more varied than those of other state universities. McGuirk, of the broad shoulders and the furrowed brow, was a former B.C. tackle; his assistant toward the end of his tenure, the late Chet Gladchuk, was a former B.C. All-American center. The priorities crystallized in the form of Alumni Stadium in 1965, built just in time for the only year in which Greg Landry and Milt Morin played together.

As both Director of Athletics and Dean of the School of Physical Education, McGuirk had nearly czarist power over Boyden, a building in which jocks run around oblivious to the hidden administrative jealousies. He refused to settle for facilities that were second best even when, as was the case for years with the track and still is with the hockey rink, it meant having nothing at all.

"Frank is a lot easier to work with," another member of the athletic department says, with relief. "He'll listen to you if you take the other side on an issue."

Like everybody but Duane Thomas' coach, McInerney sees as his big problem the old standby: bread.

"Presumably our people have been told we are going to operate on so much money. Now I have to tell them they're going to have to operate at considerably less. This means: where do you take the money?

"It's easy enough for me to say cut ten percent. That might mean the trainer can't travel with the soccer team. But if I say that, and somebody breaks a leg up in the bushes somewhere and can't get to a hospital or a doctor for five hours, that becomes an instant problem."

For the past few years, the money problem has stilled all the rash talk about telling the Yankee Conference what to do with its Beanpot and opting for more ambitious schedules. We've been pummeling Maine, Vermont and New Hampshire for ten years now in football; the result is a campus-wide yawn. The addition of B.U. and Holy Cross means not that we're on the up staircase but that they're on the down.

"To leave a conference is a very profound and difficult decision," McInerney says. "It means you must find other opponents, and that's not the easiest thing to do. I've been amazed at how far ahead most football programs are scheduled.

"Then you get into the problem of who do you schedule, because you have to come up with at least minimal guarantees of money. If we want to step up the ladder, there's the question of whether our program would be attractive enough, or whether our stadium would be large enough to bring in the kind of money necessary to attract larger teams.

"To step out of the Yankee Conference would have to be backed up by substantial financing, and at the moment I don't see the financing. While many of the alumni would certainly like to step up, I'm not certain that they would be willing to participate financially in the process."

While the step-up movement has ground to a barely audible halt, the anti-jock forces have made some headway. At the first meeting this fall of the Athletic Council, seven of the fifteen smiling faces will belong to students. No other school in the country has greater student representation in athletic policy-making, because the NCAA simply wouldn't allow it.

Until the Faculty Senate decided last spring to revamp the council, the lone student member was the president of the student government. Now, not even the Director of Athletics has a vote. McInerney says he doesn't mind, and he downplays the possibility of a pitched battle between the students on the council and Boyden's inner circle.

"I don't know how much power the council will wield," he says. "I think that will be pretty much a function of the kind of people that are on it and the interest they generate in it. I've been in administration long enough to know that some relatively modest groups can be very powerful.

"As I understand it, their role is advisory, not legislative. But if they're a strong advisory group you're probably going to follow their recommendations."

A screening committee consisting of a student government representative, one residential area president, an athletic council member and two members of minority groups will soon be interviewing applicants. SGA President Larry Ladd, with the expected rubber stamp of the Student Senate, will pick the seven new members on the basis of the committes recommendations.

"I think we should have students who are sympathetic to the athletic program, but not uncritically," says Ladd. "If I was sure that the overwhelming majority of students felt the way I do about athletics, I'd load the council with people who felt that way. But I'm not sure."

His way? "Intercollegiate athletics, as they are now, reward all the wrong things. They are dehumanizing, and they don't contribute to the education of the students. As I see it, everything that is done on a university campus should be judged on the basis of whether or not it relates to education.

"I would like minorities to be well represented by the students on the council, even over-represented. Because traditionally the faculty members of the athletic council werewhite,gung-hoforathletics. They didn't have any perceptions beyond what the athletic director told them.

Frank McInerney: "...at least the second best athletic director in UMass History."

"The program is supposed to serve the students. When it comes to spending money to fix up a dorm that looks like a ghetto or putting more money in the athletic program, the choice is clear to me. You use the money where it will do the most good for the students."

At the center of the dispute, as usual, is the athletic scholarship. Ladd supports the decision by the Yankee Conference, later shoved aside for the time being, to require that athletic scholarships be given only to those in financial need. Take a jock to lunch only if he can't spring for it himself.

"The University should no longer buy athletes at auctions," says Ladd. "We should be a leader, not a follower in this regard. Students who want to come here should receive an equal chance at scholarship aid whatever the Yankee Conference decides. No one should be bribed to come here."

McInerney's reply would be the standard one, that if all schools operated on this basis, everything would be peachy and the inordinate emphasis on recruiting would be reduced. "To the group that opposes athletics, my only response, and I speak as a non-athlete, is that in our culture sports are enormously important. So it's not unusual that a university would have a large athletic program.

"Whether we like it or not, a great deal of the judgments that are brought to bear on a university comes from impressions gained on the fields and the quality of the teams. It's difficult for most people to get excited about the latest achievement in the physics laboratory or the best honors thesis written in the English department. I'm not downgrading these activities. It's too bad our culture doesn't place more value on them.

"But people often respond to a university in terms of the success of its athletic teams. Consequently, it seems to me that the trustees, the faculty and the students would be well advised to make sure that the athletic program is of a quality that will make people say, 'Oh yeah, UMass Amherst. Great place.' You penetrate and find how they made that decision, and it's probably because they felt the football team did a good job or because they saw the magnificent stadium or because the baseball team went to the NCAA finals.

"I think those who would end athletics would be amazed at how fast other forms of aid would stop coming to the university. You heard a hell of a lot more about the University of Buffalo when it had football; now you don't hear about Buffalo."

The anti-jock element poohpoohs the idea of powerhouse teams as public relations vehicles. Depending on how well the dissidents are represented on the athletic council, they could have considerable influence, perhaps far beyond their numbers.

But other tacky problems await the new athletic director. One is the failure of UMass even to move perceptively towards its own hockey rink. "I've had three delegations in the office already, saying, 'Let's build a hockey rink.' Task, 'Where's the money coming from?' and they seem to indicate that the students would help out. Of course, these are people who are wildly for sports."

The packed houses at hockey and basketball games have moved UMass to schedule two games in each sport this year in the Springfield Civic Center. What if the students bitch? "The attitude is: let's try it and see what happens. If the students support it, fine. If they don't, their message is clear--get back on campus.

"But the students shouldn't forget the university receives a great deal of its life and vigor from the people of the Commonwealth. It's going to give an opportunity to other people besides those in the immediate Amherst area to conveniently see our teams in a very plush setting."

Another problem will be how to keep the personality clashes to a minimum. He already has avoided one by reaching "an understanding" with Vic Fusia, the football coach in exile as "Director of Promotions." Fusia is receiving a full professor's salary--that title was bestowed on him, as it was previously on former basketball Matt Zunic, because only under that title could he receive enough money to attract him here.

Fusia has, of course, achieved tenure, and is now in charge of preparing the football programs, establishing radio contracts and handling various other promotional chores.

"Any athletic program needs constant promotion," says McInerney, "and this university needs all the promotion it can get."

Turning Points

In the most recent issue of "Esquire", there is a small insert called "College Preview, Fall '72." Described as "a selective guide to: what we are willing to recommend you should do, and what we are not willing to recommend you should do," the little booklet is a comdeminium of factual information divided rather superficially, in categories of good and bad. From the booklet we have derived this list of films set for fall release:

Deliverance (fall), screenplay by James Dickey, from his book. Jon Voight, Burt Reynolds. Already released in New York, the film has been described as the one "Straw Dogs" pretended to be. It is the story of four suburban types who spend a weekend canoeing in the Georgian wilds and is something of a machohorror story made real.

The Getaway (Dec.), directed by Sam Peckinpah (Straw Dogs, The Wild Bunch). Steve McQueen, Ali MacGraw. Sam Peckinpah is having a busy year: first "Straw Dogs," not everyone's favorite picture, than the lovely (and much ignored) "Junior Bonner", and now this story of a latter-day Bonnie and Clyde.

Sleuth (Dec.), directed by Joseph Mankiewicz, written by Anthony Shaffer (based on his play). Sir Laurence Olivier, Michael Caine. This masterful suspense play, still playing to near capacity in New York, concerns infidelity and the brutal game two men play in a British manor home. A devious husband invites his wife's lover over for an unusual evening.

The King of Marvin Gardens (fall), directed by Bob Rafaelson. (Five Easy Pieces). Jack Nicholson, Bruce Dern. The first film by the duo who made "Five Easy Pieces" such a refreshing experience. The story of two brothers living in Atlantic City.

Bad Company (Oct.), directed by Robert Benton, written by David Newman & Robert Benton (Bonnie and Clyde). Barry Brown, Jeff Bridges, Joshua Hill Lewis, Jerry Hauser. Written by the 'Bonnie and Clyde", "What's Up Doc?" writing team, this is the story of young men who go west to escape the civil war. Directed by Benton, his first, and set for premiere at the New York Film Festival.

The Heartbreak Kid (Dec.), directed by Elaine May from original Neil Simon screenplay. Cybill Shepherd, Charles Grodin, Eddie Albert, Sr. While on his honeymoon, the groom falls for another girl.

A Separate Peace (Oct.), based on John Knowles's novel, directed by Larry Peerce (Goodbye, Columbus). Filmed on location at Philip Exeter Academy, where the John Knowles classic story of troubled adolescent supposedly took place, Larry Peerce has attempted to make a film of the classic story of a friendship with disastrous consequences. Filmed with mostly unknowns.

Last Tango in Paris (fall). Bernardo Bertolucci (The Conformist) directs Marlon Brando, Maria Schneider, Jean-Pierre Leaud. Bertolucci's first film since his dazzling "The Conformist". An American in Paris has an affair with a young girl after his wife's curious suicide. Brando's first film since "The Godfather".

"1776" (Nov.), direct from Broadway. William Daniels (John Adams), Howard Da Silva (Ben Franklin), Ken Howard (Thomas Jefferson), Donald Madden (John Dickinson), David Ford (John Hancock), others. The celebrated Broadway musical, one of the few recent shows with some substance somewhere in all the fun. On the stage, the American Revolution was done with great wit and style.

Marlon Brando in Bernardo Bertolucci's Last Tango In Paris. His first film since The Godfather and Bertolucci's first since The Conformist. Set for a fall release.

Heat (fall). A Warhol production, directed by Paul Morrissey. Joe Dallesandro (Trash), Sylvia Miles. Child star trying a comeback and aging game-show actress exploit each other. Probably the first Warhol film with a coherent plot.

The Darwin Adventure (Oct.), produced by Joseph Strick, directed by Jack Couffer. Darwin's long voyage on the "Beagle. Instructive.

Jeremiah Johnson (Dec.), Robert Redford, Will Geer, Allyn Ann McLerie, Stefan Gierasch. Adventure and survival in the wilderness. Now making the Film Festival circuit.

The Widower (fall), produced and directed by Alan J. Pakula. Maggie Smith, Timothy Bottoms (The Last Picture Show). Miss this. From summer previews this comedy melodrama about a prim older woman and an asthmatic dropout who have an affair was considered funny in parts, but disappointing in all it bathos. Probably being worked on.

Young Winston (Oct.), written and produced by Carl Foreman, directed by Richard Attenborough, Robert Shaw, Anne Bancroft, Simon Ward. Can a lonely, loveless youth find the stuff of greatness in reckless adventure? Churchill could. Great reviews from London.

Man of La Mancha (Dec.). Peter O'Toole, Sophia Loren and James Coco. The Impossible Dream pursued; everybody sings. It was dumb on the stage and using the obvious specious judgement a film short can bring, looks more dumb upon the screen. Don Quixote tilts windmills and searches for the Impossible Dream.

Travels with My Aunt (Nov.). Graham Green's novel directed by George Cukor. Maggie Smith, Alec McGowen, Lou Gossett, Robert Stephens. The sunnier side of Greeneland. Originally set for Katherine Hepburn, but watch Maggie Smith age.

Under Milk Wood (Oct.). Dylan Thomas' beauty. Richard Burton, Peter O'Toole, Elizabeth Taylor, Glynis Johns, Vivien Merchant, others. Goos reviews from London.

Child's Play (Oct.), produced by David Merrick, directed by Sidney Lumet from the Broadway play. James Mason, Robert Preston, Beau Bridges. Boys' school teacher control his pupils' minds. An interesting play; mixes elements of gothic and psychological interpretation with interesting success. Brando was set to play, but couldn't get along with Merrick.

The Ceremony (fall), directed by Nagisa Oshima, the best of post-Kurosawa generation. Crack-up of rich, powerful and corrupt family. If Faulkner had been Japanese. . . .

State of Seige (Nov.). Costa-Gavras directs Yves Montand as a U.S. official kidnapped by South American guerillas.

Savage Messiah (fall), produced and directed by Ken Russell (The Devils, The Boyfriend). Scott Antony, Dorothy Tutin, Helen Mirren. Life of sculptor Henri Gaudier-Brzeska and his love affair with an older woman. Advance reports say its somewhere between the graphic "Devils" and the more subdued "Boyfriend."

Images (fall), directed by Robert Altman. Susannah York (best actress at Cannes '72). Rene Auberjonois Strange, complex psychological drame. York looks like she may take all acting Awards this Winter.

Dumbo (Oct.). Walt Disney's 1941 entry revived. About the little elephant who thought he couldn't.

Brother Sun, Sister Moon (Dec.), directed by Franco Zeffirelli, with musical collaboration by Donovan. Graham Faulkner, Valentina Cortese, Ira Furstenberg. The conversion of Francesco Bernardone from wastrel to Saint Francis of Assissi.

Lady Sings The Blues (Oct.). Diana Ross as Billie Holiday; Billie Dee Williams, Virginia Capers, Sid Melton. Believe it or not.

Up the Sanadox (Dec.), from Anne Richardson Roiphe's book. Barbara Streisand, David Selby. Housewife has a rich fantasy life. Cut your hair! They're filming now in Williamstown and want extras with that Fifties collegiate look.

Capricious Birth Of The Volkswagon

By FRANK JOHNSON

The Volkswagen Story (1971) by K.B. Hopfinger Henley-on-Thames, England: G.T. Foulis & Co., Ltd.

The ugly but ubiquitous Volkswagen, no longer an unusual sight to behold, has in fact a rather unusual history of its birth and development which underlines the success of its achievement. Though many owners of Volkswagens may not at first be interested in the story, K.B. Hopfinger's book makes for such interesting reading that even the most unmechanical or unhistorical fans of the "bug" should be attracted to it.

Although The Volkswagen Story is a relatively new edition, the manuscript actually appeared in earlier form in 1954 and was then titled "Beyond Expectation". The newer version contains numerous revisions and more up-to-date material, needed because quite obviously much has happened to the Volkswagen since 1954.

As Hopfinger illustrates, no analysis of the Volkswagen would be complete without a history of Dr. Ferdinand Porsche, reknowned racing car designer responsible for the development of the "Beetle". A glimpse at the life of Porsche is thus a glimpse of the old order, because The Volkswagen Story takes the reader back to earlier days when Porsche was connected directly or indirectly to many illustrious Austrian and German automotive firms, either as a designer or as a man charged with production. More than any other figure, Porsche pioneered not only the idea of well-made, well-designed racing cars for the few, but the development of well-made, well-designed economy cars for the many. In a refreshing documentary tending towards a biography, Hopfinger shows how Porsche was already at work on a "Peoples' Car" (then known as a project called the "Volksauto") when Adolf Hitler became Chancellor of Germany in 1933. After the Nazis seized power, it was only a matter of time before the political implications of a car to win popular support for the regime brought Hitler to Porsche.

The Volkswagen Story elucidates the crucial stage in the planning of the Volkswagen in 1933. The earlier "Volksauto", which was to be produced by arrangement with Zundapp, a major German motorcycle manufacturing firm, was projected to sell for 2,500 German Marks. Hitler insisted that Porsche trim the price of the proposed Volkswagen to 1,000 Marks; in those days prior to dollar devaluation, worth about $150. Not only was this difficult order to be filled, but it was to be filled immediately. Porsche and his designers worked furiously to meet the deadline. Production problems were ultimately to delay the debut of the Volkswagen until about 1937.

Several incidental details provide much irony to the history of the VW. First, the original cost of the car, made with the production techniques then in practice in Germany, would not have been economically feasiable without methods employed in the United States. Not only did Porsche's men take fact-finding trips to the U.S. in the mid 'Thirties, but they solicited automotive, German-born engineers then living in the States to return to the Third Reich, with such inducements as high salaries, good fringe benefits, and patriotic fervor. Second, an arrangement for buying the car via saving stamps was made to many German workers, and several of them did accumulate enough savings to buy a VW; World War II prevented the delivery. Following the war, many stamp-holders later petitioned the VW factory and actually won their case- Mr. Hopfinger tells us that the last such award took place as late as 1964. Thirdly, even though from the start the designers of the Volkswagen were German, it was American production techniques and skill that dominated the project, and in 1945 it was the Allies who preserved the manufacturing complex at Wolfsburg (in northern German) that would eventually insure its recovery and ultimately its success: like most Germny industry, the Volkswagen plant was adapted to military production after 1939 and, because it was a priority target, was heavily damaged during the War.

Though Hopfinger's book is exceedingly well-written and organized, there are a few annoyances which detract from its overall excellence. Every so often an automotive concept cannot be described without some technical jargon: words like "Sleeve valves" "horizontally-opposed" and "railing arm torsion bar wheel suspension" creep into the pages and may baffle the uninformed reader. This point may be defended by the probability that technically-minded readers would initially be attracted to the work, but it is reasonable to expect a glossary of terms included at some point in the book. Overall, a good bit of the book might be condensed from the mass of technical details that at times seem a trifle repetitious.

Furthermore, although illustrations are used in the book, most of them are simply-captioned photographs that do not correspond with the text appearing opposite the illustration. Mr. Hopfinger would be well advised to place the photographs in relation to the explanatory text, because the reader frequently is left to flip back to a picture cited about 40 pages earlier. The Volkswagen Story, in addition, sorely needs occasional diagrams or even simple sketches to illustrate the concepts discussed in the manuscript. If and when the book is revised in the future once more, these suggestions definitely should be implemented. (The "revisions" enumerated since 1954, incidentally, take on a decidedly patronizing stance towards the VW manufacturing concern.)

The overall effectiveness of The Volkswagen Story, however, is superior. The book abounds in captivating details about the capricious birth of a car that today is taken for granted by most people. The strength of Mr. Hopfinger's book is in part contained in its ability to withstand revision and also to inform the reader as fully as possible about the VW's technical development. The interested reader would be hard put to find a better book on the subject.

Poor Richard's Interview: Kubrick's Underrated Source

The following interview took place Monday, September 11, in the living room of the Lord Jeffrey Inn. The interviewers were from radio stations WMUA and WFCR. Poor Richard's was also present (but mute). PR gratefully thanks staff member Bill Densmore for the thankless job of transcribing

PR: We're talking with Arthur Anthony Burgess, author of A Clockwork Orange and numerous other books, although he's known mostly for The Clockwork Orange because of a movie by Stanley Kubrick. I suppose you've been asked this question a multitude of times, but for our sake, and for the record one more time, what is your reaction to Stanley Kubrick's film?

AB: I've seen it now three times, not because I was tracing out the performances but because in the way of work I had to see it more than the first time, and because I think it's the first conceivable filmic rendition of the novel. I can think of only one other version on film that has been absolutely faithful, and that was Polanski's Rosemary's Baby, which wasn't a novel. In the making of A Clockwork Orange Kubrick didn't so much take the script as use the book itself. He did a very close rendering indeed and I think Kubrick is brilliant indeed in his visual effects which match the verbal effects of the book.

The title, by the way, is A Clockwork Orange. There are various reasons for that. The Clockwork Orange — it doesn't fit — I wonder if I need explain why. It's because the phrase "a clockwork orange" is Cockney — an east London phrase, he's as queer as a clockwork orange . . . .

PR: Did you enjoy the music?

AB: Well most the music was mine — at least the major element, Beethoven's Ninth Symphony — was already there in the book, so I gave it to Kubrick. The rest, yes, there was some brilliant electronic work, especially at the beginning, done by a man who was working at Princeton when I was there although he didn't know I was there, and I didn't know he was there. This was some brilliant work with electronic music. But the most brilliant touch of all the music was not Kubrick's, but the touch brought in by the young hero, young actor — who is the fellow — MacDowell . . . who starts singing in the rain. This of course Kubrick now gets credit for. This was brilliant. It was more brilliant than they knew, because of all the poptunes of the last fifty years or more, this song is the happiest. And it's also in many ways the most original. It doesn't break up using the A B to A, it doesn't make any point or committment; it just says, "I am happy", and it's pure neutral happiness. And I noticed a curious thing which was too late to use — That it fits in perfect counterpoint with the great tune of Beethoven in the Ninth Symphony.

PR: I hadn't noticed that myself.

I'm interested in exploring some other areas. Perhaps you'd relate it to the film, perhaps not. Here's sort of a general question. You said that the movie was very faithful to the book. When you were writing the book, did you have any idea that it might be made into a movie at any time at all?

AB: Well it was written originally with four young men in mind who had not yet become famous — these are the Rolling Stones. I had a very strong image in my mind of the young Mick Jagger — I say the young Mick Jagger because it was the Mick Jagger of twelve years ago. In some ways I can claim to be the father of the very notion, the force of the group working together with a very fierce reputation. And Jagger and the Rolling Stones have been associated with it for a long time. They wanted to make the film for themselves as late as 1964. But of course the permissive society hadn't happened then; we were scared of putting things on the screen that they don't take for granted. And so the thing was put off and put off. Although the Rolling Stones contributed money to the enterprise. And I'm sorry in many ways they never made it, because Jagger was the ideal Alex — now of course he's too old.

PR: Did you see his film "Performance"?

AB: Yes indeed. I think he's a brilliant man. I'm very fond of Jagger. He's a young man of tremendous intelligence, tremendous personality, tremendous sexuality. He's kind of a modern man in excelsis, because he's a rather diabolic character, rather diabolic, of which he's well aware. But not dangerous. Let's put it this way, unless, he's dangerous like a bottle of whiskey is dangerous — unless taken in small doses. But to drink Jagger whole as some of the young people have done is very dangerous. It's like drinking from a black mass. He's very much a man about time, and a man who I would have dearly loved to see associated with this film.

PR: If you had the possibility of having any of your other novels made into a film, which one would you choose?

AB: Well this has been attempted so very often and as you know film making is rather like an iceberg, the film directioning made only constitute a very small portion of the whole substance, and I was in Hollywood four years ago making a film — a very big film of one of my books, a novel I wrote about the life of Shakespeare called Nothing Like the Sun — which fell through because Warner Brothers itself fell through. It changed hands, a new head, all the profits were sold to another company. And this film is still limping away somewhere in the background trying to find a backer.

Other films have been suggested . . . . there was one film that was underway, a book of mine called Endiby about a dispected poet, it was ready — the script was done, the director was there, and then the producer suddenly dropped dead at the Cannes Film Festival. A young man, he suddenly dropped dead of a heart attack, so that film was shelved. . . . .

On the whole, I'm not too happy about films being made about my own books because the book is then regarded as the raw material of the film. Unfortunately the eye is regarded as the major organ in the intellectual or asthetic election so to speak. And a film is regarded as a major work whereas the novel tends to become a rathdim subphosting that you put on a shelf. And the making of a film of one of my novels has not done me any good as an author. I'm really regarded in a sort of awe as one who feeds Kubrick raw material.

I think the biggest insult that was paid to me this year was to be asked by Playboy magazine to follow Kubrick around like a dog and write the definitive interview. And I said why don't you write to Kubrick and ask him to do the definitive interview of me. No reply, but the ending of all relations with Playboy. Those kind of things happen.

So I think that this business of translating from one medium to another anyway is dangerous. I mean a book is a book is a book. A book is made up of words, and any rendering into another medium, however brilliant, is not the original thing, and there is a danger of distortion. . .I'd be happier to be like Henry James who has had a movie made since his death. But he would never think in terms of that. He was writing words and words were words and remained words.

PR: Does that begin to creep into your writing now when you're writing a book you think, "Well maybe this will be made into a film someday and maybe I want this to be a film so I can get. . . .

AB: Well, I try to avoid that and a very interesting thing I can tell you about this is that when I met Kubrick during the screen of A Clockwork Orange he asked me to do a look on Napoleon for him. He'd known for some time that I was trying to write a novel in the form of a symphony, you know, with four movements. And the idea I had in mind was to write a Jane Austen novel in the shape of a Mozart symphony. But then he says, "well, why not do what you really have in mind which is Napoleon in the form of the Eroica symphony. So I said, "I'll do it, but you can't make a film of it." And I gave him the first sixty pages of the novel and he said, "you're right, I can't, the whole thing is too auditory, and cannot be translated into film. So I'm happy because I got free of this incubus possible film adaptation so I can go ahead with a concept which is essentially new to film, you know, the whole story is told in terms of musical form, like the Eroica symphony. And it can never be conceivably be translated into the film medium.

PR: How are you structuring the novel? Is it historically accurate? Or are you taking a lot of it...

AB: It's historically absolutely sound except that one has to attempt some psychological definition of motives and so on, but the aim is this—to make each movement, each section of the novel, correspond exactly in length, and somewhat in shape, to a movement in the Beethoven Eroica. Thus the first movement is a hundred pages long, the second movement the same length, because both play twenty minutes; the scherzio plays about five minutes so there's thirty minutes, and the finale plays about sixteen minutes so that comes out to about eighty pages. And, I have the score before me while I'm writing so each section of the movement corresponds to so many pages and a particular mood of the novel.

Thus the first movement is allegro and it's very rapid. It portrays Napoleon as a young general and before you know where you are he's Emperor. We don't miss out any intervening historical stages, but we wonder how the hell he managed to do it because the change is so rapid. Then the next movement is very slow beginning with the retreat from Moscow, flashbacks, self-searching, spiritual communings—much slower; and then the scherzio, rapid again, and finally a set of variations corresponding with Beethoven's last movement. It's very interesting but to me it's totally un-Kubrickian and I think totally unfilmic.

PR: Are you worried that this is becoming perhaps just an exercise, that it may not be very readable when it's done, or that it'll hold together?

AB: Who can say? The author himself can never say what is readable and what is not; he's lived so long with not only the concept of the words themselves (he's always reading the words and rewriting them) that eventually he becomes numb, he can't take in at all the significance of the words or the sound of them, and he has to leave that not to a publisher, but to some sympathetic friend or sympathetic critic who he knows, and even then one can never be sure. It is impossible to even arrive at a conception of whether a novel is readable—readable to whom? I find Harold Robbins very readable but I wouldn't want to write like Harold Robbins. I think if you like to write fiction which delves a little into the human psyche you've got to be brought up short occasionally by difficulties, you can't just run through it without difficulty. You have to labor a little. And if people don't want to labor they needn't buy the book. One will never be rich, but it doesn't matter.

PR: Were there any peculiar circumstances in your life when you wrote Clockwork Orange?

AB: Yes, indeed there were, there were several (I have to give a talk about it tonight), but the main autobiographical element which is in the novel but not in the film was the beating up of my first wife by a gang of (I'm afraid to say) four American GI deserters from the second world war during the blackout in London. It was not a sexual assault, it was a robbery. But they were brutal about it (I was away in the Army at the time), and this thing I had to live with, and the only way you can exorcse a sickness is to write about it. So I had to get this out of my system somehow. And in the script which I wrote for Kubrick (which Kubrick didn't use), I made the author in the house where Alex rapes the wife (breaks everything up) write a book called "A Clockwork Orange" and I called him Burgess. In other words it was a portrait of myself when I was trying to relive in a kind of stylized form the kind of thing that had happened to my own wife—see it, try to learn charity, and try and understand particularly that aggression is part of the human makeup (you see) in all of us and we can't try and live without it. The whole point of the place where this happens in the film (and in the book) home, is that this is the place where charity is supposed to begin. Both protagonists in the film, Alex and F. Alexander, both fail to find charity in the space called home. A small bit of symbolism which people might be interested in.

PR: Do you think this lack of charity that Alex and his fellow droogs found in the home was the main reason why they were so violent, why they struck out against society?

AB: I don't think so. As I saw it when writing the book they're aggressive because they're human beings. The aggression has not been tamed or channeled into more creative directions and so it has to work out on a purely animalistic level.

They're helped to do this by the very nature of contemporary or future society, which is becoming an increasingly (I think) scene habitic one. You know, people watching television all the time, people keeping off the streets. Life going inwards rather than outwards (our cities are not).

Like the city I live in. I live in the city of Rome which is an outward looking city where you have piazzas and outdoor cafes and you live your life outside your home, you don't watch television all the time.

But increasingly in England, and in America, people are inside, and this encourages, I think, a special race to take over the streets. The streets are no longer for everyone. They're just for a particular sector of society that regards the streets as its domain as a wild beast regards the jungle as its domain. I don't blame society otherwise for Alex's behavior, you know he's just a human being who's very immature but had the characteristic, three characteristics, he's aggressive, he loves beauty, he's linguistically inventive. That's what makes a human being, to have these three qualities.

Rock of Ages: A Goldmine Of Music

Rock of Ages
The Band
Capitol Records
BY JIM LAVRAKAS

"Corn on the fields, listen to the rice
when the wind blows 'cross the water
King Harvest has surely come..."

The coming of the Harvest season is a fabulous time of the year. The time for reaping has a special aura about it because of the sense of death that it holds; it is a special death that has no permanency, rather, it holds a foreboding of harsher times to come, and, finally, the cyclical rebirth. The Band's new album, Rock of Ages, is an example and a product of this cyclical process. It is a fantastically live album with songs that go right back to their first album, and includes several new ones.

Recorded live at the Academy of Music in New York City, "on the eclipse of the new year 1971-1972", the atmosphere that pervades the two album set is nostalgic, festive, and mystical. The Band has always been a band of mystery. The periodic use of biblical references in their lyrics, the extremely professional, restrained attitude they take on stage gives them the image of the intent artists almost oblivious to their audience at times. Stories that they refused to be on a television show because they could not play live helps give strength to their mystique.

Before their days as The Band they were the back up artists for Bob Dylan. If there is one person today with a mystique all his own it is Bob Dylan. The Band includes Dylan in their list of people to thank on the album. He also appears in a photo on the album jacket. We are not sure whether Dylan actually plays on stage or plays the part of the normal concert goer. Normal or not, Dylan's presence reinforces the special mystique of the album. Here is an album then, that was recorded at the first of the year and has been a seed growing throughout the season, and has finally been reaped at Harvest time.

The albums are beautifully balanced, both in the choice of songs and the sheer quality of the musical engineering. One complaint that is leveled at the Band is that the music of their live performances does not vary from the music on their albums. Rock of Ages shows this criticism to be unsubstantiated and ridiculously off base.

From the start of side one we are in for a treat. "We're going to try something tonight that we've never done before...and we'd like to bring out the best horn men in New York to help us do it." And what they help do, these five experts (with tenor sax man Garth Hudson) is to bring a fuller more intricate sound to the Band's live show.

Each side of the two albums is thoughtfully balanced. Starting with a new song, "Don't You Do It", everyone gets a chance to quietly show off. It is superbly engineered, and, for a moment we almost feel that the song could not be outdone.

But it is, immediately. "King Harvest (Has Surely Come)" has to be absolutely the best song ever written by the Band. It stirs up a feeling of Harvest time, and also brings an understanding of the fight for labor unions which took place in this country earlier in the century. It is fantastic that the atmosphere of those times are actually drawn from us in this song. We could see Joe Hill, the zealous martyr, writing this song. The lyrics are subtle on one hand, and pointed and fierce on the other. The horn arrangement and final guitar soliloquy are pure feeling of autumn in sound. The Band suggests with their music, compresses and precise suggestions that the listener responds to readily. It is appropriate that after this anachronous song that one New Year concert goer bellows, "Break the clock!"

"Caledonia Mission", from the first, is representative of the early Band sound. "Get Up Jake" has definite Dylan influences in it. It's twangy whine sounds like Dylan of old. "W.S. Walcott Medicine Show", from the album Stage Fright, is a little rough on the edges here, yet it still captures the bouncy frivolousness that made it such a good song.

Side two contains the theme song from Stage Fright, also "Wheels On Fire" from the first album, and three songs ("The Night They Drove Old Dixie Down", "Across The Great Divide", and "Rag Mama Rag") from the Brown Album. These three songs are one of the high points in Rock of Ages. The horn arrangement by Allen Toussaint introduces and complements the vocal harmonization in the first song, assists in the transition from that song to "Across The Great Divide" and finishes the harmony in "Divide". Some of the greatest lyrics ever written by the Band are in these three songs.

Side three has a song from each of the previous albums. "The Weight" is relatively unchanged from the earlier cut; it is still a funky look into shotgun marriages. "The Shape I'm In", a drunkards theme song, is unique with it's throbbing electric organ. "Unfaithful Servant" is a bit whiny and dragged out. Rather, it feels dragged out because of the monotonal quality in it's sound. It is a good song, mellow and meloncholy, yet just a little long. The essence of the carnival atmosphere is captured in "Life Is A Carnival". "Life is a carnival, believe it or not. Life is a carnival, two bits a shot", sums up the cavalier spirit of the song.

The final side of the album is an interesting one. "The Genetic Method" is quintessential Band instrumental; the organ here is the driving force and pulls us through the song. When the organ brakes into "Auld Lang Syne" the crowd responds with glee. When the organ brakes into "Chest Fever", the song that first brought the Band renown, the audience raises the roof. The song is rearranged and updated with a pounding beat and haunting organ. The album is completed with a rock and roll encore, a la The Band. "(I Don't Want To) Take Off My Rock And Roll Shoes" has the flavor of the old time Big Band sound-brought about by the adept use of the horn section- and the more recent identifiable beat of the boogie.

The Band prooves with their Rock of Ages that in a period of new and innovative artists, and so many are coming on the scene that a program is needed to keep track of all the competitors, they can keep up with the pace. Yet, they retain their own distinctive style, never losing the control of the mystique that has made them stand out as a singularly individualistic band. The Band is the master of the "down home" atmosphere. They are a solidly professional group and once again prove that, like the Rock of Ages, they can stand the test of time.

CARNEY

By STEVE FELD
Carney–Leon Russell (Shelter Records)

Simply, "Tight Rope" beats out Elton John's "Rocket Man" for best single of the year, and the whole record maintains a uniformly excellent pace that makes Carney easily Russell's best work to date.

Leon Russell is indeed a unique individual. Here's a guy who hangs around with everybody who's anybody in big-time rock (Dylan, Harrison, and a plethora of others), acts so cool that I was afraid he'd freeze, and presents himself like the son of Jesus. He looks like a rock star should–super-hip, highly proficient, and perpetually stoned. All of which is acceptable if only he could produce (rock-tock for make good music). Instead, in his two previous solo records what we got was rancid, offending jibberish hyped to death by Russell's charisma.

He managed to build up a large, die-hard following that goes to show that if you look the part, people will assume that everything you claim to Magazine spewed about how his last record, Leon Russell and the Shelter People was among the finest of 1971. Thousands of teenies flocked to the Joe Cocker flick, Mad Dogs and Englishmen to get off on Pretty Boy Leon as he flashed provocative poses, penetrating parvenue, and "What-Me Worry?" expressions. And of course you remember Russell from the Concert for Bangladesh? He was the one that was toking on a joint when he was sure the camera was on him.

So, kudos to Leon Russell. He fooled a lot of people (Is Paul McCartney alive?). Or as he puts it in his all-new, all-different Carney: "I'm lost in this masquerade".

Carney is everything that the other albums weren't. It is Leon Russell down-to-earth; unpretentious and downright pleasant. Leon even deemed it fitting to remove his omnipresent shades for the cover photo and we can look him right in the eye. Leon is home and among friends with Carney.

Of the album's twelve selections, only one, "Roller Derby" sounds like the previous album, and even that is the shortest song on the record. The remainder of the record is a pure delight. "Tight Rope", the opening cut is a killer. Leon graces the piano with marvelous arpeggios, in time to a wonderful syncopated up-beat. The over-dubbed electric piano of Russell's lends an atmosphere exactly like that in Lennon's "Mr. Kite".

Iespecially like the way a roll of thunder is segued next to a dark, low minor chord on the piano in "Manhattan Island Serenade". The rain-storm sound effects die down, but never leave the song's background, meticuously arranged.

"Me and Baby Jane" has poignant, reflective lyrics, while the melody has a striking resemblance to "The Weight", by the Band. And "Out in the Woods", with a tribal beat and separately recorded vocal interplay, keep up the excellence.

On the longest cut, "Magic Mirror", I keep waiting and waiting for a crash of drums and some guitar licks that never come, leaving behind a good chance to effectively break the song into the potentially heavy rocker that it could have been. "If the Shoe Fits" contains some malice aimed at the groupies of the rock scene, a bit tongue in cheek that shows us Leon's righteous sense of humor.

The thing that impresses me the most about Carney is the consistance of excellence throughout: the songs are superb (Leon wrote them all), the arrangements are imaginative, and the performance is professional. Take a bow, Leon.

Jo Jo Gunne

By KEN BLOOM

Every once in a while a good old fashioned R & R band just happens to raise its talents above those of the many thousands of bands who are trying to get their garbage together. The secret of staying power in todays music requires not only originality and lightness, but a few balls thrown in for good measure.

Around the middle of this past summer Asylum Records, a subdivision of Atlantic, released an album entitled "Jo Jo Gunne" by a band of the same name. The album didn't mean all that much to me until around the end of August. At a first listen it was just some good time party music. But it seems that that feeling doesn't last too long once you decide to take it seriously. This album is good clean hard R & R. Its something that "Rock & Roll" has been lacking since the demise of the Beatles and in my most prolific opinion for what its worth, even the early Stones. I guess the easiest way to put it is that this album is just plain fun to listen to. You don't have to try to sit

Jo Jo Gunne consists of four very energetic and creative guys. Jay Ferguson handles the key boards and does it with a percision that is overwhelming. Matthew Andes pounds out his marbles on lead guitar while his next of kin Mark Andes, holds down more than his own on bass. Curley Smith on drums ties up all the loose ends nicely but at some points is rather over powering. All four of these guys can sing your sox off so don't be surprised to hear different voices on different cuts.

Rumor has some to believe that two of the members of Jo Jo Gunne were at one time playing with Spirit. A couple of months back Spirit split and then regrouped without the auspices of Jay Ferguson and Mat Andes. After checking liner notes on different albums I can verify this information. If you listen to the second cut on side two (Academy Award) you may hear some familiar strains from Spirits "Fresh Garbage." I can't say that I'm disappointed because I thought Spirit to be quite underated in the talent department.

As far as what to look for on the album... its all very good but rather than anlyze each cut I'll just drop a few titles that I think make the album complete. On side one the first cut "Run Run Run" if I'm not mistaken was released and lost as a single. I can't say why it was lost but its definitely worth finding again. The third cut "Babylon" will more than likely be released as a single. Its one of the best cuts on the record but then again judge for yourself. On side two the first cut "99 days" seems to bring everything together on the album even before its finished. Incidently with the acception of "Run Run Run," "Shake that Fat," and "Take it Easy," which were co-pened by Ferguson and Mat Andes, nine out of nine cuts were written by Jay Ferguson. So I guess if there's a main man in the group, he's it.

There's not a whole lot more I can say about this record without telling you to go out and buy it. It is worth listening to if you like good Rock & Roll and if you really want to find out first hand if what I've been saying is true, go see them in Boston the end of the month. They'll be playing with Jay Giles.

"Jo Jo Gunne is good Rock & Roll."

Zappa Gets Homee

By JEFF CLAYTON

FRANK ZAPPA: WAKA/JAWAKA-HOT RATS; BIZARRE-REPRISE MS2094 SIDE 1: BIG SWIFTY (17:26);SIDE 2: YOUR MOUTH (3:11), IT MIGHT JUST BE A ONE SHOT DEAL (4:17), WAKA/JAWAKA (11:18).

From time to time Frank Zappa gathers together a conglomeration of any number of musicians, dubs it the Hot Rats, and uses it to perform material which is technically impossible or commercially unadvisable for his Mothers of Invention. Mr. Zappa seems to have a pretty good idea of what the Mothers audience expects (rock-blues-cliches-dirt-orchestrated weirdness comedy-hostility) and has apparently decided against force-feeding his following too much of what it is manifestly unprepared to accept. That is, his music.

The Hot Rats is Frank's way of relieving the congestion of so much pent-up music. His first Hot Rats LP, appropriately titled Hot Rats, was an orchestral outburst of overpowering Hollywood lushness and an ear-bewildering series of dubs, overdubs, over-overdubs--more layers than an artichoke, ladies and gentlemen, the work of a master arranger, producer, studio technician, you-name-it, and the compositions were NOT BAD AT ALL. But it was above all pretty. It was so remarkably pretty that in England it reached the number one LP spot in 1970.

Waka/Jawaka is the same but moreso. I don't predict anything like the same success for it, simply because it lacks an electric rocker like "Willie the Pimp", but as usual sales probably won't reflect on the album's quality; it's as good if not better.

Fans will remember how Hot Rats had in places a kind of south-of-the-border flavor. I was surprised to find that "Big Swifty" leads off all-out Latin, complete with massive brass section assembled from tapes. All the Zappa trademarks are on this one, however: the apothesis of basement-level cliche melodies, spruced up until unrecognizable and played with near-ultimate verve and musicianship, interspersed with fast guitar breaks (not unlike John McLaughlin's; I guess we can assume he's heard Inner Mounting Flame, electricly renovated jazz piano runs, a ring modulated bell chorus, the works, all underlaid with bizarre stacatto percussion. The whole piece is thoughtfully laid out in something like Sonata Form crossed with the Top 40 single: statement, improvisation, short bridge, improvisation, restatement, long improvisation, finale. It's gorgeous.

Side 2 opens with "Your Mouth", and old-style blues with a message: "Your mouth/ Is your religion/You put faith in a hole like that..." Another Zappa treatment of an old subject: faithless women. A period piece, like everything else he does.

Next comes "It Just Might be a One Shot Deal", the lyrics to which I include as a public service. The voice tracks have been mixed into tantalizing obscurity. "m-m-mmph. Sigh. If a funny conqueror decide to lend his hand/ Then he reach in the front and dump a mile of sand/ Across the rug along the hall up to the umbrella stand/ Chorus: That you been watchin' all the time/ Watchin' all the time.

And if a forrrest grrows upp/ Frrrom the dirrrt on the floorrr/ Then to the flak-windowsearcher/ Had you stop beside the doorrr/ You're beginning to get worried/ You're not going out no more

Chorus: And it's confusing to your mind/ Just consider this: You can get scared if it gets too real/ You can get scared if it gets too real/ But you should be digginit while it's happening/ YES! YOU SHOULD BE DIGGINIT WHILE IT'S HAPPENEN!/ Cause it just might be a one shot deal. (long country solo on pedal steel by the Flying Burritos' own Sneaky Pete Kleinow) You can be lost/ And you can wanna be found/ But keep your eye on that frog/ Whenever he jump around/ Just keep a-watchin' him/ She-walla be watchin' him/ Just keep a-watchin' him/ Shewalla been hatchin' him/ AND SEE IF HE'S BROUGHT ALONG A LITTLE BAG FOR YOOOOOO, RUNT?

Immediately we break into the title track, a rich decayed cowboy movie theme that features the best Moog solo I've ever heard from Don Preston, as well as the obligatory drum solo from Aynsley Dunbar, begore a return to the theme and a long fade. Not only impressive, but hummable.

I don't know what the rock press will have to say about this one. Mothers LP's they criticize for containing "no music", Hot Rats albums for sounding like movie scores. M-m-mmph. Sigh.

Zappa is, was, and will be a collage artist. He's a splicer of tapes and ideas. Some people don't enjoy having their own lives hashed, edited, and played back to them, but in a way it's fc. their own good. It's good for you too, and you can even sing along.

MR. ZAPPA APPEARS IN PASSAIC, N.J., ON HALLOWEEN EVE.

BE THERE.

All You'll Need To Know About Paul Simon

By STEVE FELD
Simon and Garfunkle's Greatest Hits--Simon and Garfunkle (Columbia Records)

I usually avoid a greatest hits album like the plague, and for a number of reasons. First of all, chances are that the record will not be a true measure of the performer's abilities, whereas a regular release can focus and delineate on him--his strengths, shortcomings and pitfalls. Second, discrimination and planning are often thrown out of the window, leaving only the most obvious and commercial cuts for the anthology, and taking away any element of surprise. Lastly, greatest hits albums, along with records recorded live, involve considerably less expensive production costs.

Costly studio time (often $140 an hour) is eliminated, and the difference should be passed on to the consumer. But it isn't.

So, when a greatest hits album comes along that avoids most of these faults, it indeed makes for a pleasant surprise. Anyone that keeps track of these things must have long ago realized that Simon and Garfunkle, the epitome of commercial and artistic success, have never had a greatest hits album to their name. There was no hurry to release this one--it would be sure gold at any time.

It not only features an accurate sampling of the best the duo had to offer, but also contains four live numbers cleverly segued for continuity.

Paul Simon was the group's songwriter, and one of the elite few that can also be termed poet. His songs have always showed us adroit juxtaposition of melody and lyric, making many of them, moment for moment, the most rewarding of the 60's. His solo album, released in January, after the group's demise, is still one of the finest records of 1972.

Partner Art Garfunkle will be remembered most for his exquisitely controlled singing. Now pursuing movie stardom as an actor (you saw him in Catch-22 and Carnal Knowledge), his contributions to the duo's appeal were his intellectual charisma and emotionally-toned voice.

Simon and Garfunkle's Greatest Hits could have easily been a double record, but the 14 songs (!) included here are enough to satisfy both those who did follow them, and those who didn't. Included for the first time anywhere are four "in concert" numbers: "Homeward Bound", "The 59th Street Bridge Song (Feelin' Groovy)", "Kathy's Song" and "For Emily, Whenever I May Find Her". No information is given about the time or place of the show, but the audience is cheerful and responsive.

Side one includes some of S&G's earlier hits: "The Sound of Silence", a folk song transformed into rock, losing something, but at the same time gaining something else; "I Am a Rock", a stunning portrait of alienation; and "Scarborough Fair/Canticle", one of the few that Garfunkle helped pen. Closing up the side are "Mrs. Robinson" from The Graduate, and the single, "The Boxer", yet another masterpiece.

Side two is the better side if just for "Bridge Over Troubled Water" and "America", two classics that revealed Paul Simon as a maturing human in the face of uncertainty. "Bridge" has captured the hearts of the music-listening public everywhere. It is, simply, one of the finest songs ever committed to vinyl. "America" is the lesser known cut from the Bookends lp that paints a sensitive picture of quiet desperation, with a musical mood to match.

"El Condor Pasa (If I Could)", "Bookends" and "Cecelia" all display different moods and sentiments; the first combines restrained hope and quiet celebration, the second captures a mood of peaceful contemplation, and the third is a hand-clapping jubilation.

This album tells the story of Paul Simon most of all; an artist unsurpassed in terms of sheer musical and poetic genius. His songs will remain in the echelons of the untouchables for years to come.

Fritz Lang And The Film Co-Op

BY ROB BIBLER

The first Sunday night Directors/Genre Series of the Amherst Film Cooperative will feature six of Fritz Lang's American films. Lang, one of the finest directors in the history of the cinema, made a name for himself during the Golden Age of the German Cinema, the twenties, and the early thirties with such films as "Metropolis," "Der Mude Tod," "Die Nibelungen," and such characters as Franz Becker (Peter Lorre) in "M" and the notorious, master-criminal, Dr. Mabuse. Lang's American films are less fantastical than his German films, but perhaps more fascinating for all their eerie realism. Lang never made a film quite like the fantasy of "Metropolis" or the expressionist "Dr. Mabuse Der Spieler," but the singular vision of the man survived the Hollywood studio system to create a rich body of work, and some of the strangest and most thrilling films in the American cinema.

In 1932, one year after "M", Lang made a film called "The Testament of Dr. Mabuse" in which he put all the Nazi slogans into the mouth of the criminally insane Dr. Mabuse. This was his first anti-Nazi film. The film was banned by the Third Reich, and Lang was summoned to the office of Dr. Goebbels at the Ministry of Propaganda in Berlin. As Lang tells it, he wasn't very agreeable the day of the meeting, but after so many long marble corridors, armed guards, and more corridors, his resistance broke down. Finally arriving at Goebbel's office, Lang was told that Hitler greatly admired his work– especially "Metropolis"– and was offered the directorship of the German film industry. As the two men talked, Lang could see a large clock across the street and soon came to realize that Goebbels was going to keep talking until well after the banks closed. When they concluded their conversation, Lang "agreed to everything," went home, packed his bags, grabbed a few gold cuff links and took the first train to Paris. Lang's wife and collaborator, Thea von Harbou, divorced him and joined the Nazi movement.

And so, the iniquities of destiny remained a common theme in Lang's American films, but other themes such as the sudden descent of darkness, fear and death; the nightmare of chaos; and the sickness of hate and revenge took on new, and more personal, meaning. Given Lang's Nazi experience, it is not surprising to find that one of the central themes in the American work is Lang's denial of his character's presumption of living in normal and sane social orders. For Lang, such systems simply don't exist.

The cinema of Fritz Lang is the cinema of paranoia. It is also the cinema, as Andrew Sarris says, "of the nightmare, the fable, and the philosophical disertation." But Lang is a humanist, a romantic and his films don't suffer from an overdose of Teutonic heaviness. Certainly, they are not without warmth and wit.

"Man Hunt" (1941) is the film to be shown this Sunday evening, and it was Lang's first of four anti-Nazi films made in the U.S. Despite the lavish praise generally given "Fury" (and Lang's own personal preferences,) this fine thriller may be Lang's best American film.

The Lang series is shown every Sunday night, 7:15 p.m., Hampden Dining Commons at Southwest. Tuesday, "The Night of the Hunter" will be shown at 7:30 p.m., Amherst Folklore Center.

Incidentally, the Co-op needs members and volunteers. Membership in the Co-op is open to students, faculty and their families. Membership for students will be five (5) dollars per semester unless they are from Southwest Complex. Because SW has let us use their new Arts Center we are allowing their students a one (1) dollar discount. Non-students will be charged seven (7) dollars and fifty cents. Your membership card entitles you admission to all AFC movies for the designated semester, a say in what films are chosen, a newsletter and, funds permitting, some closed showings of films of special interest. Regular AFC films will be open to the public at a 75¢ charge with members seated first.

In all there will be 25-30 films shown per semester. Open admission profits will go toward the extra films and services.

negligence of the so-called film industry. . .and is hindered by the pernicious frivolities of camp, pop, and trivia." It has been our experience that this educational community has been as guilty of this as any of the mass media audience. The time has come for change

Other film programs have treated film purely as entertainment, or as history. We are starting a people's Film Cooperative on September 17 that shows film as film, a highly developed art that just happens to be entertaining. Emphasis will be on the American Cinema, but will include many influential foreign films- "400 Blows," "Antonio Das Mortes," "Belle du Jour," "La Dolce Vita," "Medea," "Macunaima." Many of the films will never have been shown in this area and some titles may be unknown, but all will be worthwhile and entertaining. We don't intend to leave out the joy of cinema in favor of esotericism.

This is a film cooperative. We will hold a meeting during October to elect a Board of Directors from the membership. Until the time we are able to get membership participation, the co-founders, Rob Bibler and John Morrison, will choose films.

In his preface to The American Cinema, Andrew Sarris points out that "Appreciation of old movies is jeopardized by the shocking

"Marjoe": Jesus Meets Jagger

Marjoe

Marjoe's been preaching the gospel since he was four years old.

We once saw his picture in an ancient Life magazine. He was six then, with peroxided curls and little white cowboy boots, performing a marriage ceremony over a couple who must have possessed either a transcendant faith or a highly-developed media-sense.

The name is derived from Mary and Joseph, and Marjoe was the hottest thing on the pentacostal circuit for a decade. He suspects that he earned about three million dollars during those years, though he never saw most of it, his father having split with the take. Abounding with outrageous details, Marjoe's story comes across as another grotesque saga of person as product, life as hype, slow death through merchandizing.

But Marjoe endured. In his mid-teens he refused to continue preaching, instead bummed around, living awhile with an older woman whom he credits for much of his sanity. He went back to preaching on his own at the age of twenty.

Now, some ten years later, he's sold his hustle to the movies, featured in a documentary that attempts to expose the Holy Roller racket – a film that's a portrait of the kind of show biz that allows pious America to get it on and still be washed in the blood of the lamb.

The movie follows Marjoe on his last tour, through revival tents and marble temples, through the singing and the stomping and the backstage money-changing too. Intercut are personal raps and confessions, and footage from Marjoe's early preaching years – a terrifying little automaton reciting hellfire by rote, but entirely professional, Billy Graham speeded up to 78 rpm.

This documentary isn't much of an expose. The largely simple-minded camera loves to zoom in on crisp ten and twenty-dollar bills, as though each appearance of filthy lucre were a sordid and shocking revelation. There are also "serious shots (Marjoe contemplative) and more zooms (a lighted joint at a New York party, to symbolize big-city sophistication; Coca-Cola at a pastor's patio lunch, to stand for Middle-American dreck.)

But Marjoe endures this too. For whatever his motives, sincere self-purgation or a sharp sense of where the real action is (or more probably, some freaked-out combination), he comes through as an extraordinarily talented, magnetic, sexy, and even likeable showman. With his Pierre Cardin suits and Mick Jagger strut – he's studied Jagger, and puts the act to better use than we've ever seen on the rock and roll stage – Marjoe performs miracles of audience involvement. Middle-aged men and women dance and sing, babble in tongues, and fall into quivering orgasmic fits as they "meet Jesus tonight."

There's still the hustle, though. Directors and cameramen try to make us feel sophisticated as we watch the marks get taken – the drip-dry, wash'n'wear, unhip, unelegant, bra-and-girdle, teased-haired, thick-glassed crowd who pay, and pay big, for Brother Marjoe's blessing. The film-makers project an unpleasant sense of superiority over Marjoe's followers that stems, unfortunately, less from their being manipulated than from their being unbeautiful and uncool. This comes through in cameras that are more interested in grotesquerie than ecstasy, that have little sympathy for spontaneous emotional experience when it means flabby upper arms and sagging bosoms in compulsive rhythms.

It's ironic too that filmmakers from a generation that places such a premium on self-expression, on actively getting it on, should so need to distinguish between us and them. Because, in fact, it looks like they're getting their money's worth at least as fully as most rock audiences. Marjoe blesses, clasps, grabs, touches his flock; if it's consumerism, it's a less alienated brand of consumerism than we saw among the unmoving, glazed-eyed crowd on the hill at Woodstock. And most important, Marjoe's people don't pay in front. We plunk down our $4.50 or $5.50 to hear some watered-down stompin' from Leon Russell, and it's just tough if we don't get it on. Marjoe's congregants don't pay until after the Spirit hits them. At least they get to try before they buy.

Luckily the unsympathetic focus doesn't destroy the film, perhaps because we're made to feel that Marjoe has experienced some level of rapport and affection for his congregations. We may be suckers for his line, just like his little old ladies, but we believed it when he said he enjoyed getting people to loosen up and have a good time– that maybe he'd still be in the business if he could have cut out the hellfire and damnation parts. And they do loosen up: the film is most exciting when we see people in ecstasy, shuddering and crying, or smiling and hugging. The spirit of Marjoe's people comes through despite all odds.

Pilgrim's Progression Through Time and Space

By BOB NESTI

Salughterhouse Five

Written for the screen by Steven Geller, based upon the novel by Kurt Vonnegut Jr., directed by George Roy Hill, With Michael Sacks, Ron Leibman, Eugene Roche, Sharon Gans, Valerie Perrine.

"Slaughterhouse Five" is a slick primer in montage theory; its continually shifting time structure is sharply and admirably edited by Dede Allen as to jump across galaxies and decades with the flickering of an electric lightbulb. Yet even this precise sheen cannot fully shield the dishonesty of Kurt Vonnegut Jr.'s polmenic against contemporary American life or his specious theories about time and space. Vonnegut writes for the generation once removed from Salinger's glossy New Yorker prose, his seems right at home in Playboy. The elitist cliches about the American hinderlands have found an adoring audience. At the screening I saw the author's youthful legion gave the film an ovation, probably because of George Roy Hill's reverance for his source rather than his passive, occasionally offensive direction. Its accents are wrong; the horror which was Dresden has the effect of a thundersquall threatening to knock out the power lines. It's more an inconvenience than a historical tragedy. The satiric jabs at Middle America have the insight of a sensitive fourteen year old having an identity crisis, and the guilt of Billy Pilgrim, the film's time tripping hero, would be in better stated in an adolescent blemish commercial. He's Holden Caulfield without much charm or wit or intelligence and "Slaughterhouse Five" is his tube of spiritual Clearasil.

His odyssey is complicated. It weaves Billy's wartime experiences as a POW in Dresden with his Babbitt-like life in a Midwestern city with his fantastic future in an interstellar penthouse with a Hollywood starlet named Montana Warbucks. For all its juggling of time and space. "Slaughterhouse Five" is not very complex. The characters of Vonnegut's world are conceived toward such convenient ends they are little more than his mouthpieces. He uses them as artillary against the materialism of Middle America, then splatters them to universal insignificance with his theories of time and space. In the end Billy learns life is but a series of random events, good and bad, and one should learn to concentrate upon the good. It's updated Norman Vincent Peale and the power of positive thinking. In this cockeyed moral structure a horrible event like Dresden is purged from the mind and heart without an iota of understanding its complexity. It's simply bad and not worth dwelling upon. The new world of Billy Pilgrim is somewhere over an interstellar rainbow where fireworks glow in the heavens and all is well in the best of all possible universes.

But none of the philosophical ramblings explain Dresden. It is at the center of the film, the horrible event where Billy's wartime experiences culminate and haunt him some twenty years later. Its effect upon Billy is meant to be incalculable, but this is hardly discernable; Billy Pilgrim would be a perfect Vonnegut caricature if he wasn't caught up in the author's ego. He's as shallow as every other cardboard character; during the war his passivity had a gnawing stupidity and married with family some twenty years later he's an obedient dolt. What's behind those blank-eyed stares remains an enigma and what's annoying is while his fanciful fate is sympathetically portrayed, everyone else is treated with unnecessary malice. His wife is an obnoxious parody of a selfish housewife forever stuffing herself with pastry. His children fall into a similar mold, as if scriptwriter Stephen Geller enjoys giving life to the cliches of American life during the Sixties. Even at moments when simple emotions of joy or sorrow or empathy would make the characters more human, the script undercuts them with how materialistic and invalid their lives are. Billy is seriously wounded in a plane crash and his hysterical wife rushes to the hospital in her Cadillac. She loses control on the freeway and dies of carbon monoxide poisoning when the car crashes. The death is a sick joke about poisoning Cadillacs with Billy's wife as its brunt. Even when Billy's daughter is told of his mother's death, Vonnegut-Geller cannot hold back on a silly jab: the girl stares blankly and says it couldn't have happened because her mother drove a Cadillac. The insincerity of the characters cannot but reflect upon "Slaughterhouse Five's" major premise. Life is but a random sampling of happy events when lives are but small samplings of human possibilities.

My Blue Heaven, Billy Pilgrim and Montana Warbucks reside in a penthouse somewhere between Orion and Taurus in Slaughterhouse Five.

The sheen of the editing and the beauty of the production design only leave one wanting a more coarse, less coherent film with much more feeling. This is the story of a horrible event, but the horrible event never occurs with near enough intensity. It is like making a film about Hiroshima that only shows a tonnage of dust and some rubble, but none of the human destruction. Dresden was an equally senseless act where even more lives, some 135,000 were lost in one hour of intensive bombing. The fire created heat maelstroms which pulled people back into the burning buildings. This sort of horror would seem difficult to portray without shock, but "Slaughterhouse Five" never even attempts to. Interspersed between cuts of aerial bombardments of the city is a flickering lightbulb. The characters talk, the film continually builds towards the bombing, but when it happens it's strangely vacant. Instead of a heat maelstrom there is an emotional vacuum. Billy's dog pissing on his wife's leg is shown to be more abhorrent.

George Roy Hill has a good sense of derivitive technique. His handling of the time transitions and his use of symbols have classic percursers. The breakfast sequence in "Citizen Kane" which through cutting presents us with a disintigration of a marriage is recalled in similar sequence with Billy and his dog playing in the yard as the season changes and his wife assaults him with baked goods. Here it only suggests his wife has a weight problem. Occasionally the flashes through time are clever, occuring as the mind might relate an object with a past event. Dede Allen cut the film with a precision which moves in a continually interesting mosaic but, at the same time, is always maddening. Nearly every sequence is marred by the insincerity of the vision. The acting pivots on how well the individual actor is able to detach himself from the single-mindedness of the characterization. Ron Leibman as Billy's obnoxious Army enemy, is superb in this respect. It isn't until the tail end that one realizes how one dimensional his character is. The remaining performances are pleasing to each's saturation levels. Michael Sachs plays Billy with blank-faced charm, Valeire Perrinez plays Montana as if she had been torn from the centerfold of Playboy, and Sharon Gans is a woeful impersonation of Billy's chubby wife.

In the New York Times last June a reviewer made the point that in this time when films are too violent, "Slaughterhouse Five isn't violent enough. Violence here isn't meant as gore, but as a reflection of human feeling. Planes crash, people burn, destruction, chaos, and death are shown with such lack of concern it could have been a cartoon. Vonnegut has said he is "tickled" with the film and this response is apt. You aren't particularly upset, or moved, or enlightened, or angered; the best you can be is tickled. The appeal is to titillate, visually and intellectually. Billy is a quick symbol of a man searching for his identity, his wife is quick image of bourgeoise mediocrity, Dresden is one of the inhumanity of war, and is one of quick, space-age salvation. These ready-made symbols are quick to latch on to and the central argument is easy to take.
